"We'll Lick the Kaiser"

"THE four-minute men of New York are threatening to make Carusos of every one," said a well-known music man last week. "They are distributing copies of the new song, "We'll Lick the Kaiser If It Takse Us Twenty Years," among the motion picture people. As the proceeds of the sale of this song are used to defray the four-minute men's expenses in preaching Americanism, we heartily endorse it and suggest that every one get a copy and try it out. It is worthy of support."

Fifty-three East Forty-third street is the home of the New York Four-Minute Men.

"We'll Lick the Kaiser If It Takes Twenty Years" is being used as the exit march at the Broadway theatre during the run of "To Hell with the Kaiser."

"NEWMAN" BRASS FRAMES AND RAILS

DO YOU KNOW?

that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMAN'S"?

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN." Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

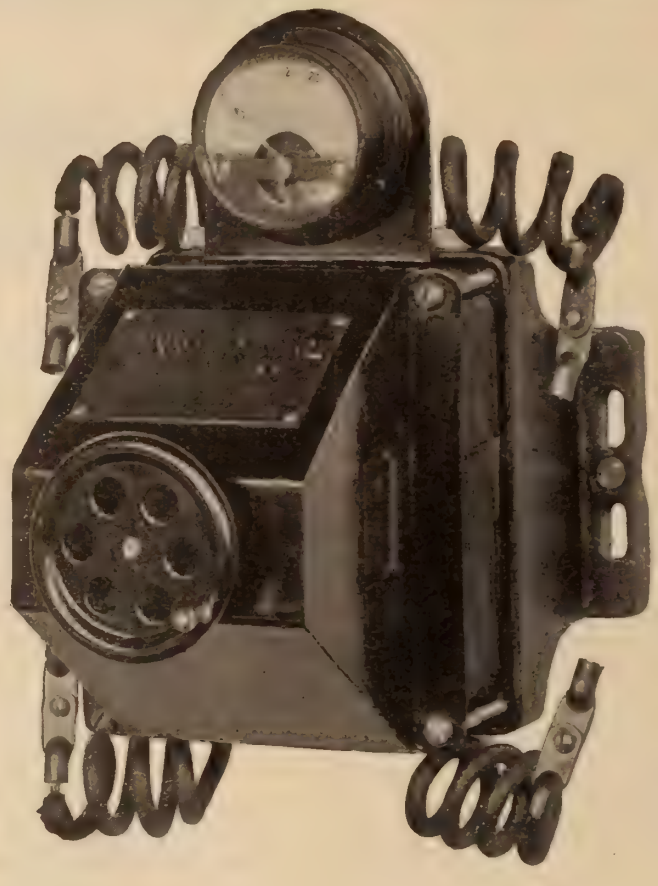
Compensarc



Use the Compensarc for MAZDA lamp control

The proper current control for Mazda Projection lamps is as vital a matter as that of mirror or condensing lens. Accurate and positive current regulation is necessary if the maximum life of gas filled lamps and their greatest brilliance is to be secured. This is the part and a very important one that the Compensarc plays.

The Compensarc is an auto transformer with a hand controlled reactance core. Although the device is simple in design, its fine adjustment enables the current to be controlled within one tenth ampere. In addition, the Compensarc acts as a protective device when starting by limiting the rush of current through the cold lamp filament.

Heretofore the humming noise from similar current control devices has been an objectionable feature. In the Compensarc this objection has been practically eliminated except during short intervals when the core is being adjusted.

Mabel Normand Is a Nymph of the Woods In Goldwyn's "Back to the Woods"

Arrow Adds Another Re-Issue to List

Through arrangements made with the Rialto Film Corporation, a reissued edition of the five-reel drama titled "The House of Mirrors," now titled "My Husband's Friend," is being offered to state right buyers by the Arrow Film Corporation. Frank Mills is featured.

The addition of this production to the list of attractions being exploited by the Arrow Film Corporation makes a total of nine five or more reel photoplays offered to state right buyers.

"My Husband's Friend" under the title of "The House of Mirrors" was released by the Mutual Film Corporation as a special, but, under a contract with the owners, was returned to them, re-edited, and it is now distributed through the state right market. Of the fourteen territorial state right divisions in the United States, nine have already been disposed of.

Chicago Firm Get "Topics of the Day"

A. E. Siegle, producer of "Topics of the Day," short subjects illustrating snappy sayings taken from the Literary Digest, announces that Jones, Linick and Schaefer, Chicago, will handle this product in the territory of Illinois and Wisconsin. Sol Lesser, who is handling these subjects in California, reports that they have been booked in California's leading theatres.

As a result of a single page advertisement in the trade papers, Mr. Siegel says that he received more than thirty-two inquiries from exchange men throughout the country.

Goldwyn to Enlarge Facilities

Facilities for the Distribution of Independently Made Productions to Be Enlarged During Company's Second Year

DURING the second year of its activities in the production and distribution of feature pictures, Goldwyn Pictures will enlarge its facilities for handling the distribution of independently produced features of merit, it is announced from the Goldwyn offices. Shortly after this company's initial entrance in the industries activities, it was announced that its distributing facilities were at the disposal of all independent producers. This action was taken so that the independent producer who felt that there was no incentive to produce because there was no medium through which his product could reach the exhibitor, would be given that incentive that was lacking because of these conditions which Goldwyn Pictures saw existed.

As a result of the announcement, the first independent production to be taken over was Ira M. Lowry's "For the Freedom of the World." Goldwyn released this feature last October and it was placed in more than four thousand theatres in the United States. The late Henry I. Brock's screen version of Hall Caine's "The Manxman" was the next feature to be taken over. Then came Rex Beach's "The Heart of the Sunset," which was released just recently.

"Smiling Bill" Parson's Capitol Comedies were the next subjects to be added to the list of independently produced pictures and these are now being distributed through the Goldwyn exchanges at the rate of one one-reeler every two weeks. These comedies are showing in all the leading theatres of the country, and according to Goldwyn reports are doing a big business.

Three Selexart productions were taken over for distribution by the company a few months ago, and these, say the reports, are gaining headway in sales. In view of the success had with these independent productions, Goldwyn announces that the man-power of the distributing organization has been increased so as the company will be prepared to handle other subjects. The twentieth exchange was opened in New Orleans in anticipation of the increased business which the new plans for enlargement will bring.

Perret Lauds Current Patriotic Film

IN discussing the patriotic appeal of his first independent production, "Lafayette, We Come," Leonce Perret said:

"The producers of patriotic and propoganda films are deserving of much praise for their recent excellent contributions towards inbueing the American public with the proper spirit of the times.

"Although most of these productions drive home some point of value, their propoganda, in nearly each case, is direct and —I might say, smashingly theatrical. Such treatment of propoganda, if repeatedly employed, many tend to dull the mind of the picture-public sooner than would the advancement of propoganda that is not direct. True, the smashingly theatrical films are perhaps financial winners; but in these times this angle must not overshadow the greater good that can be accomplished by treating the promotion of patriotism, unselfishness and sacrifice with subtle dexterity—with indirect suggestion.

"This theory has been prevalent during my production of "Lafayette, We Come!" and judging from the indications there is every likelihood of this production proving my belief."

Executive offices of the Perret Productions have been established in the Brokaw Building. No statement concerning distributing plans has been made.

Adolphe Osso, business manager for the Perret Productions, says he is considering the purchase of three scripts for immediate production. He says that there is a possibility of Mr. Perret and his producing staff moving to the Coast for future productions.

Doris Kenyon's Second Picture Finished

Work on the screening of "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance, the second production of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., with Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company featured was finished Saturday. Mr. Vance is co-operating with John B. O'Brien, the director, in cutting and titling the picture, which will be released through the Wm. L. Sherry Service, following the release of Miss Kenyon's first pictures, "The Street of Seven Stars."

Mr. Vance says "The Inn of the Blue Moon" is the best picturization ever made of any of his famous stories. "Miss Kenyon's work in the dual role of twin sisters is remarkable," declared Mr. Vance. "The Inn of the Blue Moon" was written especially for Miss Kenyon by Mr. Vance.

"Calamity Howlers, All Wrong"—Steiner

BILL STEINER, head of Jester Comedy Company, takes a punch at the pessimists who are "calamity howlers" and those ever ready to complain. "There is nothing the matter with the film market," says Bill. "The main trouble seems to be the manufacturers," he hastens to add.

"Many of them have allowed themselves to live in the rut of what was offered to the public several years ago, evidently thinking that the public would be satisfied with the "made-over night" features. Evidently the gentlemen who are continually howling calamity have never checked the film situation from a country-wide standpoint. They evidently do not know that the old "store-show" is a thing of the past, and that the film theatre of today has reached such a stage that they now surpass in beauty, architecture and environments the legitimate playhouse. It is only natural with the creation of these beautiful edifices for films, that films would be demanded to live up to the environments of the theatres.

"You do not hear any calamity howlers among the manufacturers, who know what is needed in the way of feature films. Instead of standing still, these gentlemen are spending every ounce of energy that is possible and backing that energy with money, in order not to keep up their present standard, but to improve with each of their releases. They realize that the public is becoming more and more educated to high class pictures, and they are doing all within their power to meet that demand.

"It is surprising how men can expect to build up a successful business when they do not keep abreast of the times. Even in the small towns, where there is only one theatre, the demand is for good pictures. The old-time hackneyed story has very little run, and it is up to the gentlemen who think that they can get by with this class of mediocre celluloid to go out and do a little investigating on their own account, and they will soon reach the conclusion that the film business is not shot to pieces, but that the market is as good if not better than it ever was, but they must turn out high quality goods, in order to get the proper play that the quality manufacturers are getting today."

James K. Hackett in "Ashes of Love"

Romayne Company Completes "Me Und Gott"

The Romayne Super-Film Company has completed its special production, "Me Und Gott," in six reels. The photoplay depicts the awakening of America and shows the intense struggle that is going on in some of our own families between the older generation true to the Kaiser and their sons and daughters born here and true to the priciples of this country. The story and direction of "Me Und Gott" is by Windham Gittens, formerly with Universal and Triangle. The cast includes Paul Wigel, Robt. N. Dunbar, Gertrude DeVere, James T. Welch, Jack McCready, Naide Carle, Frank Brownlee, Fred Boull, Nigel de Bruillier, Josephine Crowell, Adeline M. Alvard, Edwin Fourcher, Marie Fourcher and Ray Eberlee. "Me Und Gott" will be sold to state rights buyers.

The Romayne Super-Film Company will produce other six and seven reel features to be sold to buyers and to the foreign trade. "It's a Bearcat" is the copyright brand under which the productions of the Romayne Super-Film Company will be known to the trade and to the public. The company is now using David Horsley's studio for its production, but will soon erect in Los Angeles its own studios adaptable to its needs.

The officers of the company are H. Y. Romayne, president; Edward D. Ulrich, vice-president and studio manager, and Thos. A. Baker, secretary and treasurer.

Noted Explorer Here with Pictures

Frederick Burlington, noted American explorer who has explored the crater of Mount Vesuvius, ascended Matterhorn, Mont Blanc and the highest mountain in Europe, Jungfrau, has returned to America after fourteen years' absence with more than thirty thousand feet of negative showing the scenic views obtained by him on his explorations. Mr. Burlingham said that these pictures are not to be considered as strictly educational in value as entertainment, but are filled with "the spirit of adventure, with plenty of humor, pep and punch." Mr. Burlingham has, also, pictures taken showing the arrival of French and British war prisoners in Good Samaritan, Switzerland.

"Seven Deadly Sins" in Foreign Markets

A. Blaikie Dick, general manager for McClure Pictures, Inc., announced this week considerable activity in the sale of foreign rights for the McClure series of "Seven Deadly Sins." Contracts were closed this week whereby the Mexican rights of "Seven Deadly Sins" were disposed of by a deal made with Piedmont Pictures Corporation of New York City. In addition to this sale, Mr. Dick also announced that foreign rights have also been disposed of in the following territories: Brazil, Argentine, Paraguay, Bolivia, Peru and Uruguay. More than half of the foreign territory has been closed for "Seven Deadly Sins" and reports from various sections outside of the United States indicate that these pictures are meeting with success.

An active sales campaign is now being conducted through the various branch offices of the Film Exchange Company in behalf of this McClure series, in the United States.

Call for Men of High Calibre Answered

"In spite of our raising the barrier so high, and making it perfectly plain that we wanted only the highest grade of men, the response to our advertisements in last week's trade press has been enormous," said one of the officials of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, and refers to the advertisement calling for big caliberd men to compose a sales force to cover the entire territory.

Anita King First Plaza Star

Plaza Pictures Distributed Through W. W. Hodkinson Corp., Releases First of Three-Star Series

W. W. HODKINSON Corporation announces that Anita King is to be the first star whose productions will be released under the new section of Hodkinson Service known as Plaza Pictures. This new addition to Hodkinson Service will consist of a three-star series. The first of the Anita King series, which will consist of eight pictures, is titled "Petticoats and Politics."

"Petticoats and Politics" is a satirical comedy on the development of woman suffrage in a small Nevada town. Miss King is given the opportunity of handling her six-shooter and racing over Western prairies.

Other productions following Miss King's initial offering are already completed and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation assures the exhibitors that there will be no chance of a delay in the release dates.

Plaza pictures, a new brand of photoplays, will be handled through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

In making the announcement an official of the company responsible for their production stated that after careful consideration the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation was the logical outlet for its product. He said:

"We have known for some time Mr. Hodkinson's personal reputation in the field, and we have been convinced time and time again that the exhibitors in the United States know him and trust him. An examination of the distribution system that he has under his control assures us that we can find not only capable placing of our product, but also the most economical distribution possible.

"We are so impressed with the entire idea that we wished to be one of the producing units connected with this organization.

"Further announcement of the stars appearing under this brand will be given shortly."

Reports Big Sales on Kerrigan Reissues

"AS A FAIR indication of the demand on the part of the exhibitors for short length subjects in which a star of present day popularity appears are the sales recorded by the Arrow Film Corporation on the reissue of the 10 two-reel and 30 single-reel reissues of J. Warren Kerrigan productions," said Dr. Schallenberger, in speaking of the demand for these reissues. "An announcement was circulated among nine states right buyers in as many different territories. Within two days after the receipt of the advice, four of the buyers came to the office of the Arrow Film Corporation and signed for these reissues.

"These buyers were: Mr. Amsterdam, of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Philadelphia; Mr. Lande, of the Quality Film Corporation of Pittsburgh; Mr. Charnas, of the Standard Film Service of Cleveland and Detroit, and Mr. Engler, of the E. & H. Film Distributing Company of Atlanta, Ga. The territory covered by these four exchanges and which is disposed of on the Kerrigan reissues is Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Western Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, Kentucky, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, North and South Carolina. In addition to this, Bernard Depkin, Jr., purchased the production for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia and V. H. Hodupp, Inc., for Indianapolis.

Affiliated Members Consider Advanced Feature

The first picture to be considered by the Ohio Exhibitors Film Exchange, unit of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, will be "The Eleventh Commandant," featuring Lucille Lee Stewart. It is offered on the market in this territory by the Advanced Motion Picture Corporation, which company produced it under the direction of Ralph Ince.

Gaumont Serial on the Market

Titles to the Ten Episodes of "The Hand of Vengeance," Announced —News Flashes from Gaumont Weeklies Given

THE TITLES to the ten episodes of Gaumont's twenty-reel serial, "The Hand of Vengeance" are: 1.—"The Sign of the Scar"; 2.—"Scheming for Millions"; 3.—"The Ambassador's Diamond"; 4.—"The Grey Lady"; 5.—"The League of Silence"; 6.—"The Mysterious Manor"; 7.—"The Secret of the Night"; 8.—"The Kidnapped Statesman"; 9.—"The Girl in the Hotel," and 10.—"A Girl's Aid."

"The Hand of Vengeance" is ready for release, it is announced. During the week the first five episodes were shown to a number of independent buyers who expressed satisfaction with the initial chapters.

This photo-serial, produced by Gaumont Company, will be released only through independent exchanges. It contains ten episodes of two reels each. As an official said: "It is full of pep and life and hustle from the first scene to the last. The characters are all red-blooded, every situation is thrilling, the dangers are too numerous to mention and the escapes therefrom original in the extreme. And with all this, there is not a sex-situation in the entire study. The serial is clean enough for the entire family; and, while admittedly a thriller, it will hold the interest of every spectator, from the youngest child to the oldest grandfather—or grandmother."

The second selective draft drawing, in which 246 was the lucky number first chosen by Secretary of War Baker, is pictured in No. 14 of the current number of Gaumont Graphic. In the same issue is shown the great work the Railroad Administration is doing. Scenes taken at different places in the United States, England, and Italy make up the other news subjects shown in this issue, including the burning of German text books; a big wreck in Utah, which resulted in one death and fifty injuries; the production of potassium salts, so necessary to war munitions, in the great Salton Sea, in the Colorado Desert. From Italy come pictures showing the delivery of our U. S. Liberty Bonds to the Italian soldiers who subscribed for them, and the decoration of American Red Cross officers for exceptional valor on the Piave front by the Duke of Aosta.

No. 15 of the Gaumont News, the other semi-weekly issue of the Gaumont News Service, is interesting for its instructive photograph of the "Flamen Werfers," the liquid fire projectors which were captured in "No Man's Land" by our boys during an unsucessful German raid on their trenches; "The Nerves of the Army," picturing the work of the Signal Corps in laying telephone wires, and the work of the U. S. Marines in maneuvers, in airplanes, and in trench warfare.

The opening of the International Trade Exposition in New York City is also shown in this number of the Gaumont News, together with the "Flying Gymkhana," held at Westbury, N. Y., for the benefit of the British and Canadian Fund.

Sid Grauman, owner and manager of Grauman's million dollar theatre, Los Angeles, has booked the Gaumont News and Graphic, exclusively for his theatre, it is announced.

WILLIS and Inglis, publicity representatives, with offices in Los Angeles, report that the fellow who says that business along film row is slow is all wrong. "Things on the Pacific Coast," writes Dick Willis, "are humming and we are doing a bigger and better business than ever since we established office in Los Angeles."

"We are unable to meet the demand for leading men, juveniles and directors," said Mr. Willis. "We have brought on several actors from the East and every one has been placed immediately with producing companies on the Coast."

The firm of Willis and Inglis is one of the most prominent and reliable agencies handling the publicity for actresses and actors in the country. The firm has operated on the Coast for a number of years and has builded a business that calls for the undivided attention of both members of the firm. Recently, Fred Fralick, a well-known publicity man, has been added to the staff. Mr. Fralick will handle the Engagement Department, while Mr. Willis and Mr. Inglis devote their attention to Book, Play and Publicity Departments. Willis and Inglis also maintain fully equipped studio. The Sherman Productions is using the studio at present.

During the three years that Willis and Inglis have operated on the Coast, the firm has gradually added improvements until now they have this branch of the business working along an efficient and effective basis.

Director Frazee Noted for Trick Comedy Stunts

Edwin A. Frazee, for a long time director of the Keystone Comedy staff and one of the best known directors for trick-comedy stunts, is credited with the productions of the following Keystone comedies: "The Favorite Fool," "Love Will Conquer," "Village Vampire," "Bath Tub Perils," "The Oily Scoundrel," and "Crooked to the End."

Eddie Foy and the Seven Little Foys are featured in "The Favorite Fool." Fred Mace is in the other five comedies. All six comedies attained greatest popularity and earned large profits. It is estimated that they have earned at least half a million dollars. "Crooked to the End" was declared by New York critics to be an ingenious innovation among "movie" comedies, and was cited a "model production." It was the first film to specialize athletic features as inaugurated by Mr. Frazee. "Love Will Conquer" was photographed and delivered to the cutting room within thirty-six hours. For the Wm. Fox, Mr. Frazee produced "Social Pirates." The Saturday Evening Post of January 20, 1917, printed page illustrations from this production, showing twenty-seven guests at a banquet table, all magnificently attired, and who were washed out of the elegant banquet hall of a hotel by sixty tons (ten thousand gallons) of water, which came tearing down stairs and flooded the guests out into an open sewer and through the sewer to its outlet. This trick of production has never been approached by other "movie" directors. "Footlight Fame" had in it a skeleton which left its mortal body and passed through solid substances and rampaged in a series of complications never before or since accomplished in the "movies."

Frazee's trick methods are the resulting discoveries made by Mr. Frazee during ten years of experience and experiment upon the theatrical stage. Susequently he invented devices by which his trick methods could be successfully applied to the practical and profitable production of films.

Four Thousand Bookings on Lowry Production

Goldwyn Pictures reports that Ira M. Lowry's independent production, "For the Freedom of the World," which is being distributed through the Goldwyn exchanges, has been enthusiastically received by both exhibitors and the public and proclaim it "the year's most remarkable and surprising film production."

Scarcely six months having elapsed since its release, this production has been booked in more than four thousand theatres throughout the country, Goldwyn reports. And the report says exhibitors are asking for repeat bookings on it.

Many of the scenes in this feature were taken at a training camp in Canada. The hero is a young American who had elected to join the Canadians before his own country entered the war. Goldwyn reports that there isn't a single record in the Goldwyn offices showing where an exhibitor failed of success with his bookings on "For the Freedom of the World."

Scope of Affiliated Plan Broadened

Executives of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation have made arrangements whereby any exhibitor wishing to join the organization may do so. This move serves as an extension of the scope of the organization's plans, as originally planned. Originally it was intended to limit the benefits accruing from co-operative booking to the number of exhibitors necessary to complete a quota of 2,500 days on each picture for the country. This quota was to be divided among twenty-five exhibitors' booking corporations, each of which were to guarantee, by a trust fund, an average of one hundred days per picture. Exhibitors guaranteeing these trust funds were to have participated exclusively in the low rentals effected and the excess profits derived. Exhibitors, not members of the booking associations allied with the Affiliated, were to pay the regular rentals.

Directors of the Affiliated, at their recent meeting, approved a form of participating certificates which will enable exhibitors who have not joined their territorial booking corporation to gain the same low rentals enjoyed by the original subscribers to the units' trust fund. Whether exhibitors holding these participating certificates will be extended a share in the excess profits of the booking corporation, is a matter which has been left to each unit to decide as it sees fit.

Five episodes of Francis Ford's serial production, the title to which has not been announced, are completed, it is announced from Los Angeles, where Mr. Ford is now at work on the sixth episode.

W. H. Company Has "Mickey"

Will Distribute Mabel Normand Picture on Independent Market—Promises Immediate Release—Campaign Books Prepared

FOLLOWING the announcement that arrangements had been made between the Western Import Company and W. H. Productions, for the latter company to distribute "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand on the independent market, officials of this company announce that an extensive advertising campaign has been launched and that every possible method which will further the proper exploitation of this feature will be employed.

In making the announcement, H. J. Shepard, of the W. H. Productions, said:

"Officials of the Western Import Co. and W. H. Productions Co. feel that it is now an opportune time to release this production. The public is now ready for a feature that combines pathos and adventure with romance and humor, in such a way that the memory of this sweet, mischievous little 'Mickey' will be refreshing amid the turmoil and stress of these war days.

"After making a thorough investigation, it has been found that the state rights market is in a healthy condition to handle a big production such as 'Mickey.' Through the advertising and publicity service given this production of 'Mickey,' every possible outside help is being employed, with exceptional lobby display, linking of the advertising campaign on the production with the great national campaign on the song 'Mickey,' which is based on the photoplay and the campaign book. This 24-page campaign book, in colors, covers every angle of 'Mickey,' portions of which are devoted to the humor, the pathos, adventure and love, other portions to the advertising matter, posters, heralds and slides and still other portions to special exploitation for exhibitors.

"One page of this book is devoted to quotations of the various opinions expressed by some of the most prominent film men in the industry who have reviewed 'Mickey'—statements from men like A. Woods, who says, '"Mickey" is what I call a real big picture,' and Alfred E. Aarons, general manager of Klaw & Erlanger's theatres, who says, '"Mickey" is the greatest commercial proposition I have ever seen in the amusement field.'"

Mr. Shepard announces that the company will go a step further in the preparation of advertising matter. When required, special campaigns will be inaugurated for particular localities throughout the country, so as to help every exhibitor to secure maximum results.

JAMES M. SHELDON, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, announces that Screen Telegram, Mutual's twice-a-week news reed, will be published hereafter from New York under the managing editorship of Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity. Mr. Ramsaye has opened editorial offices adjoining the Mutual exchange at 1,600 Broadway, and has surrounded himself with an able staff. The first release from New York was Screen Telegram No. 36.

Vitagraph Completes Five Productions

THE past week was clean-up week for a number of the Vitagraph stars, and the coming week should see them started in new features.

Alice Joyce, working under the direction of Tom Terriss, completed "To the Highest Bidder," a Blue Ribbon Feature, and this week will begin work on a play by Cyrus Townsend Brady, the final title of which has not yet been chosen. Miss Joyce and her company, which includes Walter McGrail, Percy Standing and others, spent more than two weeks at Babylon, L. I., on location.

Corinne Griffith, having finished "Love Watches," under direction of Henri Houry, is making preparations for starting in "The Clutch of Circumstance." It is expected that Mr. Houry will direct Miss Griffith in her new picture also. Miss Griffith most likely will have with her in her new picture Denton Vane, Alice Terry, Julia Swayne Gordon, Nellie Parker-Spaulding, Ed Burns and Charles Henderson.

"The Nymph of the Foothills" has been chosen as the next subject for Gladys Leslie, who has completed "Wild Primrose," under direction of Frederic Thomson. Miss Leslie is expected to start work at once with the same director.

Earle Williams and Harry Morey are almost finished with two features, and they, likewise will soon be starting anew. Mr. Williams, working at the Hollywood Studio of Vitagraph, with Grace Darmond as his leading woman and Jack Conway as his director, is in the latter stages of "The Men from Brodneys," the George Barr McCutcheon story, and expectse to finish within a few days. Mr. Morey, working under direction of Paul Scardon, with Betty Blythe as his leading woman, has only a little more work to do in "The Green God," and then he, too, will be given a new feature.

Paul Powell Directs Bluebird Films

Paul Powell, former D. W. Griffith director, who made for the Fine Arts trademark such well known plays as "The Matrimaniac," starring Douglas Fairbanks; "The Wild Girl of the Sierras," with Mae Marsh; "Hell-to-Pay Austin," and others, has been engaged by Bluebird to direct productions at the west coast studios.

Powell has also written many scenarios, and before entering the film world was a feature writer on the Chicago Tribune and Los Angeles Express.

Wardrobe Features in Mutual Subject

The most elaborate wardrobe used in any Mutual subject made at the American studio in recent months, is that titled "Beauty To Let," which stars Margarita Fisher, known as "the American beauty." Miss Fisher's wardrobe consisted of almost a score of different gowns, and included is said to have been one made at the cost of eighteen hundred dollars. This film play will no doubt set a new record for expensive wardrobe, the number of gowns being greater than used in any particular picture by one player, Mutual asserts.

The story is that of a young girl who visits a lawyer, and with her last money pays him for advice. The lawyer sees wonderful possibilities in her extraordinary beauty, and hits upon renting the girl out at one hundred dollars an hour, with the provision she is not to speak to anyone except himself. She becomes tremendously popular. A young millionaire is captivated. A wealthy gentleman crook falls madly in love with her, and when the beauty proves to the lawyer, who believed her brainless, that she has brains as well as beauty by saving him from being swindled of his money, he awakens to his love for her and all ends happily.

Robert Fairbanks Joins "Doug's" Outfit

Robert Fairbanks joined his brother's picture company last week in the capacity of efficiency executive. Douglas is anxious that his organization employ the same business methods characteristic of a large establishment, and therefore closed a five year contract with Robert Fairbanks.

Allan Dwan, Joseph Henaberry and Art Rosson are in charge of productions, assisted by James P. Hogan. Hugh McClung's photographic staff includes Glen McWilliams and Charles Warrington. Billy Emerson is head of the carpenter's crew and Paul Burns supplies the "props." It is said that the Fairbanks Company has the largest overhead of any independent producing unit in the motion picture business.

Lloyd Comedies Continue Through Summer

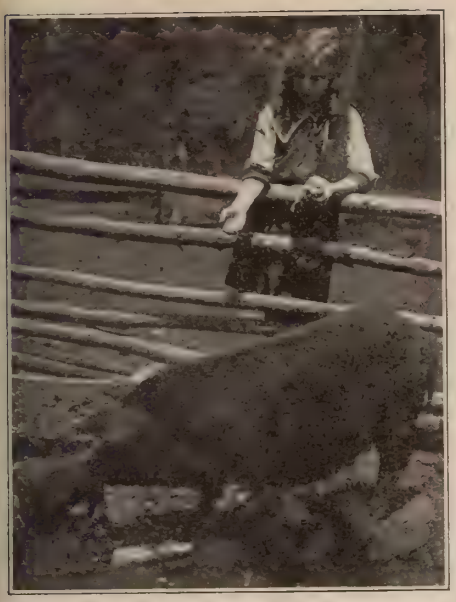
Harold Lloyd comedies will continue without interruption this summer, it is announced by Pathe.

Rolin studios do not expect to take a vacation, but will keep the respective noses of Harold Lloyd, Bebe Daniels and Harry Pollard to the studio grindstone.

Subjects to be released are "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," July 21st; "That's Him," August 4th; "Bride and Gloom," August 18th and "Two Scrambled," September 1st.

Eleanor Field Quits

Eleanor Field, the seventeen-year-old blonde ingenue of the Christie Comedy Company, is to be seen no more in Christie comedies. She tripped East one day last week, informing the Christie Company of this fact by wire from somewhere between Los Angeles and Chicago.



How Madge Evans, World Star, Helps Hoover

Madge Evans Helps Hoover

Little Madge Evans, World Picture star, having completed her latest feature, "Neighbors," has again actively taken up her work of helping Mr. Hoover. Madge has harkened to the cry of "Raise a Pig." Generous by nature she is going to increase the visible supply of pork by raising three. At her summer home, near New York City, she has prevailed upon her neighbors to send their garbage pails to her pig sty. Here again she is performing a service utilizing what would otherwise be a waste product and at the same time cutting down the work of the city refuse collectors.

Paramount Offers Three Patriotic Films

The attention of exhibitors has been directed to the three Paramount patriotic features now available for booking, namely, "The Firefly of France," "The Kaiser's Shadow," and "The Claws of the Hun," with Wallace Reid, Dorothy Dalton and Charles Ray as the respective stars. All three deal with various phases of the German spy propaganda and for thrills and suspense as well as for cleverness of plot are said to take their place among the most interest-compelling offerings of the year. Moreover, the popularity of the stars featured, it is pointed out, is certain to enhance the box office value of the attraction.

General Reports Success with "Ne'er Do Well"

That the motion picture version of Rex Beach's story, "The Ne'er Do Well," has lost little of its hold with the public and the exhibitors is indicated by the large number of bookings received for the new edition of the photoplay feature, says General Film Company this week. A large number of General exchanges are reporting a brisk business on the re-issue of the Selig picture, long runs predominating in the bookings received to date.

World Names August Releases

Organization Predicts These Will Be Best Yet Made by That Company —Castleton and Blackwell Among Stars

THE announcement of World Picture releases for the month of August present to exhibitors what are considerd the best pictures ever turned out by this organization. The August productions are said to have a class, speed and entertainment value which will boost box office receipts for exhibitors everywhere.

First on the schedule of August issues comes "Heredity" in which Barbara Castleton is starred and John Bowers featured. The story is by Maravene Thompson, well and favorably known as a writer of fiction and plays. As its title indicates the theme is based on the old adage, "Blood will tell." Nedda Trevor, a direct descendant of the Trevor, who aided Charles the First of England, meets Paul Winslow when a child and a romance ensues. Many years later her stepfather murders her mother and escapes. Nedda is accused of the murder. Paul comes back to Europe and eventually gains her freedom while the real murderer is arrested. "Heredity" was directed by William P. S. Earle.

August 12 is the date for the release of "The Beloved Blackmailer," in which Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley are starred. Harry O. Hoyt is the author and Dell Henderson is the director. In this production Bobby Briggs, an overfed, overpetted youth, believes that he is sick. His father endeavors to ruin the father of the girl he loves. The girl tells him that she will marry only a man and not a mollycoddle. She has Bobby kidnapped and taken to a health camp, and also works a worthy blackmail on Bobby's father. When Bobby returns, strong and ruddy, his girl is forgiven and all is well.

Coming on August 19 is "Merely Players," starring Kitty Gordon with Irving Cummings supporting her. The story was written by L. Case Russell and directed by Oscar Apfel. It is a story of dramatic strength. Foster Hollis, an attorney, is in love with Nadine Trent. Nadine gives an amateur theatrical performance, and Rodney Gale, a dramatic critic, declares that she cannot act. Gale goes through some experiences that almost make Nadine despise him, although she really loves him. She endeavors to prove that she can act.

The picturization of "Inside the Line" is scheduled for release on August 26. Lewis S. Stone, who was featured in the stage production, is the star. The story of "Inside the Lines" is, briefly, as follows: Spy No. 1,932 is sent to Gibraltar by the German government to blow up the British Grand Fleet. An American girl is arrested in Germany for espionage and the spy, becoming interested in her, secures her release. At Gibraltar the ramifications of the German spy system are revealed. As the fleet is about to be blown up Spy No. 1,932 reveals himself as Cavendish of the British Secret Service and he and the girl are happily united.

Greene Announces Success Series Plans

THE complete schedule of the first six months' releases of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's Success Series of re-issues has been announced by Walter E. Greene, Managing Director in Charge of Distribution, and includes twenty-six features, or one for each week of the period from September 1 to February 23.

Each month offers one special subject and with the exception of Mary Pickford, whose "Caprice" is scheduled for November 3 and who will be seen in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow" on December 29, no star will be featured in the series in two successive months. In addition to the six special productions, four of the re-issues will feature Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark will be seen in three, Pauline Frederick in three, John Barrymore in two, Jack Pickford in two, Dustin Farnum in two, Geraldine Farrar in two and William Farnum and Victor Moore in one each.

As a fitting lead-off feature, "The Eagle's Mate," one of Mary Pickford's most popular plays, has been selected for September 1 release. James Kirkwood directed this production which shows Mary in the role of a gently reared girl of the hills who is thrown in with moonshiners and becomes the storm center of the rival affections of the mountaineers.

Work on the renewing and retitling of these films, gathered from the exchanges of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation throughout the United States and Canada, is progressing at the laboratories, a special department having been created for the purpose under the supervision of Frank Meyer, assisted by Hector Strecycktans. When the labors of this staff of experts are finished it is promised that these re-issues will be even more satisfactory to exhibitors and public as when they were originally placed on the market.

Bara Gets Model Role in New Films

Theda Bara, as an artist's model, will be the central theme of the next drama which the famous William Fox vampire will film, according to an announcement by the Fox Film Corporation.

Miss Bara, who has just completed filming "The Message of the Lilies," is now taking a short rest before plunging into work on her new production. The latest drama bears the temporary title of "Little She-Devil," but this, it is understood, is going to be changed.

The play is described as being considerably different from anything Miss Bara has yet attempted, but will afford plenty of opportunity for the brilliant William Fox star to display those histrionic qualities which have brought her fame.

J. Gordon Edwards will direct the picture. This will make the twenty-eighth production which Mr. Edwards has directed for William Fox.

"The Geezer of Berlin," Jewel's Travesty on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," Has Been Completed

Pathe Lists Kaiser Comedy for July 12

PATHE promises a big comedy knockout on the program scheduled for release July 21, in "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," with Harold Lloyd, Babe Daniels and Harry Pollard. Five other subjects are also listed.

In the comedy, Harold Lloyd is a warrior in the trenches and his rough treatment of the Huns should be sure of a laugh.

"Cupid by Proxy," in which Baby Marie Osborne is starred, heads the June 21 Pathe program. "Cupid by Proxy" is an elemental comedy with a strong romantic flavor. It concerns two families who live side by side.

The final and concluding chapter of Pathe's serial, "The House of Hate," is released on this program. It is called "Following Old Glory." The Hooded Terror is not only further identified, but a just retribution overtakes him and the members of his gang. The episode ends somewhere in France where Pearl, as an ambulance driver, and Antonio Moreno, the dashing hero in khaki are united, never to part again.

Part II of "Britain's Bulwarks" is titled "The Canadians on the Western Front.'"

The Allies Official War Review will contain up-to-the-minute battle pictures from the American, British, French and Italian fronts.

"East Indians of Trinidad" is the title of the Post Travel Series, one-reeler, on this program, and in the Hearst-Pathe News, Nos. 60 and 61, late war films and topical news subjects will be included as usual.

"Demand Big For First Releases"—Sherry

WITH the release of his second picture, "The Street of Seven Stars," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, featuring Doris Kenyon as the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., William L. Sherry announces that the public demand for the productions he is handling has given him great confidence in the future of his enterprise.

The first release of the William L. Sherry Service is "A Romance of the Underworld," by Paul Armstrong, starring Catherine Calvert.

Mr. Sherry's next release will be a Keeney production, "Out of the Night," by E. Lloyd Sheldon, author of "The Forbidden Path," in which Theda Bara was starred. It will feature Catherine Calvert, with Herbert Rawlinson. The release date will probably be set for late in July or early in August. The next of the Doris Kenyon productions to be released will be "The Inn of the Blue Moon," by Louis Joseph Vance.

The William L. Sherry Service now has exchanges in active operation in fifteen cities.

W. H. Productions to Distribute "Mickey"

Western Import Company has arranged with the W. H. Productions, which arrangement makes the latter company sole distributors of "Mickey," featuring Mabel Normand. The announcement is made by W. H. Productions.

Steiner Offers Prizes

William Steiner, Jester Comedy Company, has installed a suggestion department for ideas and new stunts. He offers three prizes each week for the best three suggestions. The first to capture the prizes was Miss Florence Johnson, who won the first week's prizes.

Golden Starts New Anderson Picture

Under the direction of G. M. Anderson and J. J. Robbins, the Golden Producing Company has started the production of the second of the new G. M. Anderson Features entitled, "The Son-of-a-Gun."

Although "The Son-of-a-Gun" is the second of the features to be produced at the company's Glendale studios, their present intention is to place it first on the release schedule and follow it up with one which they have already completed under the title of "The Yellow Streak."

The scenes in both releases are laid in the Southwest and, as has always been true of productions in which Mr. Anderson has appeared, they both abound in the big, virile action, the keen human interest and the rough-and-ready atmosphere typical of the West as it was only a few years ago when men carried their own law with them in a low-slung six-gun scabbard.

Although no definite release date has been decided upon as yet, it is generally understood that the first of the new productions will be offered to the public sometime early in September, with an endless string of others to follow after it at regular intervals.

Short Subjects on Educational Releases

In the short pictures released by Educational Films Corporation the current week are the latest International cartoon comedy, "War Gardens," and two scenics entitled "Wonderful Niagara" and "The Cruise of the Quickern'ell."

"War Gardens" satirizes in mirthful fashion the efforts of novices to raise their own food supply, the principal figures being the Captain and Mamma, the little Inspector, a William goat and the Katzenjammer Kids.

"The Cruise of the Quickern'ell" is a Robert C. Bruce fantasy about a traveler who thought he could see more of the wilds if he would abandon his automobile and foot the mountain trails. The disappointments, as well as the realizations of the long hunt for the picturesque are shown. "Wonderful Niagara," the other half of the reel, is a scenic of America's greatest falls.

"The Danger Mark"
(Artcraft—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE heroine of Robert W. Chambers' "The Danger Mark" is a young lady with a craving for drink, which first asserts itself through her passionate desire for a lump of sugar saturated with perfume. It is this heroine which Elsie Ferguson is called upon to play in her latest Artcraft picture. She has two big scenes, which she enacts with that rare skill which has already stamped her as one of the greatest actresses that ever set face before a camera. The one is a drunken scene, which she does in a way that awakens within the onlooker sympathy and not repulsion; the other shows her resisting with all the force of will at her command the desire to rush to the wine closet and drink her fill.

But, as a whole and despite Miss Ferguson's performance, "The Danger Mark" is the least of her pictures to date. Just about as one realizes the end has come he wonders if it ever really began—that is the impression carried away. The cause of this appears to lie in the fact that the production tends to emphasize the individual—Miss Ferguson, or her character, Geraldine Seagrave—to a point far beyond the plot itself. All else is secondary or rather minor. In truth "The Danger Mark" is so individualistic that it suggests "Hamlet" with only the soliloquies left in. It is the natural tendency to play up a star of the talents of Miss Ferguson, but even a character study demands a setting to justify it and to successfully carry it.

Charles Maigne adapted the story for screen use and Hugh Ford directed it. The lighting effects are some of the most realistically effective seen. Mahlon Hamilton, Crauford Kent, Gertrude McCoy, Edward Burns, Maud Turner Gordon and W. T. Carlton constitute the supporting cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

From her father, who died of excesses, Geraldine Seagrave (Elsie Ferguson) inherits a craving for alcohol that asserts itself at her coming out party. She disgraces herself, but fortunately before only her guardian, and Duane Mallett (Mahlon Hamilton), the man who loves her. When Duane proposes, she tells him that she cannot accept owing to the curse of her inheritance. But Duane is persistent, tells her that he knows all about it, and as a result they become engaged. Geraldine has another suitor, Jack Dysart (Crauford Kent), who has wronged one, Sylvia (Gertrude McCoy). Sylvia appeals to Geraldine, and as a result she promises to elope with Jack. At the minister's house she produces Sylvia, and shames Jack into marrying her. At home they believe that Geraldine has eloped with Jack. Duane leaves a note for her, saying that he is heart broken. When Geraldine returns she discovers this. She wants to drown her sorrow in drink, but manages to restrain herself. Duane meets the newly-married couple, who explain all, and as a result he hurries back to take Geraldine in his arms.

"The Locked Heart"
(General Film-Oakdale—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

WHEN Baby Marie Osborne took wing to Diando the Horkheimers cast about for another child to fill the shoes she left vacant at the Balboa studio, and Gloria Joy was selected to accomplish this. The youthful Gloria is a thoroughly genuine, enthusiastic and unaffected child, and in "The Locked Heart," under the direction of Henry King, a man who seems to understand children, she performs creditably and sweetly. There is a little colored boy to accompany her in many of the scenes, and he too shows remarkable talent. When he grovels on the ground feigning great pain, after Gloria has switched his palm ever so gently, it is impossible to refrain from laughter. The fact that he is a chicken fancier is also amusingly brought out and so is the episode of the bath that the butler administers to his dark and doubtless grimy skin.

It seems something of a pity that given such a charming little star and such a capable foil and appreciative direction that the producers could not have provided a story of real feature character. Daniel F. Whitcomb wrote "The Locked Heart," and it would pass muster if it had been released in two, or perhaps three, reels. There is not enough meat in it for five and there are a few tire some stretches toward the end.

The scenario was prepared with an eye to make the plot obvious to those of limited perception and appreciation evidently, or else this feeling is produced because some of the passages had to be elaborated upon to bring the whole up to the required length.

Mr. King himself appears as the child's father. Daniel Gilfether has the congenial character role of the grandfather, while Vola Vale appears as the spirit of the mother.

Where pictures with child stars are appreciated "The Locked Heart" could be played with little fear of complaint. For, while it lags toward the end, its star, its direction and its comedy touches furnished by the colored boy and some playful scenes between a puppy and a kitten serve to make it generally pleasing.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

When Harry Mason's wife dies leaving him a baby daughter, he refuses to look at it so great is his grief. He leaves the mite in the care of his father, Colonel Mason (Daniel Gilfether), and departs on business to foreign lands, where he remains for five long years. Always the spirit of his wife haunts him, and, despite his vow never to love his daughter, he feels an irresistible longing to get home. So one day Harry (Henry King) returns and meets his daughter (Gloria Joy). And gradually he grows to love her. The little girl is often visited in her dreams by the spirit of her mother (Vola Vale). The spirit leads her to the door of the room that was once hers, but the child cannot enter, as the door has ever since remained locked. Harry, however, finally ventures into the sacred precincts of this room, and there discovers a note written by his wife before the birth of the baby, telling him that if she is taken away, to love and cherish the tiny mite of humanity that she will leave behind in the world.

"The Deciding Kiss"
(Bluebird—Five Reels)
Reviewed by F. G. Spencer

EDITH ROBERTS' first starring vehicle, "The Deciding Kiss," finds her in a role not so easy to portray, but she is not found wanting. She registers joy as readily as she does anguish, and love as readily as she does hatred, and the picture in its entirety is one continuous succession of these emotions.

It's a long hark from frivolous comedy to serious drama, but Miss Roberts appears to have bridged the abyss most successfully.

She is well supported, the cast including Winifred Greenwood, Hal Cooley, Thornton Church among others.

The first reel is pathetic indeed, and shows Eleanor Hamlin (Edith Roberts) severing home ties with her grandparents to be "adopted" by a party of idle rich on the co-operative plan. The parties adopting her are single, and one of them, Beulah Page (Winifred Greenwood), has her own ideas on the subject of raising the young—these ideas absolutely precluding the main requisite, love. And on this the story hangs. The climax is rather unexpected, but is wholesome and refreshing.

"The Deciding Kiss" is an adaptation of Ethel M. Kelly's novel "Turn About Eleanor," and is really a delightful production.

The photography throughout is fine indeed, and the direction of Tod Browning leaves nothing to be desired.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Eleanor Hamlin, a forlorn little orphan, lives with her grandparents in a Cape Cod village. For her own good they accept the offer of a wealthy New York woman to adopt her.

Beulah Page, the woman, desires a child only to relieve the monotony. She does not love the child and is disappointed at her tattered dress and tear-stained face.

But when the little fondling wins the love of Beulah's aristocratic friends and particularly her lover, Peter Bolling (Thornton Church), she feels an absence of the spot-light and railroads the child to a fashionable finishing school up the Hudson.

After a year or two at the school, in which little Eleanor's Cape Codishness is whittled away by prim tutors, she is sent home; a radiant and cultured young woman.

At once she is besieged by Peter Bolling, and Beulah tells Eleanor that she has first claim upon Peter; that he is pledged to her. Eleanor runs away and returns to her old home on Cape Cod. Peter follows. Eleanor's grandparents, at her plea, tell him that she is not there. He returns to New York and learns from Beulah that Eleanor has been deceived.

On Christmas day Eleanor returns, resigned to her sorrow at losing Peter. She learns the truth and Eleanor informs her benefactors that she is simply to be their child, and so matters end happily.

"Cupid by Proxy"

(Diando-Pathe—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

THE DIANDO COMPANY evidently knows its public, the public that witnesses the doings of Baby Marie Osborne, and acts accordingly. At least in "Cupid by Proxy" they appear quite fearless in the admission that they "need a plot," and so in the fifth reel a young hero is accused of "altering the books." But while this effort to seek the elusive plot is entirely commendable on the part of the producers, it must be confessed that their attempt has met with rather ineffectual results. The plot, although there is one running through the five reels that puts in irregular appearances, is the least thing about "Cupid by Proxy." The reason why it is the least thing is because it is stretched. Plots are very much like elastic bands. If they are left in their natural state there is sufficient of them to be perceived. If they are stretched they become thinner and thinner. And then, of course, sometimes they break and never connect again.

It is through the knowing mind of Baby Marie that her big sister and the big boy next door find happiness—this is the subject matter of "Cupid by Proxy." And to bring the two together there are five reels of matter that, despite some flashes of good comedy, are rather tiresome to men who wear long trousers and women who wear short skirts.

The child star receives support from Kenneth Nordyke, a boy; Antrim Short and Mildred Harris (not the Universal Mildred Harris, the pair of youngsters in their 'teens, and John Steppling, Mary Talbot, Minnie Danvers and J. N. McDowell. The colored boy is seen a few times.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The Browns and the Stewarts are families in moderate circumstances who live next door to each other. The Stewarts, through the good fortune of the head of the family who invents a new clothes-pin, are raised to a position of affluence. Mrs. Stewart (Minnie Danvers) straightway becomes up stage and refuses to permit her daughter (Mildred Harris) to associate with Ralph Brown (Antrim Short). She prefers the vice-president of her husband's factory, a fortune hunter. Baby Marie Stewart (Marie Osborne), realizes her sister's trouble and, in league with Tommy Brown (Kenneth Nordyke), makes life rather miserable for the unwelcome suitor. The unwelcome suitor manages to alter the books and throw suspicion on Ralph just as he is about to elope with his sweetheart. For some reason the villain returns to the factory and decides to burn up the place and so Ralph is cleared. The fire is put out and Marie discovers the villain's watch and chain lying on the desk. This is proof that he is the guilty man and so all ends happily.

"Joan of the Woods"

(World Film—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"JOAN OF THE WOODS" is something of a maze. It takes us through the trials and tribulations of one Joan who is deserted by her husband, and it takes us through the trials and tribulations of Joan's daughter, also Joan, who almost meets the same fate. There is the old climax of the father who deserted, sitting on the judge's bench and being asked to decide the fate of his daughter. Happily, the judge's step-son rushes in just in time to save the day.

There appears to be too much in "Joan of the Woods." There is incident after incident, many of the incidents paralleling one another, because the careers of the mother and daughter so closely resemble one another. And among this wealth of incident there is not much room left for any real drama. And there is so much incident that the maze is created. Really one could have yelled "heads I win, tails you lose" to us in the middle of this picture and we would have accepted the odds as even.

June Elvidge, who always does her best to make her parts realistic, acts with skill as both the Joans. George MacQuarrie and John Bowers are the men who make love to her, while others of importance are Albert Hart, Marguerite Gale, Henrietta Simpson, Dore Davidson and Marie Pagano.

Louise Vale wrote the scenario and Travers Vale directed. The photographic work was in charge of Philip Hatkin.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Joan Travers (June Elvidge), daughter of a trapper (Walter Pratt Lewis), meets Philip Wentworth (George MacQuarrie), a lawyer, on his vacation and when he returns to the city it is with Joan as his wife. Philip is time and again embarassed by Joan's efforts to adapt herself to society's ways. Eventually he leaves her in charge of a professional chaperone (Henrietta Simpson). He handles the divorce case of his old friend, Mrs. Dicks (Marguerite Gale), and after winning it for her pays ardent court to her. Joan, with her baby, leaves the home provided her disconsolate and seeks cheap lodgings. Soon after she dies. Then Philip marries Mrs. Dicks.

Years pass and the baby Joan has grown to womanhood. She lives with a kindly pawn-broker (Dore Davidson). She meets Norman Dicks (John Bowers), the step-son of Philip. They are secretly married. When Norman fails in his college examinations he is sent to a naval training school. When Joan's baby is born she is turned out by the pawn-broker. She takes refuge with Mollie (Maria Pagano), a woman of the streets. Her baby dies and not wishing to see it interred in a public burial ground she throws the body in a pond. A policeman sees her and she is arrested. On trial before Philip Wentworth, the case looks black against her until Norman appears. The three confer together while the jury is at recess and Wentworth's relationship with the girl becomes known. The jury's decision is swung in her favor by the testimony of one of Mollie's friends who saw the baby dead on the bed.

"We Can't Have Everything"

(Artcraft—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

IMAGINE the proceedings at a divorce court recounted by a skilled novelist with a highly developed bump of satire and not a little sense of humor instead of by a journalist and you gain a faint idea of the character of Cecil De Mille's latest production, "We Can't Have Everything." It is taken from one of Rupert Hughes' late novels, which first ran serially in one of the popular magazines. It dips most entertainingly into "high society life." For William De Mille furnished a lively and often dramatic scenario from Mr. Hughes' story, all the main turns of which are accomplished either by a divorce or a wedding. While Mr. De Mille, the producer, has produced the picture with all the art at his command, which art is by no means a negligible quantity. As Alice's peep through the looking glass was so wonderfully fascinating to her, so will "We Can't Have Everything" appear before the picture audience. For, besides revelations concerning the spicy life of the high flying, we have glimpses of the interior of a motion picture studio.

It was quite a conglomeration of incidents that Mr. Hughes put into his story, and, while those of us who refuse to be entirely swept off our feet by such an amazing spread of fiction will refuse to take it seriously, that same large public which enjoyed the story, augmented by the thousands which determine the ratio of the picture to the printed page, will find much to delight them here. The society which revolves about the divorce court, the road house and the wife whose intellect is blonde, can be looked at on the screen with the same awe that it is looked at stepping out of a taxicab and floating into Sherry's.

The best part of the picture is the motion picture stuff, which serves to bring Jim and Kedzie together. This is played as comedy, and there is some great acting from Theodore Roberts and Tully Marshall in these scenes. Mr. Roberts is the Sultan in the picture being produced and Mr. Marshall the director. Their scenes together and the business they put over alone are really uproarious. Mr. Roberts in particular sets one laughing time and again. Mr. De Mille chose to incorporate some flashes of the recent Lasky studio fire in the picture, and naturally no one can claim that they are short on realism.

Mr. De Mille assembled a very good cast to interpret the leading roles of the Hughes story. Wanda Hawley is the ambitious and conniving but intelligent little blonde ingenue to perfection. Kathlyn Williams affords a striking contrast in the role of Charity Cheever, the woman "to the manner born." Sylvia Breamer furnishes additional feminine interest as the dancer who causes the break between the Cheevers. She is startlingly real as the little lady of the bright lights, who winds Cheever about her finger by practising baby tactics on him. Elliott Dexter is a thoroughly gentlemanly and likable Jim Dyckman and Thurston Hall plays the drifting and happy Peter Cheever realistically.

Alvin Wyckoff has secured excellent lightings through the picture. The production is lavish and includes a most realistic rainstorm.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Peter Cheever (Thurston Hall) becomes enamored and Zada (Sylvia Breamer), a dancer. His wife, Charity (Kathlyn Williams), though loving him, sees her case as hopeless and divorces him. In this she was slightly influenced by the thought of Jim Dyckman (Elliott Dexter), a millionaire, who had time and again declared his love for her. But when the divorce leaves her free she discovers that Jim has married a motion picture actress, Kedzie (Wanda Hawley). Kedzie, however, proves a very poor wife. Riches pall on her in time. So when the Marquis of Strathdene (Raymond Hatton), an English aviator, puts in an appearance, she casts around for evidence on which to divorce Jim. This presents itself when a terrific hurricane and rainstorm make it impossible for Jim and Charity to return from a motor trip. They are obliged to remain in a country hotel over night, and so on this bit of damning, though false, evidence, Kedzie gets her divorce, and straightway marries the Marquis. But she is not satisfied then, for immediately after the wedding she wants to go to England and meet the King. Here the Marquis puts in a wise remark: "We can't have everything," and Kedzie has to be contented. As for Jim and Charity, they are reunited in a field hospital in France, where Jim is a convalescent and Charity a nurse.

"A Fight for Millions"

(Vitagraph Serial—First Two Episodes)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

BILL DUNCAN comes right back at us with another serial, bristling with action from cover to cover. "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance—and the Woman," "The Woman In The Web"—all the work of Bill Duncan and all three having gone the circuit of Vitagraph exchanges with a burst of acclaim following in their wake. Now comes Bill in "A Fight For Millions" and believe the reviewer, Bill makes some fight—at least he leads off with two jolts, straight from the shoulder, in the first two episodes of this serial. "The Snare" and "Flames of Peril," the titles of these first two, do not come anywhere near conveying the result of those two leads, straight from the shoulder, that Bill Duncan started and finished, with his guard up and feinting for another opening.

"A Fight For Millions" has the proper swing to it. There is always something in expectancy—that is, basing our judgment on the resultants of the impression left by the first two episodes. We will not attempt to discriminate between the two. As far as action and thrills go, there is a half dozen of one and six of the other. The Western atmosphere is there, from the beautiful long-shots of open country to the breezy tilt of Joe Ryan's Stetson. And before we forget it—Joe Ryan is on the job every minute. We will place Joe's ability as a Western bad-man against that of any other bad-man on the screen. It is as natural for Joe to look the part as it is for Bill Duncan to perform "strong-arm" feats. Edith Johnson is the girl in the case and Edith sure does leave a good impression. She is an excellent horsewoman, a good type and she wears a smile that will get them all. Bill, Joe and Edith hit in high in the first two episodes.

"A Fight For Millions" tells of the fight that is waged between two enemy factions over the millions left by a wealthy prospector. The prospector, early in his youth, had settled in a small Western town with his wife. He returns from a prospecting trip and finds his wife in the arms of another man. He kills the man and flees. Years pass and he is taken dangerously ill. Before his death he is informed that his wife has died leaving a daughter. She left a letter explaining that the man her husband had seen on the day that he found her in the stranger's arms, was her brother. He draws his will and provides for a daughter whom he has never seen. His two nephews, both of questionable character, are left certain amounts providing they find the deceased daughter. The episodes are in two reels each.

"Love Watches"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

CORINNE GRIFFITH and Denton Vane have the seats of honor in the cast of characters which interprets the principal roles in Vitagraph's screen version of Billie Burke's one-time stage success, "Love Watches," a French comedy-drama written by R. de Flers and G. Gaillavet. If we remember rightly, the stage play depended a good bit on the excellent dialogue to carry it along successfully. This, of course, is missing in the screen drama and with it has vanished much of the sustaining strength of the piece as a whole. Miss Griffith and Mr. Vane's performances go a good ways toward making us forget that there is something missing in plot material and substantial support to the story.

For the first time in many a month, Denton Vane has dropped the characteristics of the screen villain, in place of which he has affected a pair of nose glasses, a sissified expression, a flowing bat tie and with these all working on high speed, all other performances of his before the camera, vanish in the haze of forgetfulness, leaving his character of Ernest Augarde, standing as the shining light of them all. Forget that villain stuff, Denton and go in for light comedy. You made an impression in the projection room why not in the theatre?

A long list of names appear in the cast of characters, but there are only three who really deserve mention. The other eight are merely fillers and add little if nothing to entertainment value of the picture. Ed. Burns is the third and although he hasn't much to do, he convinces while on the screen and makes something worthwhile out of the character of Count Andre de Juvigny.

"Love Watches" is light in plot construction but underlying its frivolous trend of action, there is a lesson for all. Because of its lack of dramatic punch and action, it will have to remain in the "just average" class of screen dramas. Henri Houry directed and right here we have to compliment him on the beautiful interior sets, the long shots registered in shooting through duplicate sets and the good-for-sore-eyes exteriors which are shown. Director Houry has turned out a good production considering the weakness of the script from which he had to work. Miss Griffith's fascinating smile and her girlish mannerisms are valuable assets and some day we hope to see her go a bit deeper in to her dramatic reserve for convincers. Florence Deshon, Julia Swayne Gordon, Alice Terry, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Charles A. Stevenson, Carola Carson and Alice and Edna Nash are seen in minor supporting roles.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marquise de Juvigny (Julia Swayne Gordon) spends a good bit of her time attempting to arrange a match between Jacqueline (Corrine Griffith) and Ernest Augarde (Denton Vane). Ernest is a bookworm, and a dull one at that. But Jacqueline refuses to consider Ernest for anything excepting the dull, silly fellow that he is. Her love is all for Count Andre (Ed Burns), a dashing young Parisian.

And she marries the Count. Soon afterward Jacqueline discovers that Lucie De Morfontaine (Florence Deshon), a vampire lady, is seen in her husband's company on different occasions. The husband does not care for Lucie, but she will not be spurned. Jacqueline suspects that the two are together on a certain afternoon, and she goes in search of them. Her suspicions are verified. She decides to get back at her husband, so she goes to Ernest's home, and says she is going to remain with him. Ernest is delighted with the new arrangements.

In the meantime, the folks at home are worrying about the disappearance of Jacqueline, and go in search of her. It is late at night when she returns, and tells her uncle that she acted in such a manner so as to pay back her husband for his neglect. The husband comes to the house and finds Ernest and Jacqueline together. When he learns that Ernest is the man with whom Jacqueline has been, he laughs and tells her that there is nothing to worry about.

"Everywoman's Husband"

(Triangle—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

KEEP up the good work, Miss Swanson, you've batted a Ty Cobb average in this one and if we remember rightly, your last picture received a few good words from the critics. We won't vouch for the last one, but we will for "Everywoman's Husband." Your work is entitled to special mention. You made that little wife a real, honest-to-goodness partner for friend husband.

"Everywoman's Husband" was written by John Clymer and G. Logue and produced for the Triangle program under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton, a new addition to the directorial forces of Triangle productions, and a good one if we may judge from the work he has done with this offering. The story has been fashioned with an original twist to the domestic relations brand of the drama and it presents one of the most interesting subjects for screen adaptation that Triangle has shown for review in many months. The script has been handled carefully and with the end in view to lay the foundation for something different. This end has been reached and to the authors and scenario writer, Charles J. Wilson, to Miss Swanson, to her director and to the members of the supporting cast, we extend our sincere congratulations for a fine piece of work, fit for any program and sure to meet with the approval of your audiences.

The manner in which the authors have played up the character of Reginald Dunstan is a clever conception on their part. As far as the reviewer knows, this character is unique in the history of male "heavies" on the screen. In place of making their character of Dunstan a real villian, as the man who intervenes in the home life of a husband and wife always is, the authors have made him a good villian. He intrudes but is never offensive; he takes it upon himself to bring the wife and husband to blows and in the same breath fans the flames of the old love into real, sincere affection.

Joe King, Lillian Langdon, George Pearce, Lillian West and Jack Livingston give fine performances in supporting roles. "Everywoman's Husband" will be recorded in the box office reports as one of the best Triangle program pictures.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mrs. Jonathan Rhodes (Lillian Langdon) rules her husband and her home with an Iron hand. As a result, the husband seeks the comfort and freedom of the home of another woman. Edith (Gloria Swanson), the daughter, marries Frank Emerson (Joe King), and her mother persuades her to rule her household and her husband with the same iron hand. The result is that the young husband finds the home and company of Delia Marshall (Lillian West), a modiste, more to his liking.

Reginald Dunstan (Jack Livingston) is a partner of Emerson. He sees the way in which Emerson is neglecting his young wife, and investigates to ascertain the cause. He finds that Edith's mother has advised her daughter wrongly, and that Edith, if she could have her own way, would soon win back the affections of her husband.

Edith finally rebels from the manner in which her mother dominates her home, and decides to try her own methods. She disregards all that her mother has said, starts out to make her home her husband's home as well. Dunstan arouses Edith's suspicions against her husband, and after following her own theories, she wins out, and she and her husband are united.

The Player's Value and How to Use It

BY R. E. PRITCHARD,
DIRECTOR, MOTION PICTURE NEWS EXHIBITORS' SERVICE BUREAU

STARS are admittedly one of the chief assets of the exhibitor. How much they affect the box office results depends to a considerable extent on how the exhibitor uses their worth. And the star appeal is probably easier to put over than any other sort of exploitation, because it lends itself to every form of advertising.

One of the basic articles which appeared early in the series of advertising talks in the Exhibitors' Service Bureau was entitled "Making the Stars Work for You." This was included among the first, because it is elementally apparent that the popularity of the players can be reflected into the individual theatre if the exhibitor will take the trouble to do so.

So long as there is humanness in the world, so long as personality counts and face attracts, so long will the individuality of players have sway over the millions of photoplay fans. There are dozens of ways in which this appeal can be made to count, and exploitation that is connected with a name and a personality always lasts longer than publicity for a created THING. For that reason, the use of the star in exploitation should not be based on the pulling power for the moment, for the lone production, but for the steady, cumulative patronage that it will bring to the theatre.

ONE has to look back in the files of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS but a matter of five years when there was rarely mentioned the name of any players in the advertising of pictures. Those were the days when the motion picture was just emerging from the "movie" days, when everyone went downtown to see "a picture show" and generally went to two or three before they came home again, two or three one and two reelers to which they were usually drawn by the multi-colored lithographs covering the front of the house.

But even in those days, before the manufacturer himself paid any attention to advertising the star and long before the exhibitor did anything to profit by the personality of the player the public itself was selecting its own favorites. Sometimes they could find the name of their favorite tucked away in small print down at the bottom of the poster, sometimes, possibly, they might be able to associate the personality with the brand, but more often than not it was the "word from their friends," the word of mouth advertising that made their presence known.

THOUGH certain producers undoubtedly deserve great credit for bringing the bigger players of the speaking stage to the screen, it was not the producer or the exhibitor that created the demand for the star. It was the public that literally "rose up on his hind legs" and demanded the players. The exhibitor heard it first and that call went along to the producer. Today its recognition is universal and the producer and the exhibitor would no more try to hide the personality of the player, than would the grocer dare to remove the wrapper from a widely advertised soap.

Advertising is one of the absolute essentials to the success of the motion picture theatre, yet the star, in personality, has the greatest advertising power of any means of popularizing the theatre.

Popular players will even draw a certain element of the public to see what they know is a poor picture. It stands to reason that a succession of poor pictures will hurt the popularity of the star, but it is not the fault of the star, but the result of a rapidly fading fallacy of some producers who believed that they could make money at the expense of the past.

And what is true of the star is true of every player of importance in the cast. There is an appeal for the public in every person that takes part in a picture, if the exhibitor will strive to put it over and the producer will lend him a hand. And just as the exhibitors today are getting to know more and more about the pictures before they show them, just as surely are they appreciating all of the angles of exploitation and are using them. The day is coming closer and closer when each individual who takes any considerable part in any picture will mean a great deal to the exhibitor and where every possibility of that player's personality will be carried over to the patron.

PERSONALITY is the easiest thing in the world to capitalize. Without forcing, it finds itself in. With the doors held open for it, the appeal is certain and most powerful.

It is not essential that a player shall already be well known and popular. An exhibitor can do wonders in helping to make a player. But the player, first, must give the exhibitor the material with which to work. The players must realize, each one of them, that they must cooperate, for it is in keeping them before his patrons, through his newspapers and his programs, in the lobby displays, through photographs and in dozens of other ways that the exhibitor has a chance to increase the popularity of the player.

With the concentration of SERVICE in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the exhibitor is turning to this journal for his material for all forms of his exploitation, looking to it for the planning and backing of his campaigns. If the exhibitor himself does not know about the player, how can he transmit this information along to the public?

Players cannot run about the country at will, spend thousands for photographs for free distribution and write personal letters to the fans, but they should strive to keep themselves before the exhibitor's notice and to extend the power of their personality through them to the motion picture patrons for the stability of the theatres as a whole.

STARS in themselves have no monopoly on popularity. In theory, at least, they are known to more people and have a great number of admirers, but there is an appeal to every player that has the promise of success.

There are scores of players today who draw hundreds and thousands of people to the theatres, and they have never had their names in the electric lights or in big letters on the billboards. Yet such players are absolutely essential to the success of the theatre, and the more the individual managers are given a chance to capitalize that popularity and the more they utilize their opportunities to get the admirers of each player into their theatres, the better it is going to be for the industry, today and permanently.

"Mother Mary" Maurice drew thousands and thousands to the theatre, yet until a short time before her death she was barely mentioned in the advertising matter. There are many, many others living that draw their hundreds upon hundreds.

Personality—and How to Cash In On It

There are leading men that bring as many people to the theatre as do the young women opposite whom they play.

And similarly there are leading women who are just as responsible for packed houses as the male stars who marry them at the end of the film.

THERE are dozens of stars today who have been created, forced into stardom by the public because of the friends that they have made in minor roles. Naturally, any wise producer is anxious to develop players to this position, but there are cases recorded where there has been an apparent effort to hold players back from the "big type," but where popular appeal has put them so high in the public estimation that there could be but one result.

Persons who have followed the development from the point of view of the daily newspaper and the trade paper can recall player after player that have been lifted from the ranks by the notices that they have been given, notices that have come because of the hits that these players have scored with the general public.

We recall one player whose first appearance was with another star at a time that she was little more than an extra, but her personality went over so big that one important newspaper devoted three-fourths of its space to her and the result was that almost overnight this girl player became one of the most popular in that locality. And her popularity quickly spread and within a few months her name was up at the top with the others, and it has been there ever since.

There is another case in which a leading man who has played opposite many noted players at last created such public interest in himself that exhibitors in certain sections of the country began to play up his name as big as that of the star in their advertising—and in some cases making him the star. There could be but one result and the producers then employing him were quick to give him the coveted position which had been denied him in so many other companies.

Yet, it was not so much the fault of the other employers, but because the art of motion picture exhibition and the quality of exhibitor exploitation has advanced to the point where the up-to-the-minute showman no longer follows cut and dried rules, no longer follows the narrow lines that are laid out for him to follow, but because he is thinking for himself and more and more, with every day, taking every advantage that is offered to him.

BASICALLY, at least the star and the actor in the lesser position stand on the same general footing. The public is giving more and more attention to the personality and the art of all the players. The public is more and more becoming exactly certain what it wants. And the public is leaving that impress on the exhibitor. And, still further, the producer is listening to the exhibitor these days, and the little girl who played the vampire's maid is not only having her chance, but the wise exhibitor is seeing that she is given the most of it.

For the exhibitor, after all, has one object in view, to get more money in the box office not only today, but in days to come. He has stopped the one-time policy of yielding to expedients to get today's cash; he is building his theatre and his future. And it is in this that the player can help, and the more powerful this help will be if the exhibitor takes advantage of it in the fullest measure.

And after he gets this fullest co-operation from the players, as best they can give it through letting themselves be known and showing a willingness to help the theatre manager to the limit of their time and their financial ability (and their contract arrangements), the exhibitor has a great deal to do. But after all it is a case of his taking advantage of his every opportunity, a thing that he must do in every angle of his theatre's management.

ONE mistake that too many exhibitors make, especially in the case of the most popular stars, is in concluding that the star herself will pack his theatre. Of course that is going to bring a large amount of business; for if it didn't the whole star theory would quickly be proved entirely wrong. But the exhibitor who looks at it from that point of view is passing up an opportunity.

We would advise that as a general rule it would be profitable to adopt this policy: "The more popular the star, the heavier I will exploit her." He should see to it that every person in his entire radius should know of the appearance of that star at his theatre. Instead of relying on the popularity, as an intangible thing, he should see that capital was made of it with every person that could possibly be reached.

That is what we meant in the article in which we urged the exhibitor to "make the stars work for you."

First, we have always advocated the use of newspaper space, the more of it the better, regularly and intelligently. In advertising star pictures there should always be featured a large picture of the player, if possible in the particular role that he or she has in that production. Every exhibitor knows that he must use big type for the star's name, but he is more than often content with using any old sort of a stock cut, regardless of size or fitness.

CUTS stand out. The personality of the player is the striking thing. Bring this out with smashing half-tone displays. We believe that it will pay every principal exhibitor in every town where he can get engraving done, to use special cuts for each star production, and that the increased interest and the added prestige given the player will soon convince him of that fact.

In case where there are no such facilities the exhibitor should supply himself with either such stock cuts as are furnished by the exchanges or have his own made. In those cases where the producers insist on putting brand marks and all sorts of reading matter over these cuts, it is much better to have the cuts especially made in the nearest city and keep them filed for use whenever a picture with this star is showu. The outlay of getting these cuts would be small, and it would be gradual, while the same cut could be used over and over again.

Recently in discussing advertising in newspapers we cited one display only a single column wide and about four inches deep in which the exhibitor had given three-fourths of the space to the picture of the star, one of the most popular of the women on the screen. We commended it as good advertising, one of the best in the series that we printed in that issue. And it was good because the personality of the star was the one big smashing thing to make stand out in that comparatively small display.

AND what is true of advertising is also true of the news columns of the newspapers. More and more newspapers each month are yielding to the evidenced interest of the great mass of the public in photoplay matters and the exhibitor who overlooks this angle is passing up one of his biggest opportunities.

In the largest cities the newspapers make their own cuts and they prefer to have the pictures furnished to them and let them make the arrangements. Some papers prefer scene cuts, others striking pictures of the star in character, especially where the player is a woman. The exhibitor should use great care to see that his exchange or the producer direct furnishes good, clean copy that will reproduce well, whether this is intended for use in the advertising or in the news matter in the papers.

The player can help here a great deal in seeing that the right sort of pictures are provided. Most companies object to the individual actor sending out his own publicity for this often disarranges carefully laid plans for exploitation that the individual knows nothing about, but still there is no reason why exhibitors and newspapers should not be supplied with good photos of the stars, and, for that matter, of the lesser lights. The player who is "too busy" to give a few hours for the posing of special pictures for the producer is missing an opportunity.

We would by no means advise players to interfere with the plans of their employers, but they should themselves keep up to date for their own interest.

EXHIBITORS should always strive to keep the personality of the players before the public. A great share of the showmen think that they are getting all that they need when the newspaper uses for them an adjective laden reading notice about the current picture. Of course, reading notices, properly and sensibly prepared are essential, but we believe that there is nothing more valuable to the individual theatre and the more important in stimulating interest in the motion picture in general than to get as much live, gossipy NEWS of the players into the newspapers.

"Director and Writer Coming Into Their Own"

BY DAVID W. GRIFFITH

WRITTEN ESPECIALLY FOR THE DIRECTORS AND PLAYERS SERVICE SECTION, MOTION PICTURE NEWS

MOTION PICTURE NEWS, has asked me to write my views relative to the importance of a director to the motion picture.

This is rather difficult. If I said the director was the whole thing, I might be accused of being immodest—if I stated he did not count for much, they would say I needed another press agent—and I always stand up for press agents—that is, as long as they stand up themselves.

But in all seriousness—a director must above all things, be on the job every minute. He is like the city editor on a great newspaper, who must know all about why and where the reporters are working as well—if not better than the reporters themselves. An editor must be able to tell his reporters HOW and WHAT to write.

A director MUST and SHOULD know acting in every detail. Together with his knowledge of acting, he must know how to direct an actor or an actress in their parts. This requires not only executive ability, but also that great quality which is the great cause of the failure of German diplomacy—TACT.

EACH player is a separate individual in himself, and must be handled and directed individually. To distinguish the qualities in each player, requires a knowledge of human nature: this is learned only by experience. Did you ever notice how a teller in a bank will give you one quick, sharp glance, through a ten by twelve opening in his window, if you want a check cashed? That one glance takes in each and every detail about you. This is the eye of the police reporter. A director should have this. He must possess a knowledge of photography—this is IMPERATIVE. He should not only know the technical but also the artistic sides.

A cameraman must know photography—a player must know how to act—a scenario writer must know plot and continuity—the technical man must have a knowledge of architecture, properties and equipment, but the director must be able to blend them all together to form a unit—to work together—this is team work. The director must know about them all.

We have had the day of the star—the star is featured, but the directors are slowly coming into their own. The directors all claim that it has been the custom, when a photoplay is a success, for the star to say he or she was entirely responsible. The scenario writer would modestly claim that he was responsible for the success—the photographer said he was the cause of it all—but the director seemed to stand alone, trying to "toot his own horn," with no one making any attempt to listen. But, if the picture was a FAILURE, they all lined up, and pointing a finger of scorn at the director, unanimously nominated him the "Goat"—he was responsible for the "flivver."

BUT time are changing—the critics who are reviewing and criticising the pictures have gradually awakened to the fact of the importance of skillful direction. At first, the director was not mentioned at all—later, he was mentioned occasionally, and in small type, like those in the last paragraph of the society column in the daily newspaper, terminating—"and also present, were——". Later, the director was mentioned with every production, and slowly gaining prominence, his name appeared more frequently, until now—the director's name is prominently displayed, being exceeded only by the big stars. When I said "prominently," I meant it—you might say "very prominently."

At the present day, the majority of the directors have to select their own stories—select their players, find the locations, and engineer the production from its start to its finish.

One of the primary requisites of the director is PATIENCE—he must have this in great quantities. If ever he loses his temper he only makes himself less valuable as a dramatic executive.

THE other great factor that is coming to the front is the WRITER. In the past there has been too little attention given to the art of writing the scenario for the director to produce. When the game was young—years ago—almost any one who could write at all could write a scenario. The pictures were very crude. To-day, the pictures have to be very much more realistic and true to life than they did a few years ago.

I firmly believe in the future as regards the writer. Some of the big writers have gone into the motion picture business and more are going to follow. The writer will more and more become one of the mainstays of the motion picture industry—he is the BIG MAN of TO-MORROW.

The writer and director are gradually growing to work together and to co-operate more—their work is along the same lines. The writer furnishes the foundation, and the director builds the house. The more the director and the writer work in conjunction—and blend their ideas together—the greater "sun-dramas" will be produced.

So all hail the Imagination! without it the sky is black, without it the world is empty and nothing. It is Imagination that makes dreams, ideals. It is imagination that draws the difference between the man and the cows of the field. With it man has conquered the Earth and the Seas—with it he has eagled the air. The millions that stolidly go through the world, groping for a little light that makes existence bearable—this light is Imagination. And Imagination little or big, is the most that makes pictures, and this is what the author must furnish.

THE DIRECTOR AS A BOOKING GUIDE

By P. S. Harrison

Of Motion Picture News Exhibitor to Exhibitor Reviews

THERE are several ways of determining the quality of a picture. One of them is by knowing the ability of the director who produced it.

The importance of a director in the making of a picture is being recognized more and more. He is actually the guiding spirit.

By knowing what a director can accomplish and by having a knowledge of the story one is able to determine the quality of a picture with fair accuracy. Such an advantage is inestimable to an exhibitor, especially where it is impossible to have the picture projected on the screen.

The ability to separate the good pictures from the bad ones guided solely by the above stated factors requires somewhat of a study. However, it is an asset worth attaining.

Exhibiting has reached the point where it requires thorough knowledge of all angles as, owing to the public's becoming more discriminating and also to the strong competition, only the fittest are going to survive. The more knowledge one possesses, therefore, the more chances he has of surviving.

In order to be able to tell accurately a good from a bad director one must resort to a checking system. For instance, one should mark down the quality of a picture and the name of the director who produced it after playing it.

Some Hints in Booking and Advertising

LOUIS WM. CHAUDET

SEVEN years' experience as cameraman and director with some of the leading companies of the industry, during which time he has made a close study of the conditions of the exhibitors, has given Louis Wm. Chaudet, now directing "Smiling" Bill Parsons in situation comedies for the Goldwyn program, a number of good ideas in which the exhibitor can better conditions.

"Many exhibitors of the country are in the same class with their patrons—they do not know very much concerning the making of pictures, and consequently have overlooked an asset for their theatre in not acquainting the public with the fact that the producing director is responsible for the success or failure of any given picture," Mr. Chaudet said in discussing conditions.

"Every great work of art carries the name of the artist, be it a painting, piece of sculptoring, or anything of the allied arts. The public has come to know of the artist from his work, and consequently the value of his different works are enhanced thereby. If the name of any great painter was taken off his canvas, the value of it would drop materially.

"What has been done for the artist in other lines, can be done by the exhibitor with respect to the director. The director is the wielder of the brush, or the moulder of the photoplay, and the sooner the public learns to know this, the quicker will the exhibitor add to the drawing power of his theatre. The director, I believe everyone of the industry will agree, is more important to the production than the author of the story, and therefore should receive proportionate consideration from the exhibitor and the public."

WILLIAM DUNCAN

WILLIAM DUNCAN'S whole career together with his recent activities in the picture world create a most fertile field for effective publicity and advertising. During the past year he has gained prominence as a serial actor and director. In fact he might be called the "king" of this type of picture if the same comparison which makes Pearl White "queen" be followed out.

In his Vitagraph serials, "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Fighting Trail" and "A Fight for Millions," he has gained a reputation as an actor of exceptional daring and physical prowess.

And he comes rightfully by this reputation as he takes chances time and again. He received an excellent training for this type of work in his early career when he was an instructor in Bernarr Macfadden's Physical Culture School, and later when he entered vaudeville with Sandow, the renowned strong man .

As a result of this early training and the manner in which he is putting it to use in the present day, any amount of interesting newspaper stories could be prepared regarding him by the resourceful press agent. A similar line, mentioning his early career and his record in Vitagraph serials could be made use of in lobby and newspaper advertising.

Duncan also had an extensive career on the stage before entering pictures. He played leads with the Forepaugh stock company and later formed his own company, writing and playing in various sketches.

He has appeared in or directed many of Vitagraph's most successful features made at the Western studio, including "God's Country and the Woman," "Money Magic," "Aladdin from Broadway," "Dead Shot Baker," "Billy Smoke" and "The Tenderfoot.'

HOBART HENLEY

HOBART HENLEY'S real fame as a director came when Frank J. Seng offered "Parentage" to state rights buyers. This picture, produced by Mr. Henley, had a myriad of human touches that brought smiles and tears. After joining Goldwyn Pictures Corporation he began to add to his reputation established by "Parentage." At the Goldwyn studio he has successfully directed Mae Marsh in at least five productions, her latest being

"All Woman." With the Goldwyn company, and particularly with Miss Marsh, Mr. Henley has again proven himself able to reproduce on the screen the little human incidents of everyday life that are so pleasing when brought into the photodrama.

So this is Mr. Henley's forte—the human touch. It is something not quite definable that every director strives for, but which few achieve. And this ability of Mr. Henley's immediately opens up the greatest opportunity for advertising and publicizing him in connection with the pictures of his direction. For short advertising phrases to catch the eye of the passerby, "The director who makes his pictures human," "The director with the Human Touch," or "The director who reflects life from the screen" could be used in connection with his name.

And, as the average motion picture fan knows a bit regarding personalities of the business, stories elaborating on these phrases would make interesting reading in the local papers. Also the fact that he has to date directed Mae Marsh ever since he joined the Goldwyn producing forces should be emphasized. Miss Marsh is one of the cleverest, if not the cleverest, star in the pictures today, and stress should be laid on the fact that under Mr. Henley's guiding hand she is giving further proof of that ability which sky-rocketed her to fame when first "The Birth of a Nation" made its appearance.

In connection with the opinion recently expressed by Mr. Henley to a NEWS representative that "Mae Marsh is the greatest star that we have," it is interesting to note that this director is the only man, except Griffith, to direct Miss Marsh in more than one picture, and though he takes pride in being selected to stage a Geraldine Farrar picture, he will undoubtedly be happy to return to work with Mae Marsh.

HARLEY KNOLES

HARLEY KNOLES, who has directed many of the World Film pictures, is considered by William A. Brady as a prize director. He was entrusted with supervision of the production of Mr. Brady's special feature, "Stolen Orders," and is at work now on the completion of another Brady special, a screen version of Louisa M. Alcott's widely read book, "Little Women." That the production of such a classic was entrusted to him seems to lay further proof on his ability.

Of interest in advertising him is the fact that he taught the World film child star, Madge Evans, the technique of the screen. He directed all of her recent pictures and her success is generally attributed to his careful and appreciative attention.

His talents, however, are not confined to the directing of a child star as his handling of "Stolen Orders" clearly proved. Further proof of his versatility will doubtless be set forth in the finished production of "Little Women." A story laying stress on the wide diversity of subjects he has produced would be a recommendation of the worth of any of his later pictures which you happen to be playing.

Particular mention should be made of "Little Women" in connection with his name as this, and its companion books by Mrs. Alcott are extensively read by the younger generation.

Mr. Knoles was born in Rotherham, England, and was educated at Cambridge University, one of the best known institutions of learning in the world. A story regarding his education there as well as his training as dramatic director for Liebler & Company would be in good form, especially when it is considered that few directors have brought to the screen the extensive knowledge acquired by Mr. Knoles, both at the university and as stage director.

FRANK LLOYD

FRANK LLOYD is one of the foremost directors in the business. Recently, in fact, for the past year and a half, he has been working for the Fox Company, and here he has turned out some of the most magnificant samples of the photographic art that the trade has seen. His two ranking successes were "Les Miserables" and "A Tale of Two Cities," both special features starring William Farnum.

He is a master of detail, able to handle mobs and produce spectacular effects realistically, obviously from the accuracy of the two pictures mentioned; he is a thorough historian and above all possessed with a complete knowledge of his art.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

PLAYERS

IN arranging the biographies of players for insertion in the next MOTION PICTURE STUDIO DIRECTORY, it is the desire to have them as nearly correct as possible.

We do not need to recall the fact that your biography appears yearly at absolutely no expense to you. All that is asked in return is your co-operation in keeping it up-to-date. Mail us a list now of the pictures you have appeared in since the 1918 edition was published.

It costs you nothing—but helps you inestimably.

Geraldine Farrar has had a grand piano installed in her dressing room at the Goldwyn studio, at which she amuses herself between scenes. There are those who would be willing to become extras for the chance of hearing that voice echoing down the studio corridors.

Mabel Normand had a studio tea-party one noon, not long ago, at which she served a spice-tea made from dried twigs presented to her for such a purpose, by friendly mountaineers met on location down in the Blue Ridge Mountains while filming her latest picture, "Back to the Woods."

An analysis of Reginald Barker, sent from the Goldwyn editorial office, credits his success in directing to his method, which lacks all affectation and changeableness. As a result, he always succeeds in imparting quickly and thoroughly what he desires to have his players transfer to the screen.

In "Friend Husband" there are one thousand four hundred and sixty-five Madge Kennedy smiles, which certainly means that she has more than "the fifty-seven varieties" at her command.

Leah Baird was given an elaborate birthday dinner last week by the members of the company producing the serial in which she is starred. In addition to the wives of the hosts, Betty Howe and Sheldon Lewis were present.

Because the locale of "One Dollar Bid" demanded it, Lois Wilson had to ride side-saddle in this picture. She was philosophical about it and found a thrill or two in trying the hurdles sitting as she had never sat before.

According to Paralta Plays, Inc., publicity, there are two classes of directors, the silk-shirted, platinum-cuff-linked, white-trousered variety and the knickerbocker putteed, soft collared variety. Howard Hickman, who has just become a director, has committed himself irrevocably to the former class as he began his first picture on a blazingly hot day.

Robert Vignola is vieing with executive officers of producing companies in number of cross-continent trips. He recently went West to direct one picture for Clara Kimball Young. He finished it, and was hurriedly summoned East to direct Billie Burke. He got back as far as Albany, N. Y., and was recalled to Hollywood to direct Ethel Clayton in her first Paramount picture.

Frank Crane turned a portion of Amagansett, L. I., into the Sahara Desert for Kitty Gordon's picture, "The Unveiling Hand." Much sand, fifteen horses and four camels added to the illusion.

Betty Howe, whose most receent release is "To Hell With the Kaiser," and who is now working in the Leah Baird serial, is the daughter of the well-known newspaper man, Jack Howe. As the younger sister in the former picture she plays an unforgetable part.

The subtlety of Lawrence Grant's portrayal of the Kaiser in the recent Metro war picture will be appreciated by those who deemand something more than a clever make-up in a Kaiser. Study, thought and exact knowledge are back of Mr. Grant's impersonation.

John P. Wade, now appearing throughout the country on the screen in "The Eagle's Eye," has made a hit in the new Empey stage play, "Pack Up Your Troubles," as the negro mule driver.

As Tom Moore was once a director himself, he is a much better appraiser of scenarios than the average actor. He knows not only what reads well, but what films well, and declares that in his first starring vehicle for Goldwyn, "Just For To-Night," he has a real "find."

What more fitting than that Marguerite Courtot, heroine of the big Edison war picture, "The Unbeliever," should have adopted a battery of gunners. These men, members of the 126th F. A. U. S. N. G., are now in France, but hear from Miss Courtot as regularly as when they were at Camp Merritt.

Stanley Olmsted, Vitagraph scenario writer, arranged the scenario for the O. Henry picture recently shown at the Rivoli. Mr. Olmsted has written an original scenario, "The False Dawn," which is soon to be filmed by Vitagraph, with Betty Blythe and Harry Morey. The scenes are laid down in the mountains of North Carolina, where Mr. Olmsted was born.

Betty Howe Made the Little Sister In "To. Hell With the Kaiser," a Person Not Soon to Be Forgotten

Betty Blythe wears a gown in "The Green God" that is going to cause "ohs" and "ahs" of admiration. It is completely made of shimmering, undulating crystal bead fringe.

Arthur Donaldson portrays a collector of curios in "The Green God." His library in the picture is a fascinating room in which cases with real carved ivories and jades are displayed.

Bernard Siegel is a character man who has been doing some splendid character portrayal quite unheralded in various recent pictures. In "The Green God," Vitagraph, he plays the part of a Chinaman with the uncanny impassivity of a true Oriental.

George Majeroni, the villain of "The Green God," the new Harry Morey-Betty Blythe picture, came over from Australia on his first trip to the United States, with Paul Scardon, who is directing the picture.

Rose Schulsinger has resigned from the Publicity Department of World Films to become personal representative to George D. Grundy, who has turned his newly-acquired Lexington theatre into a picture house. Miss Schulsinger will also handle general publicity for players at her office in the Times Building.

Mel S. Forrester has returned to this country from France, where he was in active service with the Canadian troops. He was formerly a Universal director on the West Coast.

Bradley Barker, despite all reports, has not left for the coast yet but has been busy down on Thirty-eighth street in the Bacon-Backer studio, supporting Mary Boland in an as yet untitled picture.

Ralph Ince and Huntley Gordon have made such good use of their week-ends that they have captured the tennis championship of Bayshore and Brightwaters. They are director and leading man, at the present time, for Ethel Barrymore in "Our Mrs. McChesney."

Wally Wolheim is trying his hand at a different side of the game. He is assisting Ralph Ince for Metro in directing "Our Mrs. McChesney." His portrayal of the factory foreman in Ethel Barrymore's last Metro picture, "The Eternal Mother," is remembered by everyone who saw the picture.

Ricca Allen, as the gaily bedecked Miss Stitch, in "Our Mrs. McChesney," furnishes a clever character comedy part with make-up, costume, and manners exaggerated to just the right degree.

It sounds as if "Five Thousand an Hour" is just the right vehicle for Hale Hamilton's spontaneous care-free self. It will mean his first appearance as a Metro star. Though he has had a splendid career on the legitimate stage and is known all over the world for his success in "Get Rich Quick Wallingford," he has appeared in only two pictures, "The Winning of Beatrice" and "Opportunity." If he becomes as popular with the fans as he is with the studio people, his success in pictures is assured.

Ruth Roland, star of "Hands Up," just won a prize of $300, from a New York fashion magazine, for the design of a riding habit. She was a good sport and turned over the check to Fannie Ward for her Convalescent Soldiers' Hospital.

Wilfred Lytell feels quite at home working under the direction of Ralph Ince in the new Ethel Barrymore picture, as he worked with Mr. Ince for quite a time when the latter had his own studio in connection with Vitagraph. He appeared in "The Destroyer," "The Conflict," "The Lily and the Rose" and many others.

Frank Currier tells with great glee, the fun he had on the Fourth of July, with an imitation giant firecracker which he would place in front of a machine or a group of people, light it and run. A tiny pop would be the result, to the disgust of the onlookers. Further proof of the joie de vivre in this splendid character man whose most recent appearance is in "To Hell with the Kaiser."

John Ince, one of the three Ince brothers, is about to begin on "Secret Strings," the first Metro picture in which Olive Tell will be starred.

George Trimble has put into "Our Mrs. McChesney," all the force and breeziness of his big personality. He handles the well-known petticoat situation as if born "in the trade."

Leander DeCordova has proved the advantages of a Shakespearian training by assuming, with the greatest ease, the reins of studio manager at the Metro studio, while David Thompson is sojourning up at Biograph with the Metro companies now working there.

EXHIBITORS

THESE short items are just the sort that your local photoplay editor wants and will use. They are newsy—not press bunk. Used rightly they will create real personal interest in the players appearing at your theatre. Clip items referring to players on your program, turn them over to your newspaper for use from time to time, and there will be double value in your later publicity on particular pictures in which these players star or appear.

"Les Miserables" and "A Tale of Two Cities" have been exhibited so extensively that one or both of them should be mentioned in advertising future releases directed by Mr. Lloyd.

In the opinion of many critics he is one of the big directors in the field today, and judging from reports he is rapidly becoming a figure prominent in the world of fans.

Mr. Lloyd's initial step in pictures was taken when he joined Otis Turner's old Universal company which made pictures for the Rex brand. He played heavies with this outfit for a long time before he took charge of production activities, when Mr. Turner was absent from the company for a few weeks. His work was instantly successful. From here he went to the Pallas-Paramount company where after producing a successful series of pictures he joined the Fox forces.

STUART PATON

STUART PATON was one of the first men who turned his hand to the production of motion pictures, joining the Universal company in the early days of its development as scenario editor and assistant director. His best known picture to date is perhaps the special feature, "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which was based on a work of Jules Verne. One of the most successful Universal serials, "The Gray Ghost," was also directed by Mr. Paton.

In heralding his future and present pictures it would be well to call attention to these two pictures as they were well advertised and extensively circulated throughout the country.

The fact that he was one of the first directors in the business is also worthy of note. Mr. Paton was born in Glasgow, Scotland. His early career was as a chemist and painter. He was on the London stage six years, appearing before both King Edward and King George in various plays.

G. HAROLD PERCIVAL

THE ART director in the picture studio is only just beginning to earn recognition. That recognition has been long coming and long deserved. All the better companies employ men acquainted with the various styles of architecture and interior decorating to plan in detail and supervise the construction of the settings.

G. Harold Percival, in charge of this end of the production department of the Thomas H. Ince pictures is one of the best. This can be easily proven by any of the Ince pictures, particularly those with a number of interior settings. Ince's pictures are known for their splendid settings, the tone of richness which pervades them and the perfection of detail. This is the work of Mr. Percival.

What with star, director and author to advertise, the exhibitor has small space to devote to the art director save in newspaper stories. But here there is plenty of room for such a personality to be elaborated upon. It offers something new for the photoplay page, something which thinking devotees of the photodrama will peruse with interest.

A biography of Mr. Percival, or his opinion on the art of set construction, is easily procurable from either the Ince studio on the coast or the Paramount Pictures Corporation publicity department in the east and could be run at any time during the showing of one of the Ince pictures, with a line or so of introduction to tie the article up with the showing of the picture.

LYNN REYNOLDS

LYNN FAIRFIELD REYNOLDS, who has completed four Fox plays starring Tom Mix, is to continue as director for Mix, according to arrangements now completed and already a series of stories have been arranged for these productions.

Under the direction of Reynolds, the Fox Western star has been doing the best work of his career, as is shown in such subjects as "Western Blood," "Ace High," and "Fame and Fortune." The film now in production is "Mysterious Logan," which will be completed within the next few days, and then work will be taken up on the making of an adaptation from the book by Charles Alden Selzer titled "The Two Gun Man." This subject will be released under another title yet to be selected.

Reynolds for more than two years has specialized on pictures having a greater portion of out-of-door scenes, and his experience thus gained makes him the ideal director for Western subjects.

Previous to his present affiliation, Reynolds directed for Universal and Triangle, and his "God's Crucible," filmed in the Grand Canyon of Arizona for the Bluebird program, and "The Gown of Destiny," a Triangle contribution to the film world, stand as excellent examples of his ability to not only direct, but write for the screen.

Reynolds has surrounded Mix with a company of players specially qualified for Western pictures, and the list includes Jack Curtis, Val Paul, Maude Emory, and a number of expert Western horsemen, together with Kathleen Connors, who has played leading woman parts in the last two subjects filmed.

PAUL SCARDON

IN BRINGING the name of Director Paul Scardon before the attention of your patrons, play up the fact that when he is the guiding spirit behind a production, the picture is bound to be rich in atmosphere, the characters are bound to be true to type and the best that is in the actors and actresses portraying the roles, is accentuated. Director Scardon has had years of experience behind the footlights, before the camera and behind the megaphone. He knows every angle of the game from star to finish and because of his long experience on the speaking stage he has an intimate knowledge of what the public wants and how they want it served.

All this he instills in the minds of those whom he is directing for the photodrama. He feels that part they are interpreting and knows how to convey this thought to the one under his direction. Mr. Scardon has directed Harry Morey, Vitagraph's most brilliant male star, for the most of his biggest successes on the screen. For a long time he directed Earle Williams, Grace Darmond and Corrinne Griffith.

His strong points are, first: getting the most out of an actor or actress in his charge; second, getting the proper atsmosphere for his productions; third, making a minor part stand out in a picture with the same relative value as the leading role. Bring out the fact that Director Scardon was for a long time, interpreting principal parts on the speaking stage. This fact alone is sufficient to stamp him eligible for position in the front rank of motion picture directors. His latest productions for Vitagraph are "The Golden Goal," featuring Harry Morey, and "The Bachelor's Children," featuring Mr. Morey.

LE ROY STONE

IT is no secret that one of the most important departments in picture production is that conducted by the film editor. With respect to a brand of pictures such as those produced by Thomas H, Ince, noted for their even excellence, the film editor plays a role of vast importance. Le Roy Stone, in charge of editing and cutting all the features produced by Ince's directors, can justly claim credit for at least a good portion of this excellence, which is always to be noted in Ince features. They possess that snap and precision that are brought to the film by the skill of the editor.

It has often been said that the editor can "make or break" a feature and certainly Mr. Stone has never "broken." This branch of the production business, specially in regard to Mr. Stone and his activities with the Ince pictures, offers a fertile field for the press agent which should not be overlooked.

TRAVERS VALE

TRAVERS VALE, director for the World Film Corporation, has long been in the employ of this concern. Some of his best known pictures are "The Madness of Helen," "The Bondage of Fear," "A Self-Made Widow," "Betsy Ross" and "The Dormant Power." Lately he has completed "The Love Wraith," "Heredity" and "The Woman of Redemption."

Before joining the World forces, Mr. Vale was with a number of other pictures companies, including Biograph and Reliance. He was, in fact, one of the first to desert the stage and turn his activities to the production of pictures. His stage career was as a producer, playwright and actor. He produced and played the lead in such well-known successes as "Madame X" and "The Lion and the Mouse."

Stories concerning his activities on the stage and screen would make good reading. Stress should be laid on the fact that he has had vast experience in both the arts.

Member—M. P. D. A.

He was born in Liverpool, England, in 1865, and received his education in Australia, India and the United States. Here is another topic on which to dwell. His travels have taken him to so many different quarters of the globe that it may be said he is exceptionally well qualified to take charge of directing a picture. Next to a knowledge of things dramatic, extensive traveling benefits a motion picture director above all else. He may never know when he may be called upon to reproduce scenes of the most remote places of the earth in his pictures. That Mr. Vale is quite able to reproduce the atmosphere of one of the countries in which he has traveled is shown in the recent World picture "Vengeance," which had a considerable number of its scenes laid in India. This picture was noted for its correct detail in the matter of settings, costumes, etc.

Some of the stars directed by Mr. Vale are Montagu Love, Alice Brady, Ethel Clayton and June Elvidge.

JAMES YOUNG

JAMES YOUNG is one of the most artistic directors in the business. He commenced his career in the studio with the Vitagraph Company, where he produced Clara Kimball Young's earlier successes, including "My Official Wife." He also handled the pictures with this star which were produced for World Film. For Lasky he made "The Lash," "Oliver Twist," "Lost and Won," and for Essanay one of its most successful releases, "On Trial," adapted from the successful play of the same name.

FRANK BERESFORD

AMONG the men of the industry who are equipped to tackle any branch of picture production, Frank Beresford, scenario writer, editor, director and technical man, ranks high. He came to the screen after several years of association with Henry Irving, David Warfield and Maude Adams as actor and as stage director for Fritzi Scheff under the management of Charles Dillingham.

He was general technical director for the Universal studios in the East for some time and served in a similar capacity for Empire, All Star and Triangle.

BILLY CARR

AS is the case with the technical director, the assistant director seldom if ever receives public recognition. Even on the more pretentious and spectacular of picture productions his name is seldom mentioned. The Select Company has recently started the practice of printing the assistant's name on the leader.

Billy Carr, who has served with the Universal, Bosworth, Triangle and Essanay companies and under various directors, is one of these hard-working gentlemen who look after the detail of the production, too minute to come to the attention of the director, yet all important in contributing to the illusion created by the general scheme of things. Two of the pictures on which Mr. Carr worked were "The Dumb Girl of Portici" and "Honor Thy Name."

JACK CUNNINGHAM

JACK CUNNINGHAM is a prolific scenario writer. He has done everything from one reel burlesques to five-reel features of the most serious nature.

Mr. Cunningham entered the business, like many another scenario writer, through the newspaper game. He served first as publicity representative for several companies and then joined the scenario staff at Universal City, where for almost a year he prepared comedies for a cast the leads of which were William Franey and Gale Henry, who produced under the Joker brand.

From here he went to Triangle where he took charge of the scenario department for a time, and also wrote originals and made adaptations. He later joined the Paralta company, and from his desk in that studio turned out scenarios for a number of producing units.

Mr. Cunningham is making rapid strides toward the lime-light of scenario writing, and as he is in the business to stay, the exhibitor who looks ahead will give his name some prominence whenever it is attached to a picture of merit. In this way he will gradually become known to audiences and finally when they see his name displayed it will create that feeling of intimacy which goes such a long way toward establishing a steady and enthusiastic clientele.

PLAYERS

Points to Play Up in Advertising Interesting Points in Their Careers

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN

WITH stars of the calibre of Francis X. Bushman many exhibitors are prone to "let well enough alone," to count on the known popularity of the star to bring the business without extra work, while they expend their strongest advertising energies on the doubtful productions.

That this is a mistake and the opposite method the profitable one may be proven to their benefit by exhibitors who will decide now on a Bushman campaign for the late summer months and coming fall season. In fact, there are few stars whose recent and coming productions will lend themselves so strongly to a theatre-tonic campaign as will Francis Bushman.

For example, it is generally conceded that such recent Bushman productions as "The Voice of Conscience," "Red, White and Blue Blood" and "With Neatness and Dispatch" have brought to the screen some of the best work of that star's career. MOTION PICTURE NEWS box office reports would indicate that they have not failed to give satisfaction anywhere.

Here, then, is the foundation for a campaign certain to bring results. It may first be taken as a guide in booking, for without violating confidence it may be stated that the star is giving the closest personal attention to the selection of his vehicles to insure the future being up to this standard. Thus, if patrons in your house or your town liked these Bushman productions—play them up strongly, use them as a guarantee of satisfaction when next you show a Bushman picture.

Granting that the announcement of a Bushman picture assures a certain attendance at your house, this cumulative advertising gaining from picture to picture is the sort that adds new fans to that star's following, attendance that you may bank on getting without fail every time that star appears.

So get busy on this tip—start a Bushman campaign now based on his recent corking productions and thus cash in to even greater advantage on the big things coming.

BABY MARIE OSBORNE

BABY MARIE OSBORNE, the Pathe star, is one of the few film luminaries who has her own producing company, the Diando. She has two directors and two cameramen. She is surrounded by a strong company of notable film players and yet this little star has just passed her sixth birthday.

For more than a year little Miss Osborne has been the head of this beautiful studio located in Glendale, where she has been making five-reel features for Pathe. Despite this remarkable success, Baby Marie is unspoiled and is a very lovable youngster. She is just a sweet, natural little child and enjoys the same pleasures as other little children her same age.

Two years ago Baby Marie, just a fat little chubby youngster, appeared in a five-reel feature for Pathe. It was the first time a child had been starred in a five-reel production. It was called "Little Mary Sunshine," and the success of the picture is past history. It made a barrel of money and repeated bookings were necessary in nearly every theatre where it was shown.

As a result of the tremendous popularity gained by Baby Marie in this picture, and owing to the demands of exhibitors for similar pictures, a company was organized to produce Baby Marie Osborne features.

More than a dozen of these pictures have been made, each one growing in popularity. W. A. S. Douglas, president of the Diando Film Corporation, attributes the success of these pictures to the unique personality of his little star.

"She is truly a wonderful child," said Mr. Douglas. "Nowhere is there another child with the physical and mental resources capable of sustaining a five-reel story like a veteran of the stage, never overplaying or underacting but registering her part in a plain natural childish manner. It is not merely wonderfully attractive baby face, in which all the emotions, from happiness to

There is a refreshing wholesomeness that is characteristic of every one of her pictures, a simplicity that is charming, an atmosphere of sunshine, joy and optimism that is delightful. Photoplay fans are quick to realize this charm of "Baby" pictures and their attendance at the theatres on Baby Marie Osborne nights is sufficient demonstration to show that Baby Marie Osborne has won a place in their hearts.

Baby's most recent releases are "Daddy's Girl," "Cupid by Proxy," "Milady of the Beanstalk," "Dolly Does Her Bit," "Dolly's Vacation" and "The Voice of Destiny."

FLORENCE DESHON

A POINT to be brought out strongly in the advertising of Florence Deshon is that embodied in the phrase "Dramatic Beauty." There are many beauties on the screen, there are many actresses possessing dramatic ability, but Miss Deshon earns the combination description "dramatic beauty," that should be taken advantage of in your advertising.

Another point to be played up strong is the success achieved by Miss Deshon in the screen production of Rex Beach's "The Auction Block." Aside from the hit that this picture scored wherever shown, there is value to your publicity on this point, there is value in your publicity regarding it, even if the picture has not shown in your section, for the name of Rex Beach and his best remembered novel, "The Auction Block," carry strong prestige.

Coming to more recent productions in which Miss Deshon has played prominent roles, your patrons will, of course, be whetted by publicity on Vitagraph's "The Golden Goal" and "The Other Man," in which she shared honors with the star, Harry Morey.

Many exhibitors have found that no mean success attends the advertising of players seen in the "heavy" roles, and especially in cases where the publicity is backed by beauty such as Miss Deshon boasts does it become a simple matter to create a following that will keep a close eye on each appearance of its favorite.

Further than this, in advertising Miss Deshon exhibitors should bring out the fact that her art has the official O. K. of David Belasco, who cast her in his Broadway success, "Seven Chances." The David Belasco stamp of approval is an asset that should not be forgotten.

JUNE ELVIDGE

JUNE ELVIDGE, one of the World Film stars, is of a type not at all common on the screen. The ways of the becurled ingenue are not hers. She represents a more vital, firmer type of womanhood. The majority of her parts show her as a strong-minded, dominating young woman.

Here, it appears, lies the key to the advertising lines along which an exhibitor might follow in presenting her pictures to his public. Play up this very fact that Miss Elvidge always offers a change from the usual picture heroine. Both in advertising and publicity, this idea should be driven home forcefully, for there are many patrons of the screen who tire of a steady diet of kittenish ingenues.

Miss Elvidge has been seen in World pictures for the last two years, joining the company after the close of the stage production, "The Passing Show of 1914," one of the annual shows of the New York Winter Garden. She has appeared with signal success in "The Eleventh Hour," "Who Is Sylvia?" "The Page Mystery," "The Price of Pride," "The Crimson Dove," "The Marriage Market" and "Rasputin, the Black Monk."

Her recent appearances were in "Stolen Orders," the Brady special, a derivation of the famous melodrama, "Sealed Orders," in which she is one of the star cast, "Redemption," "Heredity" and "The Power and the Glory."

ANNA LUTHER

ANNA LUTHER is one of the younger actresses now playing leading roles, whose experience has been confined to the screen with no previous career on the stage. Perhaps her most widely advertised picture was "Moral Suicide," in which she played the daughter to John Mason's father and co-starred. She starred in the General Film release "Her Moment." She is a featured lead and is known for her great beauty and emotional talent.

It would be well for exhibitors to herald her as one of the younger screen stars who is rapidly climbing in popularity. Her great beauty, sincerity and emotional ability are big assets. Attention might be called to her work, particularly in "Moral Suicide," which marked the beginning of her starring career. She could be advertised as the "young emotional actress who bears careful watching," owing to the big strides she has made in her early appearances on the screen. She is without doubt one of the prettiest leading women on the screen today, a fact which should by no means be kept from the patrons of your theatre.

For personality stories regarding her, interviews with her stating that a stage training is by no means imperative for a screen star could be concocted. The fact that her hair is titian-colored affords some ground for stories and advertising stunts. A light story might be written along the lines of a complaint from Miss Luther because the natural color of her hair does not show on the screen. She photographs a brunette sometimes. Then there is the old gag of allowing all titian-haired ladies free admission to the theatre while her picture is shown.

R. WILLIAM NEILL

ONE of the most capable directors who has received his tutelage under Thomas H. Ince, is R. William Neill, who has directed all of Dorothy Dalton's Paramount pictures and who bids fair to continue to do so, owing to the great success he has had thus far.

Mr. Neill is known for his attention to the most minute details, his skill in deriving the most from any dramatic situation that the scenario writer may incorporate in his script, and his ability to get the most from the players working under his direction.

As all of the latter Dorothy Dalton pictures have borne his name as director, it would be well to call attention to this when another of his productions is booked. If it is another Dalton picture, run a line in the advertising saying, "Directed by R. William Neill who was responsible for the ———," inserting the name of the last Dalton picture which was played at your house.

Nothing serves to popularize a director further than his steady handling of one star. This Mr. Neill has done and with results can not be termed anything but advantageous.

Before directing for Mr. Ince he served the usual apprenticeship that any director goes through at this studio, one of his early jobs being assistant to Raymond West on the Ince spectacle "Civilization." He had an extensive experience on the legitimate stage before entering the studio, having both acted and written plays.

EDDIE LYONS AND LEE MORAN

LONG before pictures attained their present degree of popularity Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were making comedies for the Universal program under the old Nestor brand. There is hardly a picture "team" today that is so well known. As in vaudeville, they have reached the top of the ladder, they are on the "big time," always welcome.

The style of comedy they patronize is something about midway between the slapstick and the polite. They combine the burlesque of the one with the realism of the other. And speed is always a dominating factor in their productions. Speed, pep, zip or whatever you will.

Lyons and Moran have been doing the "brother" act so long that it is entirely natural that they have gained immense popularity. The trouble is that many exhibitors rarely seem to grasp the advertising possibilities in a one or two-reel offering. While they naturally do not have to give prior position on the bill to the comedy, whenever a Lyons-Moran issue comes along it is overlooking extra business if their names are not displayed.

For lobby advertising, where the full bill is given, it would be a good idea to recount the program in the usual style and bring the Lyons-Moran comedy in after an emphatic "and."

In localities where their pictures have been shown with regularity, follow the "and" with something like "Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in another of their rollicking comedy concoctions."

Or where the public is not well acquainted with them, some sort of line disclosing the fact that you have a real comedy "feature" in short length should be appended, such as "with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, a comedy team you should become acquainted with if you haven't already had an introduction."

The fact that their comedy is something quite different from anything else on the market should be taken into consideration. Because here is a production that can be praised as original and inimitable without fear of any come back other than thanks.

Moran's various eccentric makeups and characterizations and Lyons' pleasing interpretations of juveniles, together with the fact that they always secure a pretty ingenue for the other angle of the comedy triangle form a comedy bulwark upon which even the most pessimistic may hurl themselves with every effort to remain sour—only to fail and burst out laughing.

WILLIAM S. HART

EVERYONE at all acquainted with the screen is acquainted with William S. Hart.

As an interpreter of western roles he has no superiors, no equals.

The mention of his name is sufficient to disclose the type of picture.

It means a strong photoplay, done in bold, sweeping strokes. Something possessing the true spirit of the west of the past or the northwest of the present.

It means a characterization such as only William S. Hart can give. A characterization, dominating, yet sympathetic, rough but lovable. A characterization that makes everyone feel free to drop the William S. and call him Bill.

It means vast, magnificent scenes of virgin land—the plains, the forest or the snows.

It means the creation of an illusion so primitive, so decidedly convention-free that it makes one forget the dull cares of a business routine.

It means photographic magnificence.

It means a story that drops petty quibbling, superficial situations and centers upon man-sized problems that are dealt with by a man-sized man.

It means excitement, thrills, red-blooded action.

It means emotions that are unrestrained as the wind, emotions which when they conflict create the same sort of dramatic action that is created on the battlefield.

It means true, honest fighting, with the right pitted against the wrong till the bitter end.

It means the love of a man for a woman that is as fast as the mountains.

It means the picturization of a rugged life that all of us envy, though fear.

It means, in short, a picture as full of color as a portrait, as full of human interest as life, as full of drama as the world.

MAY ALLISON

MAY ALLISON'S rare beauty and sincerity of manner combine to make her one of the most beloved of the younger stars of the screen, and it is these qualities which make her especially desirable as a box-office attraction.

Miss Allison has what James Barrie describes as "charm," elusive, indescribable, it is what has endeared her to countless thousands of devotees; and what is more, she is as real, as lovable to them in the shadow as she is in the flesh to friends and those who surround her, for she has the ability to convey her charm through the medium of the screen.

Miss Allison has but recently become a star in her own right under the Metro banner, although she has been long associated with the company as a featured player. She is now at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood, working in her fourth production as a star in her own right, "The Return of Mary," in which the stellar role gives ample opportunity for the display of her winning personality and pervasive charm.

Prior to her departure from the East, Miss Allison did "Social Hypocrites," "The Winning of Beatrice," and "The Successful Adventure." Her work in each of these is of such high caliber that it would be profitable to refer to them in advertising and program matter.

WHAT MAKES FOR PERFECT PRODUCTION

By William Worthington
Director for Sessue Hayakawa

Music and the stage have been close to me all my life. To obtain, therefore, the most satisfactory results for the screen I have found that there must be absolute harmony—a perfect bond of understanding—between the actor and the director.

I believe in thorough advance preparation of the story, so that the essence it contains may be advantageously used to the very last drop.

When the picture finally is produced the music accompanying it should be interpretative to the highest degree. It should of necessity, then, be composed by one who has a thorough understanding of operatic production in which there is a world of meaning in the emotion expressed by the music.

Combine this perfect interpretation of the music with a story of unusual merit, a competent cast, artistic photography and attractive settings, and there cannot be any doubt of an A1 production.

Let us have fewer titles and briefer titles at that. We must have a keener regard for the intelligence of the audience. That audience neither wants nor does it need a liberal quantity of titles.

Now, as to the exhibitor: In a nutshell, he must exploit the picture in a dignified and pleasing manner.

Uniform lighting in his projection is essential. Intelligent judgment of tempo is highly important. And, last but by no means least, is his music—appropriate and of high class—which must be rendered in such manner that it synchronizes with every scene thrown upon the screen.

Before her advent into pictures, Miss Allison's beauty and charm had won her an enviable place on the stage. She attracted universal attention in the role of "Beauty" in "Everywoman," and, as an evidence of her versatility, scored an overwhelming success in the prima donna role in "The Quaker Girl." These two successes established her in a place secure in the realm of the make-believe.

Miss Allison embarked upon her screen career with the Famous Players Co., for which she did one picture. Next she appeared in a Lasky production, and then was featured by the American. From the American, she went to the Yorke-Metro, sharing stellar honors with Harold Lockwood in a number of successful screen productions.

The "River of Romance" is still regarded as exemplary of Miss Allison's most delightful work. She is also remembered for her charm in "The Come-Back," "Pidgin Island," "Mister 44," and "Big Tremaine."

A native of Georgia, Miss Allison embodies all the loveliness of the Southland's beautiful girls. Her greatest asset, however, is her personality, which is of the essence of all that is sweet and genuine in young American womanhood.

ORA CAREW

ORA CAREW was one of the first beauties Mack Sennett secured to make prettier his famous comedies. She appeared in many of his successful Keystone releases, among them "Oriental Love," "Skidding Hearts" and "Her Circus Knight."

As Mack Sennett's beauties are becoming as well known as are Mr. Ziegfeld's in New York and the other large cities, she could be advertised as one of them in her future appearances.

She preceded her motion picture career with five years in stock, musical comedy and vaudeville.

BETTY COMPSON

BETTY Compson, who gained popularity as a member of Al Christie's comedy company, with which she played leads in a great number of pictures, is now at work playing the feminine lead in a serial being produced by the Diando company for the Pathe exchange.

Miss Compson combines that beauty which is such an essential requisite for comediennes of the Christie type of comedy with a rare grace and ready perception that led the Diando company to select her for the leading woman in its first serial.

For advertising ideas play up the fact that she began her picture career in comedy and showed such ease of expression that she was summoned to portray this more difficult role when the Diando company ended its search for a suitable serial lead.

KATHLYN CONNORS

KATHLYN CONNORS, who is at present playing opposite Tom Mix in Fox western subjects, has come to the fore recently as one of the daring actresses on the films. In addition she is possessed of a pleasing personality, a pretty face and a knowledge of her art that gives color to every one of her performances.

In Mr. Mix's new picture which is at present entitled "Mysterious Logan," Miss Connors performed one of the most hazardous feats of her career when she was rescued by the star from a ledge on the side of a mountain two thousand feet in height.

This fact might serve to popularize Miss Connors with any local fandom, and she can well be advertised as an actress never afraid to take a chance.

CHARLES RAY

EVER since Charles Ray vaulted to fame over night in the juvenile role of "The Coward," one of the first Tringle-Ince pictures which featured Frank Keenan, he has been a valuable box office attraction.

It is unnecessary to remind the thinking exhibitor of this, for in the majority of houses playing pictures in which he appears, the title is usually given second place or sometimes left unmentioned, while the name Charles Ray appears in big electric lights or type.

Charles Ray is a juvenile. He plays the youth standing on the threshold of manhood. So if his value is still to be observed by

CHESTER WITHEY

AMONG the many directors who worked under D. W. Griffith with the old Fine Arts company, Chester Withey is regarded both by critics of and Mr. Griffith himself as a most apt pupil of his art. That Mr. Griffith himself has unbounded faith in Mr. Withey is evidenced by the fact that following his (Griffith's) completion of "Hearts of the World" in California, he called him in to produce another picture, not yet titled which will be released in the fall by the Paramount company. This is enacted by the same stars who appeared in the big war spectacle.

Mr. Withey is now working with the Paramount people in the Famous Players studio in the East where he has finished "On the Quiet" with John Barrymore and "The Love Chase" with Billie Burke. That Paramount, too, has faith in his ability is shown by its act in entrusting two of its biggest stars to his direction.

In press stories it might be mentioned that Mr. Withey received his early training with Mr. Griffiths, but since this time he has gained a big reputation on his own merits and when his pictures are played, his name of itself carries the guarantee of quality and perfection in production.

Much valuable publicity can also be derived from the fact that Mr. Withey commenced his career as an actor and scenario writer serving in these capacities in the early days of the Fine Arts company. Mr. Withey believes, as do many others of his art, that the best directors are those who have gained a thorough knowledge of all branches of production through practical experience.

Before joining the Fine Arts company he was with the American, Keystone and Reliance-Majestic companies. When he left Fine Arts he was secured by Goldwyn to produce one of the first Madge Kennedy pictures "Nearly Married." Some of his better known pictures which he produced for the Fine Arts-Triangle company are "Old Folks at Home," "The Wharf Rat," "Mr. Goode—the Samaritan," "The Bad Boy" and "Madame Bo-Peep."

some exhibitors, just try to think of another picture player who can look and act this same type of role. If you search long and carefully you may be able to find a few—a very few—less than five, who can both look and act the part.

Here is obviously the broadest avenue of advertising in connection with his pictures. Play him up as a real, live young man, portraying faithfully all the emotions which find response in a real, live young man. Steer clear of the catch-line which was first coined when he gained prominence, "Thomas Ince's Wonder Boy." This doesn't suggest Charles Ray at all. If catch-lines there must be give him one that implies youthful virility, enthusiasm and sincerity.

Undoubtedly he is the leader in his particular branch of the art. As William S. Hart leads in the portrayal of western characters, so Charles Ray leads in the portrayal of juvenile characters. Don't forget this. Superlatives can legitimately be used in this connection.

Give your advertising regarding him latitude. Don't chalk him down as a "famous impersonator of boob characters." This tends to give the intelligence that he clowns his part. Tell them that he is the "real young man," and then say something about the "boob," if you want to, because every real young man has more or less of the "boob" in him.

This idea could be incorporated in a newspaper story in the form of an interview. Bring out in it that Ray reflects from the screen the honest-to-goodness American youth and tell them about the "boob" stuff as a little comedy-human-interest touch. Such stories written intelligently are what editors want for feature photoplay stuff. It is something a little bit removed from the cut and dried.

Some of Ray's past successes are: "Sudden Jim," "The Son of His Father," "The Clodhopper," "His Mother's Boy" and "The Hired Man."

EARL MONTGOMERY AND JOSEPH ROCK

EARL MONTGOMERY and Joseph Rock, Vitagraph comedy team, have come into prominence during the past year with the production of the Big V comedies.

As their style of fun is the wild, knockabout, acrobatic daredevil type, a certain line of distinctive advertising presents itself. They take any sort of hazard and make all insurance agents turn tail and run.

Advertising built on this quality of their comedy pictures is sure of attracting attention. Let the people know that they are daredevils, let them know that they take chances just to create a sensational piece of fun.

Bill them as the "acrobats of the screen." Sensational billing corresponds with the sort of pictures they turn out and is very well justified. Herald them as a pair of dare devils never afraid to taka a chance, or if comedy billing is desired, fix up something like this:

"This comedy team, Montgomery and Rock, is never bothered by life insurance agents. Life insurance agents run away from them! If you don't want to be bothered by life insurance agents come in and learn the trick—if you can!" Or this:

"Montgomery and Rock aren't afraid of imitators. An imitator values his life so much that he can't exert his brain to devise something original. This pair don't value their lives, if falling off a house top and leaping chasms comes first."

Though they incorporate sensational stunts in their comedies, these two don't forget the comedy. Proof of this may be found in "Hired and Fired," "Stowaway and Strategy," "Jumbles and Jokers," "Peanuts and Politics," "Law-Makers and Jail Breakers" and "Flirts and Fakirs," a few of their Vitagraph releases, past and present.

DENTON VANE

THE "heavy" role is probably the most difficult to portray of all character parts and because of this there are only a few screen villains compared to the number of leading straight men.

Denton Vane, who is seen in many of Vitagraph's biggest features, is one of these villains. Not only does he portray the villain with ability, but he can carry the straight lead with equal effectiveness. His strong forte, however, is the screen villain.

Before entering pictures, Mr. Vane was seen for many seasons in stock, musical comedy and vaudeville. He has played in support of Ethel Barrymore and Blanche Bates and was casted in prominent character roles in many Broadway productions. In 1914, he entered pictures first with the old Kalem Company and then with Vitagraph, where he has been since early in the following year.

The exhibitor will find it worth while to advertise Mr. Vane. The screen villain always gives the proper melodramatic touch to the silent drama. His character is looked for by ninety per cent of your audience.

Denton Vane always delivers the goods. He has been under the direction of Paul Scardon and has been seen in the leading heavy role of many of Director Scardon's most successful productions for the Vitagraph program.

Some of his best performances have been given in "Apartment 29," featuring Earle Williams; "An Enemy to The King," "The Hawk," "Soldiers of Chance," "The Hillman," and just recently, "The Golden Goal," "Playing With Fate" and "Love Watches," his latest picture.

NILES WELCH

NILES WELCH is known as one of the screen's most skillful young stars. Patrons of his pictures perhaps remember him chiefly for his appearances in Metro's "Her Boy," a patriotic picture, in which he co-starred with Effie Shannon, playing the title part to Miss Shannon's mother, and in Goldwyn's "The Face in the Dark," when he appeared opposite Mae Marsh. In both these pictures, as in the majority of the others in which he has appeared, he impersonated the man in the early stages of life, so it would be well to advertise him with such lines as "The screen's most realistic young star," "The actor who is at once the skilled performer and the sincere youth," or "possessing the finish of years of training together with the freshness of youth."

During the past year Mr. Welch has played opposite some of the biggest stars in the business. Beside Miss Marsh he played with Norma Talmadge in Select's "Secret of the Storm Country," with Marguerite Clark in Paramount's "Miss George Washington" and was co-starred with Grace Darmond in the Technicolor offering, "The Gulf Between." A number of interesting items for the newspaper might be written regarding these several appearances. Mention of the fact that he has been lucky enough to draw such prize parts opposite all these popular feminine stars should be read with interest by picture fans in whatever locality. Special stories written on the topic—"Niles Welch—a leading man who has had the happy privilege of making love to Marguerite Clark, Mae Marsh, Norma Talmadge and Grace Darmond (on the screen)" would be interesting and light enough to give then a comedy twist. These would be perused with interest.

Another line to work on in connection with Mr. Welch could be derived from the mention in his biography of the fact that he has a college education, having been a student at Yale and Columbia universities. This fact opens a number of avenues for distinctive press stories. Mr. Welch plays every role that he undertakes with such polish, such finesse, that his success might be attributed to his thorough education as well as his long career in the studio. Attention could be drawn to his performances in the best known of his pictures, attention being brought to the fact that the skilled portrayals evince an unusual mentality, the result of extensive education. This is work for the press agent and should make interesting "Sunday" reading.

Although it has only been during the past year that Mr. Welch has risen to his present position of prominence, it could be noted that his picture experience began in the days when the Kalem Company was one of the regular producing units of the business. His rapid rise in the film world is further proven by the fact that he is to star alone in a picture now in production.

NIGEL DE BRULLIER

WHENEVER Nigel De Brullier is in the cast of a picture, it would be well to call attention to the fact that he played the role of the submarine captain in Rupert Julian's Jewel feature, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin." To date this is undoubtedly his greatest performance on the screen, and as this feature has had a wide circulation, the mention of his characterization of this important part will serve to give him a fixed place in the minds of an audience.

This role was one of the big ones in the feature and was excellently played by Mr. De Brullier. In the picture he was in command of the submarine which sank the Lusitania.

And when we say news, we mean a matter of real interest—not faked stories that do not even fool the reader. It was not so long ago that the studios did not allow anything to go out that even resembled news. There was a great fear less some inkling of truth, no matter how harmless, might hurt.

We recall that several years ago we wrote a general letter to all of the companies asking for full facts about the various players. The matter was for use in the news columns of a newspaper in one of our larger cities. Only two of the publicity men complied with the request in spirit. And when we asked the publicity men to say whether the players were married, their hands went straight up over their heads.

That sort of a thing has disappeared. The fan magazines have spread real facts, and the live motion picture departments of newspapers have printed this matter whether the publicity departments originally desired them to be published or not. There has been a remarkable growth in this desire of the producing companies to supply real news to the newspapers. But the player must remember that he, too, must do his share in putting the material before the manager and the newspaper man.

There is much material about many players' directors in following pages of this issue. Every manager and every photoplay editor should file them for ready reference. This is the sort of material that gives the theatre owner a chance to get the fullest amount of the sort of publicity that really counts.

Other service matter about the players is contained each week in "Newsy Items from the Studios."

And then, of course, there is the STUDIO DIRECTORY, the invaluable reference guide.

THIS brings up an incidental question. How many players try to capitalize their popularity in the sections in which they were born? How many managers try to take advantage of the fact that this or that star was born within a few hundred yards of their theatre?

Out of the mass of newspaper advertising that comes to our desk we seldom find any mention of the fact that the star is a native of the town or the state. It's a big point for the player, the producer and the theatre.

We know of one manager who attributes no little of the success of his theatre to giving attention to this very point. In one case he took a player who had ability but who was little known and made her one of the biggest drawing cards of his house by featuring her name in the advertising, together with the statement that she came from a nearby county, and to making sure that every item of news about her that he came across was printed in the local paper.

THIS girl came to be adopted as the favorite of that city. Long before she ever became a star she would draw crowds to the theatre, because the manager of the theatre first aroused the local interest by the announcement and reiteration of the fact that she was a local product and then by keeping her before the public by using every possible news item in the newspapers.

It was simply another case of playing personality to the utmost degree.

EXHIBITORS should try to get these personal paragraphs in the papers, without regard to mention of the theatre, for when the story is connected up with the individual house the news punch is lost and the interest of the public is diminished.

One newspaper runs a most interesting column of short news about the players, illustrated with a few half column cuts. The photoplay editor started this before he had the MOTION PICTURE STUDIO DIRECTORY for reference and he followed the plan of clipping every item of interest that he came across about various players and filing them in the proper envelope. Then when he came across a sentence of real news in the trade journals he used this fact and built up the story with some of the facts about the player that he had in his file. This was a case of thoroughness and the resulting matter was reading that every fan looked for each Sunday. After being used once the cuts were also filed and could be used again and again as occasion required.

Questions and Answers departments in the newspapers and the house programs are excellent for building up this personality interest.

ATTRACTIVE lobby photographs are essential for keeping up the interest in the players. Many exhibitors feel that an investment in pictures is waste of money. Many of them prefer to rent the set on each attraction, forgetting that by the time he gets them they are likely to be soiled or torn.

One of the most successful exhibitors in the country, and a man who has put over several so-called failures, makes it a point to collect every photograph of players that he can get. It is not mere hobby for him, but he puts every one of them to use. He has a standing order with the film companies whose pictures he shows for each of the new photographs of the various players.

In addition to this he buys a complete set of stills for lobby display on each picture. He uses them in the lobby in advance of and during the runs of the specific pictures, but he does not throw them away then. He makes cut-outs of the figures of the stars and other players and mounts them on heavy cardboard, having his house artist draw in a line giving the character that the actress plays and the name of the picture. A collection of these forms most interesting matter, and he uses them for special displays. You can imagine the interest with which the public will study a group of pictures showing how the star that is coming next week looked in some twenty or thirty past productions. It is the sort of lobby display that brings out the personality of the player.

On one occasion a company whose product this company was playing advanced a leading man to stardom very suddenly. Practically all of the material furnished the exhibitors in general was the set of stills on his first production, yet the man we mention had a lobby display that made every one stop by simply using the cut-outs that he had gathered.

Some newspapers have filing systems and keep the photos of the players; many do not, though exhibitors should encourage them to do so, but the theatre manager himself will find that he is often helped out of a hole in his publicity by retaining a complete file of photos.

PERSONALITY interest can also be increased through the letter system. It is an old but highly satisfactory plan to learn who are the favorite players of your patrons. Almost everyone has a series of favorites, and the manager will do well to keep a card filed showing the favorite, say, ten players of each patron. You will be surprised to find how many different players will be included in these lists. Then, of course, the plan followed is to send a letter announcing the coming of the favorite star to each person who is on that star's list. This not only centers the letter appeal on something definite, but it proves to the fan that you are keeping the interest in the patron.

And not with star alone can such a plan be followed, but there will come many chances for the exhibitor who watches his pictures and his own audiences. In a recent production there was a girl who appeared only in a flashback where she represents one of the chief characters as she looked in girlhood. We happened to be seated with a manager of a second-run house watching the picture. He declared that girl had in a single picture become one of the favorites with his audiences and that he meant to feature her in his advertising, his program and his letter announcements wherever she appeared in a picture that he had booked.

Some players do not always retain the full measure of their popularity and the wise manager keeps a close watch on his audiences and listens to their comments. When he hears a number of people talking about a certain player, even if the company is not playing up that name, he will do well to take advantage of the opportunity it is possible, of course, that it may be only a local popularity, but this is the sort of a thing that the local manager is looking for.

"I never allow my audiences to book my pictures," one manager told us, "but I do listen a great deal to what they say about the players. Personality is a wonderful thing and I want to get every advantage of it."

Books might be written on the various methods of bringing out the player appeal. But we have given only an outline of the suggestions. Make the most out of the personality of the players, if you are a theatre man. And if you are a player, try to see to it that the manager is kept informed about you and that he has material to use to keep up the public interest.

Who's Who and What to Advertise

REGINALD BARKER

FOR a long time Reginald Barker was one of the chief cogs in the Thomas H. Ince production system. His career with Ince had its inception six years ago when he forsook the business of play production to learn the making of pictures under Mr. Ince. With Ince's company, the New York Motion Picture Corporation, he was responsible for some of the greatest successes turned out, while his originality and initiative boosted many a player toward the stardom they now enjoy. For instance, he made the first pictures starring Sessue Hayakawa and Tsuri Aoki, "The Wrath of the Gods" and "The Typhoon." He directed "The Bargain," William S. Hart's first big success, while "The Coward" brought Charles Ray to the attention of critics throughout the country.

During the past year he has served as director for Paralta, producing, among others, "Madam Who?" with Bessie Barriscale, and "Carmen of the Klondike," with Clara Williams.

The general faith in his ability as a director has again been demonstrated only recently when he was signed by Goldwyn to produce this company's first picture with Geraldine Farrar. If such a thing was needed, this was the final seal that stamped his ability as a director—a director sure of gaining any effect, spectacular or minute.

Mr. Barker's work is so thoroughly excellent from every angle that it is rather difficult to single out any one of his accomplishments as being developed to a point of perfection beyond the others. He is one of the few directors whose very name on the leader implies an excellent picture to follow. So if the exhibitor desires to capitalize Barker's name to the benefit of his business it would be well to use a short, dignified line, such as "Directed by Reginald Barker, the man who started Hart and Ray on the path to stardom"—but this only until his name has come to mean to the general public what it now means to the motion picture trade. When this has been accomplished by advertising and publicity—if, indeed, it has not already been accomplished—his name will need no further embellishments of praise, and the four words "Directed by Reginald Barker" will suffice to herald the approach of a worth while photoplay.

Mr. Barker's stage career included associations with Robert Hilliard, Walker Whiteside, Olga Nethersole and Henry Miller.

JOHN EMERSON

JOHN EMERSON is one of the few directors whose name is as familiar to fandom as that of the big stars. Since he directed Douglas Fairbanks much well earned publicity has been circulated regarding his ability as a director of comedy and a writer of satire and farce. Innumerable articles have appeared in the fan magazines and the photoplay section of local newspapers in which his ability has been lauded, along with that of his collaborator in writing, Anita Loos. With the productions which he has just started making for the Paramount program, it certainly would be a mistake if his name were not mentioned in connection with the advertising. "John Emerson" has come to stand for insurance and guarantee of directorial perfection. A short and very apropros catch-line to be used in advertising his pictures, either of the past or of the months to come, would be "Directed by John Emerson—that's all you need to know." This would immediately suggest your faith in the merit of the production so advertised, and in those communities where his work is kindly remembered with respect to the Fairbanks pictures you will convince the people that you are aware of the truth of what you say.

His pictures include some of the most successful Fairbanks productions released on the Fine Arts and Artcraft programs. "His Picture in the Papers," "The Americano," "In Again, Out Again," "Wild and Wooly," "Down to Earth" and "Reaching for the Moon" are perhaps the best known. It would be a good idea to mention Mr. Emerson's success with the Fairbanks series in heralding his further productions. He has just completed "Come On In" with the new Paramount stars, Ernest Truex and Shirley Mason, and on this as well as others it should be recalled that the combined efforts of John Emerson and Anita Loos are responsible for it.

The printing of the bare facts of Mr. Emerson's biography makes interesting reading for picture followers. After an education at Oberlin College and the University of Chicago he entered upon his stage career. He joined Mrs. Fiske's company and was subsequently stage director for the Shuberts for four years. He played leads with Mme. Nazimova and for four years was general stage director for Charles Frohman. For two years he starred in his own play, "The Conspiracy." Then came his entrance into pictures with the Famous Players Company as an actor and then his career as director with the Fine Arts and the Fairbanks companies. Before starting the Emerson-Loos series for Paramount Mr. Emerson collaborated on the scenarios for Billie Burke's picture, "Let's Get a Divorce"; for the George M. Cohan-Artcraft release, "Hit the Trail Holliday," and Fred Stone's first Artcraft picture, "Under the Top," his co-worker in both instances being Miss Loos.

In addition to his regular five-reel releases, Mr. Emerson produced the eight-reel feature, "Macbeth," with Sir Herbert Tree.

MARGARITA FISHER

MARGARITA FISHER, whose career on the screen extends back to the original Selig Company, and who later helped materially to popularize the American Beauty brand of films on the Mutual program, is known as an actress of unusual vitality and vigor. Many of her characterizations contain that mixture of tomboyishness and delightful femininity which, thoroughly charming that it is, goes to make her work distinctly individual.

Miss Fisher has a very large following throughout the country, a following that has assembled steadily as a result of the many productions in which she has appeared, and the type of role she generally patronizes.

It is this type of part which appears to offer the best means of distinctive advertising to be used in connection with her appearances. Let the people know what a refreshing actress Miss Fisher is, bringing out the fact that she seems to typify the young womanhood of the present day, the type that has a strength and vitality that makes it a prominent figure in all branches of society.

You might fix up a line reading something like: "———— starring Margarita Fisher, a distinctively individual actress. Her acting extends beyond the limits prescribed by the golden-haired, becurled ingenue. She is vital, living, breathing, and holds her own so firmly as ———— that she delights every minute of the way."

Not that it is necessary to condemn the usual ingenue, but merely because everyone likes a change now and then. Some of Miss Fisher's pictures: "Molly, Go Get 'Em," "Miss Jackie of the Navy," "A Daughter of Joan" and "Doing Her Bit."

BERT LYTELL

AS soon as Herbert Brenon's production, "The Lone Wolf," was released Bert Lytell was made a picture star. He combines good looks, acting ability and fearlessness in the execution of stunts. Joining the Metro Company shortly after the Brenon picture was in circulation, he appeared in "The Trail to Yesterday" and "No Man's Land," and is now at work on "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," adapted from one of Jack Boyle's Boston Blackie stories that have gained such popularity in the Red Book Magazine.

Mr. Lytell can well be advertised as the star "who attained popularity over night." For, although he was well known on the speaking stage before his entrance into pictures, the motion picture public had yet to become acquainted with him.

Constant plugging of Bert Lytell will certainly serve to the exhibitor's advantage. As compared to female stars of the screen, the male stars are exceedingly small in number, and when such a promising actor as Mr. Lytell comes along it is overlooking good opportunity not to boost him with his every picture.

ROBERT THORNBY

ROBERT THORNBY, Fox director, who is at present producing features starring Jewel Carmen, is one of those personalities in the production of pictures who began, we were going to say at the bottom, and worked up. But, inasmuch as he started as an actor with the Vitagraph Company, playing in a series of comedies, it would be quite unfair to other actors to mention the "bottom." However, his rise was rapid. He first attracted attention as a director when William A. Brady gave him his opportunity to stage some World productions. From here he went to the Lasky Company, and after working there for a year joined the Fox forces, at the Western studio of which company he is at present stationed.

Mr. Thornby's direction is always worthy of notice, as he manages to gain artistically those effects which go to make a picture a popular success. One of the first stars he handled with the World Film Corporation was Vivian Martin, and his success with her was notable.

DONALD MacDONALD

DONALD MacDONALD is fast gaining a reputation in character and heavy roles in the Ince pictures produced for the Paramount program. Any showman knows that a popular villain is almost as valuable an asset as a popular hero. Hisses are as appreciative as applause.

Mr. MacDonald has a catchy name and one that, given sufficient prominence, could easily be made a box office asset. As yet he has appeared in only a few Ince pictures, among them being "A Desert Wooing," with Enid Bennett; "The Mating of Marcella," with Dorothy Dalton, and "Coals of Fire" and "String Beans," subjects as yet not released.

In "A Desert Wooing" MacDonald gave a fine characterization of the doctor-villain and fitted himself into the general scheme of the story with ease. In "The Mating of Marcella" he gave another appropriate performance.

As these two pictures are the ones in which he has important roles, they should be mentioned if it is desired to advertise his appearance in future subjects.

WILLIAM WORTHINGTON

WILLIAM WORTHINGTON was long known as a character man in motion pictures before he took up the director's megaphone and guided the actions of others before the camera.

He appeared in character parts in many features for the Universal Company and then turned to directing, making "Love Never Dies," "A Stranger from Somewhere," "Little Partner," "Face Value," "The Clock," "The Devil's Pay Day," "The Car of Chance" and many others.

He made such a record with the Universal that he was employed by Goldwyn to produce one of the first Mae Marsh pictures released by this company.

Mr. Worthington has met with even success in every undertaking and is known in the trade as a thoroughly reliable director.

In advertising his product or in circulating publicity stories regarding him, it should be mentioned that he started his career in the picture studio before the camera and after a few years as actor receded to a no less important position back of the camera, where his directorial efforts have been responsible for a long string of meritorious productions.

Mr. Worthington studied for grand opera on the continent and made use of his training in this country.

WALLACE WORSLEY

WALLACE WORSLEY as a director has the advantage of a vast amount of practical experience gained from his long career on the stage. He trod the boards as an actor for fifteen years, his first New York engagement being at the Empire theatre under the management of Charles Frohman. He was with William Collier as a juvenile lead for three seasons, subsequently producing the play "Checkers" and remaining with this piece for four seasons. Immediately previous to his entrance into motion pictures he spent several seasons in stock.

His first appearance in pictures was in "My Partner," with Burr McIntosh. In 1916 he joined the Thomas H. Ince forces on the Pacific coast in the capacity of character actor.

His first opportunity as a director was at the Paralta studio, to which place he went with many of the former Ince professionals.

Fox Studio Doings

With the completion of "Mysterious Logan," now being filmed by Director Lynn Reynolds, the Tom Mix-Fox Company will continue under the direction of Reynolds in the making of a screen adaptation of the Charles Alden Selzer book, "The Two Gun Man." Kathleen Connors, who has played with Mix in the past two pictures, is to continue with this organization. Adaptation from the book is now being prepared by Director Reynolds.

The Robert Thornby Company with Jewel Carmen as star, has gone to Huntington Lake for a stay of ten days where exteriors for "Above the Law" will be filmed in the Sierra Mountains. This location is almost 500 miles from the studio.

Wires from Director Frank Lloyd, who with William Farnum and Company are in the Grand Canyon, Arizona, shooting exteriors for "The Rainbow Trail," are to the effect the company is encountering terrific heat in the canyon with the mercury dancing about at one hundred and forty.

Director Edward J. LeSaint has completed the making of all scenes for the Gladys Brockwell subject titled "Kultur," and at the studio it is thought this picture will serve as one of the Fox Standards.

Henry Lehrman is now directing a Sunshine Comedy in which he will feature Mary Eccleston, champion diver of California, in a number of hazardous dives at Venice. One of the stunts to be shown in this picture is that of Miss Eccleston diving into a four-foot tank from the top of a fifty-foot platform.

Universal Newsettes

Paul Powell, who is to direct Carmel Myers upon her return from a trip to the East, is now at work in the preparation of continuity for the first subject which is titled "A Duchess of Dark Entry." In the preparation of this he is having the cooperation of Miss Hope Loring, a member of the Universal scenario staff.

A new leading man has been engaged by the Universal to play opposite Ruth Clifford in "The Mating," in the person of George Fisher, late leading man for Bessie Barriscale. Kenneth Harlan was originally cast for this role, but is now with the Liberty Army.

Selection has been made of a story for the next Priscilla Dean subject which is titled "The Magnificent Jacquala." The continuity is now being prepared by Wm. E. Wing, and Tod Browning, the latter the director who will produce the subject. The supporting cast for Miss Dean has not been named.

The two Universal Companies that have been absent from the studio for the past two weeks—that under the direction of Colin Campbell who is producing "The Yellow Dog," and the William Wolbert Company, headed by Monroe Salisbury filming "That Devil Baptiste"—returned to the studio this week. The former was at San Francisco and Pleasanton, and the latter at Huntington Lake.

Several films have been completed, the list including "Should a Woman Tell," starring Fritzie Brunette, supported by Louis Cody, and directed by Douglas Gerrard; "Joan of the Apaches," the story laid in Paris, which shows how the one phase of the turning back of the Huns, which stars Priscilla Dean and filmed by Director Joseph DeGrasse; and the Dorothy Phillips picture, "Till We Meet Again," directed by Alan Holubar.

"The Lion's Claw" Serial Company is nearing the end of its melodramatic career, as Director Harry Harvey and players are now at work on the eighteenth and last episode of this thirty-six reel serial which stars Marie Walcamp. Ben Wilson, who is filming "The Brass Bullet" serial, is now on the thirteenth episode.

Live Triangle Items

At the Triangle Studios in Culver City, two new subjects have been put in production, one to be directed by Frank Borzage, and the other by Albert Parker, the new director for this company.

Alma Rubens is the featured player in the Borzage directed subject which is at present titled "The Ghost Flower." The only player cast to date to appear with Miss Rubens, is Francis McDonald, who will be seen in a heavy role, Miss Rubens takes the part of a flower girl in a wine shop in Naples. Her beauty attracts an Italian badman, and to escape him the flower girl seeks protection from her only friend, a hunchback. On the death of the hunchback she is educated by a French poet and idealist who launches her on a successful stage career. The closing scenes of the photoplay are laid on the battle field, and depict the straightening out of the tangled life of the little flower girl. It is said Miss Rubens will display some wonderful imported gowns during the period of the photoplay in which the star is surrounded with luxury and refinement. This subject is from a story by Madeline Matzen, and continuity by Catherine Carr.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

That the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation expect to make the most of California's summer weather, and carry on production work in a more strenuous manner during the long and brighter days of the year, is evidenced by the manner in which work is being carried on. The technical staff are several weeks ahead of the producing units in the building of sets and the furnishing of same, and as soon as one subject is filmed, another is begun. This applies to all directors with the exception of Cecil B. deMille, who spends some time between the making of each of his Artcraft productions in the general supervision of subjects made.

No sooner had Director George Melford completed the filming of the first Lila Lee picture, "The Cruise of the Make Believe," the latter part of last week, than he took up the filming of "Peggy, the Pirate," adapted from the book of the same name. The complete cast has not been selected for the second release of the new Paramount star, but in all probability Harrison Ford will be the leading man. In "The Cruise of the Make Believe," Raymond Hatton is said to give the best characterization of his screen career, he taking the role of the aged father who continually imbibes.

The Fred Stone Company, directed by Donald Crisp, having filmed "The Big Top," are now at work on "Johnnie Get Your Gun," adapted from the stage play of the same name. Ella Hall, who was engaged to take the leading role opposite Stone in his first picture when Wanda Hawley became ill, has been retained as leading woman for the second film.

The Clara Kimball Young subject, "The Savage Woman," has been completed and Miss Young spent a portion of last week in San Francisco where she was guest of honor at the dedication of the Red Cross Tea Room opened by the Navy and Marine auxiliary.

About Metro Players

Work of filming "Unexpected Places," starring Bert Lytell, has been commenced by Director E. Mason Hopper, and Rhea Mitchell is to continue as leading woman in this company. Rosemary Theby has also been engaged to play a part of prominence.

May Allison arrived on the coast the latter part of last week, and is now well in the production of "The Return of Mary," being directed by Wilfred Lucas. Complete data concerning this production was given in recent numbers of Motion Picture News.

No title has been selected for the Cecil B. deMille Artcraft subject featuring Bryant Washburn with Florence Vidor as leading woman; nor the first Ethel Clayton film for Paramount being directed by Robert Vignola.

Mary Pickford is away from the studio on a vacation of three or four weeks, having appeared in all the scenes for the film adaptation of the Rupert Hughes story, "Mobilizing Johanna," which will be released under another title. During her absence Director William D. Taylor is editing this subject, and the one previously made, "Capt. Kid, Jr."

Henry Walthall, who played in Griffith's "The Great Love," is next to work at the Thomas H. Ince Studios in a special production to be made by Mr. Ince.

The Robert Brunton studio is to continue to be the producing headquarters for the Frank Keenan-Pathe Company, such arrangements having been made by Ferdinand Zecca, Pathe director-general, who has been here for several days, and filming of the next Pathe-Keenan feature will be started within a few days.

This makes four producing units at work at this studio, the others being the Hayakawa Haworth Productions Company, and the two making films for Paralta which are headed by Bessie Barriscale and Louise Glaum.

Some very interesting settings have been built for the Glaum subject which has a war background, many of the scenes being laid in the Champaigne district before and during the present conflict. These show the erection of wineries where press foundations were made by Germans to later serve as gun foundations. Sam de-Grasse has been selected to play the heavy, the role of a German secret service man. Ed Coxen is the lead opposite Miss Glaum. Jack Cunningham prepared the working continuity from the story by Francis Paget, and Wallace Worsley is in charge of the direction. The title selected for the Glaum subject is "A Law Unto Herself," which may or may not be changed.

The Bessie Barriscale Company is not at work this week, and the principals are spending their time reading a number of stories suitable for this star.

Director Christy Cabanne of Triangle is now about half way through on the filming of "The Mayor of Filbert," adapted by Dr. Daniel C. Goodman from the novel by Charles F. Stocking, and is making a new record for scenes "shot" during a single day. Barney Sherry, Belle Bennett, Jack Richardson, Olga Grey, Milicent Fisher, Joe Singleton and William Dyer are the principals of this cast.

"Beyond the Shadows," directed by J. W. McLaughlin, and "Alias Mary Brown," which was directed by William Dowlan, have been completed and are now in the cutting room and will shortly be shipped East, and these two directors are now waiting for new stories. Director Gilbert P. Hamilton has completed "The Golden Fleece," and has been given a new story temporarily titled "High Tide," which will in all probability feature William Desmond. The cast has not been definitely decided upon.

George Hively is a new member of the Triangle scenario department. Hively is well known in the film colony, having been connected with several west coast studios.

H. C. Brookes, who has served as company clerk with Director Gilbert P. Hamilton, has been promoted to the position as assistant to Albert Parker, new Triangle director.

Director Albert Parker will have Gloria Swanson as his featured player, with Joe King and Harvey Clark supporting. The photoplay is titled "Shifting Sands," and is from a story by Charles Dazey, with continuity by Catherine Carr. In this subject Miss Swanson plays the part of a struggling artist who cares for her invalid sister. She is unjustly convicted and sent to prison by a man whose advances she spurns, and on her release finds love and happiness. After her marriage, she is again molested by the man who caused her imprisonment, he attempting to force the girl to betray her country, but he is caught by the U. S. secret service, and all ends happily.

Subjects nearing completion at the Triangle studios are "The Price of Applause," a big war drama being directed by Thomas Heffron from the Saturday Evening Post story of the same name, in which Jack Livingston, Joe King and Claire Anderson have the principal roles; and "Cactus Crandall," the Roy Stewart Western subject being directed by Cliff Smith.

Racine Theatres Suffer by Daylight Saving Edict

THE daylight saving act cut about fifty per cent. of the early evening business away from Racine motion picture theatres in one slice, it is said.

Afternoon attendance, of course, was not hit at all, in fact was slightly increased, but the first show in the evening, formerly well attended, immediately fell off when the turn-back-the-clock rule went into effect. The late evening performances, however, increased a bit after the extra hour and been added to the day.

On hot days, declares Manager Blumberg of the Palace, the first evening performance is to an almost empty house as compared to former seasons, and the effect extends also to the later shows. The slight increase in the attendance during the afternoon, and the increase in attendance at later shows, practically balances the loss at early evening performances.

Bear State Film Co. Makes Chicago Headquarters

THE two chief executives of the Bear State Film Company, Lewis J. Hampton and C. S. Harrison, arrived on the Chicago horizon with their latest picture last week. The picture is entitled, "The Vigilantes" and is said to be the only interesting and authentic picturization of the famed activities of those famous old border guardians of the law.

Every day last week Mr. Hampton and Mr. Harrison gave a trade showing of their picture to exhibitors and State rights men. They will make their headquarters in Chicago for the next few months during which time they expect to dispose of the rights for the Central West States on the picture. Their headquarters will be the Chicago office of Motion Picture News in the Consumer's Building.

Balaban and Katz Sign Up for Educational Short Subjects

THE Bee Hive Exchange, Chicago is already signing up for their newly acquired releases from the Educational Pictures Corporation. Last week Balaban and Katz contracted for a three days run on all the Ditmar's scenic and cartoon comedy releases. The pictures will be shown on the opening program of their new Riviera theatre in September.

They have also contracted for a three days' showing on the releases at the Central Park theatre.

In this issue there is a special article concerning the installation in the Empire theatre of Tientsin, of one of the Style "V" Seeburg Organ Orchestras.

Detroit Exchanges Experience Changes

A THREE-ANGLE change in Detroit film exchange offices has just taken place, and concerns the Fox and General offices.

Field Carmichael, who for the past six months has been manager of the Fox office in Detroit, has been appointed general representative in the United Kingdom for the Fox Film Corp., Ltd., and will make his headquarters in London, England, with supervision over Great Britain, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, Spain, Italy and France. It surely is a big promotion for Mr. Carmichael, yet one of which he is well deserving. It comes as a result of the splendid sales work he has done in Detroit, Denver and Los Angeles. He has been with the Fox Film Corporation from its inception, and during his stay in Detroit has more than doubled the business. He will sail for Europe in the near future to assume his new duties.

M. S. Bailey, for the past three months Detroit manager for the General, and for a number of Detroits manager of the Detroit Universal Film Co., and one of the best known and best liked film men in Michigan, succeeds Mr. Carmichael as manager for the Fox Film Corporation in Detroit, taking up his new work on July 15th.

Frank E. Stuart, for four years connected with the Detroit office of the General Film Co., and recently acting as assistant branch manager, has been appointed manger to succeed Mr. Bailey. He takes up his new work July 15th.

To Messrs. Carmichael, Bailey and Stuart—all of whom are advancing themselves as a direct result of good work—the MOTION PICTURE NEWS extends its very best wishes for even greater success.

With Milwaukee Film Men

WALTER BAIER is going around with a rather sad smile on his face these days. He was unlucky enough to have nine reels of "Civilization" completely destroyed when the Blue Mills theatre at ——— burned down last week. The house which was managed by Mrs. Collins is a total wreck, and the damage will amount to about five thousand dollars. The cause of the fire is unknown.

JOE RODERICK, of Universal, reports that all the Bluebird features are going over big, in fact no mail is without a letter asking as to bookings.

THE MIRIMAR theatre which opened on the first of July started its policy of running big features at normal prices. It started out excellently, Douglas Fairbanks being the first star, and on Wednesday Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs" held the screen.

DOROTHY DALTON in "The Kaiser's Shadow" is the attraction at the Butterfly the first part of this week, and as an added attraction Fatty Arbuckle in "Good Night Nurse", will cut capers on the screen.

EARL WILLIAMS will follow Emily Stevens at the Merrill on Thursday. Miss Stevens had a most successful run of "A Man's World."

AGAIN the community singing has been held over at the Alhambra and each week it becomes stronger and more appreciated. Many of the audience have been known to come to the theatre just for this, and with practice that soon becomes perfect Mr. Carberry is getting the most satisfactory result.

THE PRINCESS theatre is the first down town theatre to run the Song Hits on Photoplay series. The singer who is introducing them to the Princess patrons is Dick Kelly of Chicago. Five big vaudeville acts in motion pictures and Douglas Fairbanks in "His Pictures in the Paper."

THE TOY theatre is running Norma Talmadge in "Ghosts of Yesterday." Miss Talmadge stepped a rung higher on the ladder of fame when this picture was made and it will prove a happy choice for the Toy people.

News from Fond du Lac

MANAGER AINSWORTH of the Orpheum has a warm spot in his heart for the boys, and there have been more indications than one that the boys reciprocate the affection. His last appeal to them is through Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer," July 11, 12 and 13.

MANAGER SMITH of the Bijou is so pleased with the results from his publicity work in connection with "The Kaiser, The Beast of Berlin," which did a splendid business, that he proposes to go it one better on Gerard's "My Four Years in German," which is scheduled for this month. He has spent some time in conference with managers of Milwaukee houses in planning his publicity campaign, which is contemplating the use of big space in the newspapers and a large amount of billboard work.

FUND DU LAC moving picture houses made ample provision for excellent entertainment for Fourth of July holiday patrons and, as a result, won their appreciation and mighty good business. At the Orpheum, Manager Ainsworth presented Mae Murray in "The Bride's Awakening," while at the Bijou furnished his patrons a patriotic thrill with George Beban in "One More American."

W. W. WATTS is laying plans to attend the Boston convention. "Bill" will probably be the only delegate from these parts to the big show.

THE KERASOTES boys—Louie and Gus—are wearing big broad smiles these days. Louie is raking in the shekels at the Savoy, while Gus is doing likewise at the Royal. Business is exceptionally good at both playhouses.

BEN ROVIN of the Amuse-U announces that "Little Red Decides," with Barbara Connelly, will be the attraction on July 5, and W. S. Hart in "Hell's Hinges," on July 6. Ben is planning on using a great many Triangle productions in the near future. A Lonesome Luke comedy is shown on every Wednesday, at the Amuse-U.

THE CAPITOL reports a wonderful Sunday's business on June 30. "The House of Hate" and "Her Husband's Wife," the latter a Fox comedy, were the attractions. On July 1 the Capitol had Dick Rosson in "Cassidy," a Triangle play; July 2, "Faith Enduring," with Roy Stewart; Wednesday, "The Argyle Case," with Robert Warwick; Thursday, July 4, "The Slacker," with Emily Stevens.

THE SAVOY bookings for the week of June 30-July 6 revealed the following high-class attractions: Sunday, Helen Gibson in "Play Straight," "The Blind Pig," a comedy and Universal Weekly; Monday, Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury in "The Savage;" Tuesday, "The Boy Scouts to the Rescue" and Warda Howard in "That Sort;" Wednesday, "The Woman in the Web" and Weekly; Thursday, a special feature; Friday, Marie Walcamp in "The Lion's Claws" and Broncho Billy; Saturday, Mae Murray in "The Bride's Awakening;" Sunday, William S. Hart in "Quick Trigger."

MARY PICKFORD in "How Could You Jean?" and Alma Rubens in "The Painted Lily" were the attractions at the Gaiety, July 7-13.

HENRY B. WALTHALL had two good days at the Princess on July 1 and 2. The play was "With Hoops of Steel," perhaps the first in which the star has been cast in a western part. Coming attractions for the Princess include Frank Keenan in "The Public Defender," "Moral Suicide," "Men" and "Patriotism." Manager Kunz has several open dates that he intends using to good advantage by booking some of the "big ones."

THE LYRIC has "De Luxe Annie," with Norma Talmadge, coming in the near future. Also "The Winning of Beatrice," with May Allison, and "We Should Worry," a Fox play, with the Fox kiddies, Jane and Katherine Lee.

THE colored people in Springfield seem bent on raising trouble for the exhibitors. One of the managers was called on July 1, and informed that his theatre must admit colored patrons. As none of the big down town houses have been doing this, it looks as though something will happen. The colored persons have a theatre of their own, the Pekin, but they will not patronize the place. The colored folks claim that as they buy Liberty Bonds, subscribe to the Red Cross and etc., that they should not be discriminated against in theatrical affairs.

THE NORTH END CIRCLE and Palace theatres, two neighborhood houses, report that business is most satisfactory.

"THE FIREFLY OF FRANCE," with Wallace Reid, is the Vaudette offering for July 4, 5 and 6. Dorothy Dalton will follow in "The Kaiser's Shadow," which in turn will be succeeded by Jack Pickford in "Sandy."

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS woke the old town up with "Say, Young Fellow," new Artcraft picture, which played four days at the Gaiety on June 30, July 1, 2 and 3. This was voted one of the very best photoplays the smile king has ever done. Manager Thornton booked "Fatty" Arbuckle in "Good Night, Nurse," for the same four days and made a "killing."

SUNDAY, JUNE 30, was one of the coolest days of the year. Result, big business at every theatre in town. It was so cool that wraps were necessary, which curtailed the auto riding and the speeding of autos in the park; also the usual Sunday bathing was tabooed.

ADOLPH KUNZ, one of the owners of the Princess, says he would not trade Hearst-Pathe News for any other short subject on the market. Everyone admits they are good.

FOR the week of June 30-July 6 Manager Gus Kerasotes of the Royal had the following: "When Men Are Tempted," with Mary Anderson, on Tuesday; Muriel Ostriche in "Moral Courage," on Wednesday; Montagu Love in "Broken Ties," on Thursday; Alice Brady in "The Divorcee," on Thursday, and "The Fall of a Nation," on Friday.

THE Empress continues to play to big business. Manager Diamond has performed wonders with this theatre, and deserves much credit for his work. A varied program, changed every day, seems to be what Empress patrons want, and Dick is giving it to them.

GEORGE M. COHAN had four days at the Gaiety in "Hit-the-Trail Holliday." As this is a dry town, and some of the "wets" are still chafing under their defeat, some of the regular fans did not think so highly of the production. But for the most part everyone enjoyed the play. The dates of showing were June 23, 24, 25 and 26. Madge Kennedy came on the 27th and 28th in "The Danger Game." The pretty comedienne is fast becoming a favorite in this city, and Tom Moore, her leading man, is one of the best liked actors here. "A Knockout," Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran Star comedy was also on the bill, which pleased good crowds for the three days.

"THE ORDEAL OF ROSETTA," Alice Brady's newest Select play, did fair business for the Lyric on June 27, 28 and 39. Those who saw the picture, liked it, in spite of the criticism given it by several well-known critics.

They Say in Chicago That—

THE Chicago unit of the affiliated Producers and Distributors' Association held a meeting last Friday. Payments were made on the rest of the stock quota, bringing them up to the full $8,000.

C. C. PYLE, of Bartola, left July 3 for Cleveland, New York and Boston. Mr. Pyle will attend the National Convention at Boston.

RALPH BRADFORD, manager of the local Triangle exchange, spent several days last week visiting his home folks at Brennan, Ohio.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD, Metro's money-getter, stopped off in town for a few hours last week, on his way East.

EUGENE DUFFY, manager of the Mutual local office, plans to take a trip of three days a week, during the next month, through Central West territory, selling the Hayakawa pictures. Among some of the towns Mr. Duffy will touch will be Rockford, Dubuque, Fort Wayne, Springfield, Peoria, Davenport and Rock Island.

ED. SILVERMAN, booker of the Select exchange, has joined the Navy with a yeoman's rating. The members of the Select office staff presented him with a wrist watch and razor, upon his departure for the Great Lakes Naval Training Station.

JOSEPH FRIEDMAN, who handles the reins at the Celebrated Players office, spent the greater part of last week visiting at Charlevioux, Mich. He was accompanied by his family.

H. J. BAYLEY, manager of the local Goldwyn exchange, has just closed with the Strand theatre at Milwaukee, for the year's output of Goldwyn pictures.

THE unscrupulous advertising methods of one of the Loop theatres has brought Doll-Van, "Carmen of the Klondike" before the Censor Board again. The house in question, not satisfied with the actual worth and drawing power of the picture, advertised a "Thirty Minute Fight," outside their theatre during the picture's run there last week. The result was that it was called back into the censor's hands for reinspection.

ART DESORMEAUX, for twelve years connected with motion pictures in Chicago and recently booker for the local Fox exchange, has been appointed to manage Finn & Hyman's new house at Madison, Wis. Mr. Desormeaux left last week to take charge.

RAY SMITH, head of the Ray Smith Supply Company at Milwaukee, was a visitor in town last week. He closed an arrangement with the local U. T. E. branch to distribute exclusively in his territory, the Powers machine. The distribution will be made through U. T. E.

SI GRIEVER, of Griever-Herz, has returned from his trip to the East. Immediately after returning back in town, Si took another train for parts unknown. Big things are promised for announcement when he returns again.

UNITY PHOTOPLAY announces that "Zongar," the Bernarr MacFadden picture is ready. Shorty Hamiltons are booking big, according to Manager Mintz of Unity.

THE following changes have been made in the working territory of the local Select sales force: A. J. Gallos has been transferred from the south side to the north side. Julius Alcock goes from the north side into the office as booker. Charles Seidell, recently with Pathe, is covering the south side, and H. W. Ricker is covering Wisconsin territory, succeeding Jack Thompson.

MANAGER DUFFY, of the Mutual exchange, announces that interest is becoming warm in the Chester-Outing picture. The whole series of twelve has already been booked in the most prominent theatres, such as the Woodlawn, Hamlin, Adelphi, Vista, Boston and Alcazar.

H. A. SPANUTH returned last week from a trip through the Central West territory, and reported many bookings secured for his Vod-A-Vil Movies. The Princess at Milwaukee has signed up for first run. The Ascher houses in the city are also to take them, and the Rex at Racine, Wis., has signed up.

MARY MILES MINTER'S latest picture, "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," played to big attendance for a week, at the Orpheum, State street. Manager Duffy has booked it to the Harper, Covent Garden, the Gold, the Irving Park and the Woodlawn.

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER" opened Sunday night at the Playhouse, and if the Sunday night opening is to be any criterion of the crowds, there will be another record breaker to chalk for Metro.

THE local U. T. E. office, in charge of Ralph Fulton, has placed a Gold Fibre Screen in the Strand at Milwaukee.

SAM LEARS, of the Lears Theatre Supply Company, St. Louis, was a visitor last week, at the local office of the Exhibitors' Supply Company. Sam departed as usual, after buying a big bill of goods.

THE following telegram was received by the Bee Hive exchange from Louis Landau, Jr., manager of the Washington theatre, Granite City, Ill.: "'Hello, Central, Give Me No Man's Land' put on to packed house. It went very big; in fact, was the head of my bill and scored bigger applause than my three acts of vaudeville."

LUTHER J. POLLARD, general manager of the Ebony Film Corporation, returned home last week, after a trip to Fond du Lac, Wis., where he had been putting things in order for the removal of his Chicago companies to that city for the summer.

DURING the showing of "Over the Top" at the Howard theatre last week, a returned English soldier, Corporal Finley, spoke with each showing of the picture during the three days' run.

M. M. RUBENS, of the Princess theatre, Joliet, Ill., was in town last week. He spent some of his time here booking up "Song Hits in Photoplays," at the Bee Hive exchange.

FIFTEEN outlying houses in Milwaukee have booked "Song Hits in Photoplays" for two days a week. The contract was made through the Exhibitors' Booking Club, of Milwaukee.

HENRY SCHENSTADT AND SONS have contracted for "Song Hits in Photoplays" for all of their houses.

THE officers of the Bear State Film Company, L. J. Hampton and C. S. Harrison, gave several trade showings of their big picture, "The Vigilantes," to exhibitors and state rights men in the city, last week. Mr. Hampton and Mr. Harrison have come on here from Los Angeles.

"JOSH" SPENCER, formerly assistant district manager for Paramount and at one time capable enough to have been assistant manager of the local Triangle office, is living proof of the process of elimination in the film game. Spencer is now merely a salesman at the local Metro office.

DON EGBERT, formerly managing editor with Motography, has joined the Exhibitors' Herald staff, since the merger of the two papers.

D. M. VANDAWALKER, general manager of the Doll-Van Film Corporation, sent back the both teams of Eskimo dogs that he was using in exploiting "Carmen of the Klondike." The dogs were shipped back to their native heath, Gimli, Canada.

WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON, prexy of the NEWS, spent last week in Chicago. While here he made an extensive visit to the local trade and exhibitors.

HUNTER BENNETT, formerly district representative here for U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, has written a postal to Frank Flaherty, of Four Square, from the Mexican border, where he is stationed as a member of the National Army.

Dubuque News and Views

THE Grand's regular program was changed last week, for instead of the usual Charlie Chaplin feature, a Billy West comedy, "The Ordeal," was shown in connection with an episode of the great secret service serial, "The Eagle's Eye."

GLORIA SWANSON and J. Barney Sherry were starred at the Dreamland in "Her Decision."

VERSATILE GLADYS BROCKWELL did some very pleasing work in her latest offering, "The Scarlet Road," presented at the Dreamland June 30 and July 1. Miss Brockwell has a following all her own and her fans never fail to turn out in goodly numbers, whenever her features come to town.

CARMEL MYERS in "The Wife He Bought," had a very successful three days' engagement at the Majestic theatre.

TRIANGLE'S western character man, Roy Stewart, supported by Jessie Sedgwick, played to a full house at the Dreamland, in "Wolves of the Border."

FAMILY THEATRE patrons don't seem to let the hot weather keep them from picture houses. Manager Yount reported a fine house at his theatre June 30, where Pauline Frederick was shown in "The Love that Lives."

J. E. BOYLE of the Dreamland, declares that Triangle features are developing into some of the finest drawing cards on the market. To use his own words: "They have a good human subject, about real, every-day people: a story appealing to all individuals. The comedies are clever and clean—comedies that go big every time. The pictures are always enacted by a fine cast of well-balanced players, among whom Roy Stewart, Pauline Starke and Alma Rubens are supreme. To book a Triangle feature is to assure yourself of a money-making program."

MARY FULLER and Charles Richman in "The Public Be Damned," were seen at the Princess, June 28.

GAIL KANE in "The Red Woman," appeared at the Liberty theatre, Saturday, June 29.

JOHN KIRCHEN, violinist and orchestra leader at the Grand, reported at Fort Riley, Kansas, Tuesday, July 2, from where he expects to be sent to an army hospital in the South. Orchestras are maintained at army hospitals and Mr. Kirchen is reporting under government orders.

THERE was consternation at the Majestic theatre, Sunday afternoon, June 30, when the "German Curse in Russia" film, billed to open a four days engagement, failed to arrive from Chicago. Manager Rosenthal fairly burned up the telephone wires, but the only satisfaction he could get was that the film had been shipped along with the Union Park theatre films. It wasn't there, however, and another picture had to be substituted.

"THE BRIDE OF FEAR," with Jewel Carmen, was well received by the patrons of the Liberty, where it was presented last Sunday.

BERT LYTELL'S "The Trail to Yesterday," came to the Grand, Sunday June 30. The picture had received considerable advertising and the people came to the theatre expecting to see a feature quite above the ordinary nor were they disappointed, for Mr. Lytell did splendid work, and his picture went down in the annals of the theatre as one of the best pictures ever shown there.

"JOHN ERMINE OF YELLOWSTONE," with Francis Ford, was the bill at the Grand theatre, at Lancaster, Tuesday, July 2.

HARRY CAREY in "Bucking Broadway," was the attraction at the Star theatre, at Decorah, Iowa, Thursday, June 27. The Friday program consisted of "The Hired Man," with "the wonder boy," Charles Ray, and "His Hidden Purpose," with Chester Conklin. As an added attraction, Miss M. Olson of that city, sang "Don't Steal the Sweetheart of a Soldier," illustrated by moving pictures.

MAE MARSH in "Polly of the Circus," was the program at the Cozy theatre, at Dyersville, Sunday, June 30.

SATURDAY is "feature night" at the Gem theatre, at Monfort, Wis., a town not far from Dubuque. The picture presented there this week was "A Girl Like That," with Irene Fenwick and Owen Moore.

THE Fourth of July program at the Fireman's theatre at New Hampton, Iowa, was the great First National offering, "My Four Years in Germany."

THE New Majestic theatre, at Elkader, Iowa., celebrated the Fourth of July by showing William Fox's great human story, "The Honor System."

THE Saturday night program, June 29, at the Belknap theatre, at Hopkinton, Iowa, was a five-reel Metro feature, "Vanity."

ROBERT J. RELF, manager of the Star, at Decorah, Iowa, announced that starting July 1, the Star would be open on Wednesdays and Saturdays only, until Fair Week, when the regular fall season will open with a daily show.

THE Palace theatre, at Waverly, Iowa, presented William S. Hart in "Blue Blazes Rawden," last Friday.

CUBA CITY, WIS., now has another theatre, "The Blende." The manager of this theatre is making a specialty of showing big features. The pictures shown there last week were, "The Kaiser" and "The Wager," with Emily Stevens. "Revelation," with Alla Nazimova, is scheduled to appear there July 25.

MANAGERS CRANE AND LANDIS of the Crane and Princess theatres, respectively, at Monticello, Iowa, have combined their interests in the picture show business and hereafter will show selected programs from the best producers. The Princess theatre will be open every night and the Crane theatre will be open Saturday's only. The program of the Princess for the week of June 30 was as follows: Monday, "The Brand of Cain," with Mrs. Vernon Castle and Antonio Moreno; Tuesday and Wednesday, "The Heart of a Lion," with William Farnum; Thursday, William S. Hart in "The Captive God;" Friday, Viola Dana in "Lady Barnacle," and Saturday, "Hashimura Togo," with Sessue Hayakawa. The Crane's special feature on Saturday was "A Daughter of France," with Virginia Pearson.

"THE CONQUERER," with William Farnum, was the bill at the Grand theatre, at Galena, Ill., Saturday, June 29.

"If it's used in a theatre—we have it."

Heard in Detroit

THE Dawn Masterplay Company, of Detroit, is certainly doing things and making many of the oldtimers sit up and take notice. Recently they purchased the Michigan rights to "Hearts of the World," which is still playing an extended Detroit engagement. Then they leased the Regent theatre, Woodward and the Grand Boulevard from C. H. Miles for the summer months, and inaugurated a policy that has proven most successful. Later they leased the Detroit Opera House for the summer and this house seems certain to be successful with pictures. Now, they have purchased more state right pictures, namely, "Carmen of the Klondike," "The Struggle Everlasting" and "The Accidental Honeymoon." Once again we say, the Dawn is certainly doing things in Michigan.

SEVENTY PER CENT of the theatres of Detroit are now giving free admittance to soldiers or sailors of the United States or the Allies, who are in uniform. Some of the theatres ask no questions at the door simply that the uniformed men pay the war tax on admissions, while some of the bigger theatres are distributing a certain number of passes each day to the head of the relief work of the army and navy, in order that there will be no abuse of the privileges. The splendid generosity of the Detroit exhibitors was accomplished through the efforts of Royal Baker and Lester Potter, Detroit police censors of motion pictures.

HELMER GEORGE of the Central theatre, Pontiac, is one exhibitor who is doing big things these days. Whenever he books big pictures, he goes after the business in a big way, with advertising, circulars, handbills, billboards, and even hires street cars and puts huge signs on each side and sends it on a tour of the nearby suburban towns accompanied by a brass band. He has recently played such pictures as "The Unbeliever," "Over the Top," "My Four Years in Germany" and "Tarzan of the Apes," all of which have proven big successes.

THE OAKLAND is a beautiful theatre, seating nearly 1,500 people and built amphitheatre style.

THE beautiful Majestic theatre, Detroit, closed its doors on Saturday, July 6, after a two weeks' engagement of "Missing," which it played to excellent business. The theatre is now being redecorated throughout, a new stage set is being installed, the stage is being enlarged, new equipment is being added, and in all, the improvements will represent a good many hundreds of dollars. M. W. McGee, managing director, will be around the theatre while the work is going on. He says the new policy will be for the purpose of giving the Majestic only the biggest and best pictures, and the runs will be as long as they can bring the people to the box office in sufficient numbers to reach a certain quota. It is the first time in the history of the theatre that the Majestic has been closed.

NAT LEFKOWITZ, Pathe salesman, of Detroit, resigned July 1 and has returned to his home in Cleveland where he is awaiting the July draft call. Jack Osserman, another Pathe salesman out of the Detroit office, resigned July 1 and also returned to Cleveland to await draft call.

H. A. SOMMERFIELD, former assistant manager and publicity manager for the Miles and Grand theatres, Cleveland, Ohio, has been appointed manager of the Drury Lane theatre, Detroit, succeeding Dave Blythe, who has resigned to devote his time to the Nettie B. theatre, which he recently purchased.

JOE HORWITZ, of the Foursquare exchange in Detroit, of which he is manager and resident partner, and who recently bought a half interest in the Cleveland office, has purchased the Michigan rights to "Today" and "The Madon Lover," both productions being made by Harry Rapf. Mr. Horwitz will not release them, however, until sometime in August. He has already had many inquiries from leading exhibitors throughout the state.

DAVE MUNDSTUK, of the Strand Features, Detroit, has purchased the Michigan rights to twenty-four Roscoe Arbuckle reissues, through the W. H. Productions, and will start releasing them sometime in August.

C. C. CLANCY has taken over the Gem theatre in Cheboygan, Mich.

CHARLES H. POWELL has taken over the Lincoln theatre in Sebewaiting, Wich.

E. C. JARVINS, of the Orpheum theatre, Lansing, Mich., is employing lady operators and says they are proving highly efficient and satisfactory. We might add, in this connection, that quite a number of Michigan exhibitors are planning to have ladies do the operating, in view of the number of men who are going to war.

Additional Springfield News

"THE YELLOW TICKET," Pathe's sensational photoplay, with Fannie Ward, did nicely for the Princess on June 28, 29 and 30. The former stage success made a great picture, and the theatregoers are still talking about it.

PAULINE FREDERICK in "The Final Reckoning," played to four days of ordinary business at the Vaudette on June 23, 24, 25 and 26. Miss Frederick has never been a very heavy drawing star in this city, and Manager Watts is not sorry that her contract with Paramount is about up. It may be that she is too great an artist for the masses in these parts, but the box-office statement is always poor when she's the attraction.

ANOTHER star, a good actor, too, who never does well in this city, is Sessue Hayakawa. He was at the Vaudette in "The Bravest Way" on June 27, 28 and 29, and drew about as well as usual. It is understood that with one more play Hayakawa's contract will also expire with Paramount.

ONE of the most pleasing little comedy-dramas of the year is "A Desert Wooing," which came to the Vaudette on June 30 for four days with Enid Bennett. Miss Bennett is ideal in such roles, and shows a vast improvement over her work in former plays, notably "Keys of the Righteous." "Are Wives Reasonable?" Keystone comedy, with Ed Brady and Claire Anderson, and the usual Vaudette Screen Telegram were on the bill with "A Desert Wooing," which made a very pleasing program.

TOM MIX in "Ace High," a Fox drama, and pictures of the Springfield boys in Company C and Battery A, local regiments now in France, constitutes the bill at the Lyric for June 30 and July 1. Big crowds were in attendance both days, as nearly every one here has a relative or friend in the companies named. It was a very wise move on Manager Loper's part to have the pictures taken. Films were shot at Houston, Texas.

FRANCIS X. BUSHMAN and Beverly Bayne came to the Lyric for two days, July 2 and 3, in "Cyclone Higgins, D.D." A comedy and Universal weekly, which the Lyric has just signed for, will also be on the bill. Clara Kimball Young will follow for three days in "The Claw." As Milton Sills is again her leading man, the maidens will be out in droves. Sills is quite a matinee idol in this city.

"A WOMAN'S REDEMPTION," with June Elvidge and John Bowers, came to the Princess on July 3 and 4. Also the sixteenth chapter of "The Eagle's Eye," the great Wharton serial. The showing of this serial at the Princess has been a complete success. Many predicted that Ed Kunz would take it off after the first few episodes, but all were fooled. With only four more chapters to go the theatre expects to do fine business on the closing reels.

W. A. BOHNHORST, violinist at the Gaiety, is rejoicing over a new musician in his family. It's the first one, and a son.

HARRY WEISS, of the Central Film Company of Chicago, was in the city July 2, trying to induce some of the theatres to sign up for "Pershing's Crusaders." Some of the local managers were inclined to fight shy of the film, figuring that the public is not right for war stuff at this time. The news weeklies always get a big hand, but a full length war film show is another thing.

What Racine Is Doing

"SAY, YOUNG FELLOW," perhaps Douglas Fairbanks' snappiest picture, proved a great attraction at the Palace on Tuesday and Wednesday before the Fourth. According to Manager Bloomberg, the picture drew better than any of the Fairbanks features shown at the Palace so far, and that means all of them.

"VO-DA-VIL MOVIES," being displayed at the Rex, have taken well and Manager Norman is planning to make them a regular visitor on his programs. William S. Hart in "The Two-Gun Man," otherwise known as the "Bargain," and Mutt and Jeff, were shown with the vaudeville pictures, making a full program on Saturday, July 6.

ALICE JOYCE, Emily Stevens, and Mabel Norman, appeared in suc

An Unsolicited Repeat Order for a Fotoplayer

Evansville, Indiana, July 5, 1918.

Lyon & Healy, Chicago, Illinois.

Gentlemen:

Two years ago we purchased one of the largest style Photo Players. We are today placing our order with you for another Fotoplayer for our new theatre which we intend opening August 1st.

After using the Fotoplayer for over two years, we unhesitatingly state that both we and our patrons are delighted with the music. It has saved us the cost and given us better satisfaction than an orchestra and has increased our box office receipts.

The fact that we are placing our order with you unsolicited for another Fotoplayer is convincing proof of the splendid satisfaction the instrument has given us.

Yours truly,

THE STRAND THEATRE,

cession at the Palace during the week of the Fourth, and drew fine business. Alice Joyce appeared in "Find the Woman"; Mabel in "The Venus Model"; and Emily Stevens in "A Man's World." Bobby Connelly was shown in "The Pacifist." Burton Holmes' Travelogues, Universal News, Palace Weekly Events, and a Sidney Drew Comedy, with the Official War Pictures completed the Palace program for the week.

THE noon performance at the Palace theatre which proved so successful in the spring, has been discontinued for the summer months, beginning July 8, when the show will begin at 1 o'clock instead of 12 o'clock as formerly.

WILLIAM S. HART appeared at the Bijou in "Staking His Life" supported by Charles Ray and Louise Glaum, a trio which cannot be beaten, for two days, Friday and Saturday following the Fourth.

IRENE CASTLE in "The Mysterious Client," ran to good business at the Rex.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG in "The Reason Why," taken from the novel by Elinor Glynn, drew well at the Rex.

THE REX theatre has secured first run on the Official War Review pictures and the first were shown just before the Fourth of July.

MARY MILES MINTER, in "Social Briars," and Bessie Barriscale in "Madame Who," by Harold McGrath, helped fill the week of the Fourth at the Bijou.

Late News from La Crosse

JOSEPH R. KAMPSCHROER, one of the pioneer operators of La Crosse, has joined the navy. He was in the business ever since he left school, and had an envious reputation among operators and theatre managers. His work was one of the reasons of the popularity of the Bijou. He is the second of La Crosse's operators to enlist in the service of Uncle Sam.

THE greater part of the operators of La Crosse are in Class One of the draft, and as such are liable to call at any time. Managers here are considering the training of girls and women.

THE CASINO and Strand theatre announce that they will be closed until September 1, at which time they will be placed under the management of F. L. KOPPELBERGER, manager of the Majestic and La Crosse theatres.

"THE UNBELIEVER" was booked for a four-day showing at the Bijou last week. It is being heavily advertised, and patrons are looking forward to the showing with great interest.

"THE EAGLE'S EYE" is continuing to draw good houses at the Bijou. This is one of the most interesting serials that has been seen here in some time.

BILLIE BURKE is as big a drawing card as ever, as is evidenced by the fact that "Let's Get a Divorce," in which she daintily stars, is drawing packed houses at the La Crose.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA in "Hidden Pearls" is drawing good houses at the Majestic. This clever Japanese is a great favorite with La Crosse movie fans.

THERE'S nothing in the "hot weather" howl of exhibitors that goes up about this time each year. La Crosse is experiencing the most summery kind of summer weather, and the managers here, by careful booking, are showing pictures that bring 'em in regardless of the heat. Perhaps this may be a hunch for managers elsewhere. Hope so.

Baby Marie Osborne Dons the Uniform

DRESSED in the uniform of the United States Marine Corps, of which she is the mascot, Baby Marie Osborne, the diminutive Pathe star, was one of the big features of the parade and field meet given by the Hollywood Officers' Training School at Exposition Park.

Baby Marie was wearing for the first time her uniform as mascot of the United States Marine Corps. Her car was decorated with American flags and carried a recruiting emblem on the back. On the front of the windshield was painted in red, white and blue the following sign:

Baby Marie Osborne
Mascot
U. S. Marines
"I joined. Why don't you?"

Seated in the car with Baby Marie was Capt. Harrison T. Swain and the members of his staff. As the car passed along the line of parade hundreds of Marie's admirers were quick to recognize her and her popularity combined with the cuteness of her uniform and the patriotic manner in which the car was decorated earned her the unanimous applause of all the spectators.

Seattle Attorney Gives Censor Decision

THOMAS J. L. KENNEDY, city attorney for Seattle, has handed down the opinion that the city's advisory board of theatre censors has the right to demand to be shown any motion picture before it is exhibited to the public and may disapprove of a whole film or any portion of a film, and say it shall not be run in Seattle. If the film is shown in spite of disapproval of theatre censors, the guilty persons can be prosecuted.

The advisory board sent a letter recently to the corporation counsel asking if it had authority over any performance, besides motion picture theatre entertainments. The city attorney ruled that as the city ordinance read they were to have authority over dramatic productions, the playhouses and motion picture houses. He also ruled that the censors might prohibit the exhibition of anything they deemed objectionable.

Griffith Leases Portion of Studio

D. W. GRIFFITH, having more studio space than he could conveniently use at his Sunset Studio, 4500 Sunset Boulevard, formerly the Fine Arts plant, has relinquished a portion of the plant. It has been divided into several smaller studios, each complete in itself, and one of these will be occupied by the Clara Kimball Young company, where pictures under the management of Harry I. Garson will be produced.

Dorothy Gish, heading her own company on the Paramount program, has also taken over one of the smaller studios at the Sunset plart, and will start production on her own special features within the near future. She will remain until she is able to secure studio space at the Lasky Studio, which will probably take place at the completion of her first feature.

Salt Lake Theatre Being Improved

THE AMERICAN THEATRE is now being renovated. It seats 3,000 people and is one of the largest moving picture houses in the United States. M. M. Stewart, publicity manager of the Swanson theatres in Salt Lake, announces that the entire interior of the theatre has been decorated and that the long 300-foot lobby has been beautified with a fine collection of palms, giving it a tropical setting. This is one of the best collections in the country and was secured by Wm. A. Swanson, the owner, on his recent trip to California. Imported canary birds and ornamental cages, especially made for this theatre, have added to the beauty of the effect.

The big organ of the theatre is being thoroughly overhauled and new additions are being installed.

West Coast Hears of "Hearts" in Washington

NEWSPAPER clippings received from Washington show that society enmasse turned out to the premier of Griffith's "Hearts of the World." President and Mrs. Wilson, a number of members of the cabinet and their wives, as well as practically all the high officials of the Government in Washington, were present. Almost a page of one of the leading morning papers was used to cover the society feature of the opening. Plans for the film's premier and the society function attending were made through the Griffith office in Los Angeles under the direction of W. E. Keefe, who has been very successful in this work in connection with Mr. Griffith's premiers.

In and Around Denver

O. D. WOODWARD, former president of the National Film Corporation, was arrested a second time in connection with the affairs of the film concern, on a charge of embezzlement of $500 from the funds of the corporation, May 27. He was immediately released on a $2,000 bond.

IRVING EHRENSOFT has accepted a road position with Supreme Photoplays Corporation, out of Denver.

In addition to "The Whip," "Redemption," "Lust of the Ages," "Zongar," and Billy West Comedies, Supreme has recently added "The Eyes of the World," "I Believe," "Today," featuring Florence Reid; "The Mad Lover," "God's Man," "Persuasive Peggy, "The Libertine," "Robinson Crusoe," "The Spoilers," "Purity," and "The Conquest of Canaan," with Edith Taliaferro.

H. L. CRAIG, formerly with Pathe, is a new addition to the Fox sales force. He is very enthusiastic because of his new affiliation.

C. W. ECKHARDT, district manager for Fox, with headquarters in Chicago, spent several days in Denver last week. He will visit Omaha and Minneapolis before his return to Chicago.

"JIMMY" PROVAS, owner of the Pastime, at Albuquerque, and the Princess, at Santa Fe, has been called to the colors and is now in training at Camp Cody at Deming, New Mexico. Allowing Provas six months for training and his arrival in France, the defeat of the kaiser can be safely predicted some time in January or February.

D. T. McELHINNEY, Fox road salesman, has been called in the draft and left June 24, for training at Fort Riley. The local Fox office service flag carries three stars, one for Mr. McElhinney, another for Frank Brown, and a gold star for George Shay, who lost his life in the explosion of the Florence H.

F. P. BROWN, well known in local business circles, has accepted a position as salesman for Metro, in Denver territory.

J. H. BARBER has purchased the Empress theatre at Glen Rock, Wyoming, from "Jack" O'Rourke.

Salt Lake Competes with Free Pictures

SALT LAKE exhibitors are up in arms over the fact that while they pay a $200 annual license, free motion pictures are shown at Liberty Park in the city. A show one recent evening was attended by 7,000 persons, and at Saltair there is a free motion picture theatre which is patronized by thousands. There is talk among them of boycotting the exchanges which send films to these free exhibitions.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

H. W. STUBBINS, manager of the M. & R. Exchange in Los Angeles, is on a trip this week up the coast as far as Ventura in the interest of "The Eyes of the World" and "The Warrior" and other subjects.

BENJAMIN FISH of the Los Angeles exchange of Goldwyn Pictures, will return this week from a trip to San Francisco where he went to discuss matters concerning the future policy of the Goldwyn exchanges with Manager Parsons.

IN the future Goldwyn Pictures are to be shown first run at the Kinema Theatre in Los Angeles. The first subject booked will be shown the week beginning July 14th and is the Mabel Normand subject "The Venus Model." Goldwyn Pictures were formerly shown first run at Quinn's Rialto.

MANAGER JOE MERRICK of the Los Angeles Mutual Exchange, reports all subjects starring Sessue Hayakawa made by the Haworth Productions, Inc., will be shown at Clune's Auditorium in Los Angeles. "His Birthright" has been booked for showing the week beginning September 1.

THE MARGARITA FISHER-AMERICAN MUTUAL subject "The Square Deal" is the attraction at Miller's theatre is Los Angeles this week.

THE FAIRYLAND THEATRE, a neighborhood house in Los Angeles, located at Twenty-fourth Street and Hoover, has been closed.

THE MILES THEATRE at Miles City, Montana, has been purchased by Theodore Tehurne, formerly of Moore, Montana, who has renamed the house Thrift Theatre, and re-opened it on July 22.

LETTERS received by H. E. Gausman, manager of the Foursquare Exchange in Los Angeles, from his brother Russell, tell of the injury of Will Trummel on the Western front. Russell Gausman was until his enlistment in the camouflage division, manager of the property department at Universal City, and Trummel, who served as a member of the property department staff, enlisted in the same division at the same time. Trummel is the first member of this division to be injured, the injury is not so serious that it will take him out of the service. His associates expect a speedy recovery.

M. H. LEWIS, for almost five years manager of the Los Angeles Exchange, releasing Paramount and Artcraft, who was recently transferred to San Francisco, has been returned to Los Angeles to temporarily fill the position made vacant by the departure of J. J. Halsted, who answered the draft and is now a member of the Liberty Army at Camp Kearny. Lewis will remain in Los Angeles until another manager is named by Coast Representative Herman Wobber.

SEVEN reels of film, together with two projecting machines and all projecting room equipment of the Lyric theatre at Pomona, owned by R. N. Taylor, were destroyed by fire on the evening of June 27. Emerson Armbrust and Robert Long, operators, who were in the projecting room at the time, were both badly burned. The former was engaged in mending a broken film when it caught fire. The film destroyed consisted of "The Girl In The Dark," a five reel Universal, and a two reel L-Ko Comedy. The theatre was fully covered by insurance, and the loss paid by the insurance company was sufficient to replace machinery and the film. New equipment was installed and the house re-opened July 3.

M. L. MARKOWITZ, manager of the Universal San Francisco Exchange, is spending a week at the Los Angeles branch with Manager Dave Bershon and at Universal City. Conditions in San Francisco, according to Mr. Markowitz, have not been impaired in the least by summer weather but in the cities in the interior, complaint is made of falling off of patronage due to warm weather.

GLEN HARPER, who went east to attend the meeting of the board of directors of Affiliated Distributors Corporation, and was there elected vice-president of the organization, returned to Los Angeles Monday of this week. Mr. Harper is very enthusiastic concerning the prospects of this new theatre owners' corporation, and a special meeting will probably be held within a day or two for the making of a complete report of the meeting to local exhibitors who are interested.

THE general order which has gone out to all Universal Exchanges for discontinuance of the policy to rent lithographs to exhibitors of the smaller towns and suburban houses, will not materially effect conditions in either San Francisco or Los Angeles. Heretofore it has been the policy of Universal Exchanges to rent posters, but arrangements have now been made whereby these may be secured by the exhibitors who do not wish to buy them through a poster renting company. In Los Angeles the Southern California Poster Rental Company handles the complete output of the Universal.

CLARA CHAMPION, who for six years has been a very faithful employe of the All Star Feature Distributors where she served as bookkeeper and cashier, has resigned. Mrs. Champion is one of the oldest employes, in the point of continuous service, on film row, and her absence will be noted by many exhibitors.

What Seattle Exhibitors Say

THE Seattle Mutual Exchange announces that they have already received calls for two of Sessue Hayakawa's pictures, namely, "His Birthright" and "The Temple of Dust." They will not be shown until September 1, but orders for the Rialto, Butte, Mont., have already been closed for them. The Outing-Chester pictures, which depict the outdoors, seem to be very popular with the movie men, as all have been contracted for.

C. N. RICHARDSON, connected with the Mutual up to date, has resigned in order to enter the army.

J. J. PARKER, of Portland, owner of the Majestic, was in Seattle recently, to look over some pictures. He was thoroughly entranced with "My Own United States," and has decided to run it in his playhouse, for a week, beginning July 27. It is Parker's further intention to present this wonderful Metro production with a special prologue. He will have the Majestic especially decorated for it and will have a street parade. His scheme will be unique in every particular.

IN spite of the hot weather in the Northwest, the Screen Classics, Inc., productions, of the Metro, are being strongly called for. Much interest is being taken in Metro's big production, "To Hell with the Kaiser." This interest extends over the whole Seattle district.

CARL STERN, Metro branch manager at Seattle, is engaged in covering his territory. During his absence the Seattle exchange is being handled by Harry Lustig, special representative.

THE De Luxe Feature Film Company of Seattle, is very much enthused about the way "Carmen of the Klondike" is selling. The Rex, of Seattle, took a hold of it the very first opportunity. It is a seven-reel production that made new box office records at the Clemmer, Seattle, recently, where it was put on a nine-day run. "The Grain of Dust" is a new David Graham Philips production that De Luxe will also handle.

REPRESENTATIVE HUDSON of the Goldwyn exchange of Seattle, has returned from a trip through his territory, and says that he has done the best business ever.

AMONG the recent visitors to Film Row, Seattle, was Walter Steele, of Cle Elum, Wash., whose theatre was burned down with the rest of the town in the recent Cle Elum catastrophe. Steele was at Camp Lewis, visiting a brother, at the time of the fire. His loss was approximately $9,000. He was well liked among the exchange men and they intend to do what they can to help him re-establish himself.

MADAME PAUL, who has playhouses at Olympia and Shelton, Wash., and is considered a star in the exhibition game, was a recent visitor to Film Row. So were W. G. Ripley, of Aberdeen; F. L. Stanwood, the Wenachee monopolist; Fred Mercy, the Yakima film king and F. B. Walton of Bellingham, Wash. Mr. Walton is improving his American and making the lobby very attractive.

Oscar Peterson, proprietor of the Lyric theatre at Wapato, has bought the motion picture theatre at Zillah, which gives him three show places, one each at Granger, Zillah and Wapato.

Portland News and Gossip

FRED C. QUIMBY, sales manager for Pathe, spent a day in Portland recently. He hobnobbed with various exhibitors, conferred with B. J. Sperry, who is to open a Pathe office in Portland, and booked a number of Pathe subjects with local exhibitors.

WALTER ARMSTRONG, manager of the Strand theatre, was the first Portland theatre manager to step to the front for soldiers and sailors. These words, presented on cards in prominent places, are self-explanatory: "Owing to the limited time soldiers and sailors have off duty, they will be given preference in regard to seats when the theatre is crowded."

J. J. PARKER, owner of the Majestic theatre, Portland, took a trip to Seattle last week. So did E. J. Myrick, manager of the Liberty, although he motored up with J. G. Von Herberg, who came down to Portland to confer with C. S. Jensen.

"RORY," the Liberty-Columbia publicity boss, and Harry Thorne, Columbia theatre organist, are water bugs these days. They spend each morning on the Willamette River, at swimming and canoeing.

D. CACHARELIS has opened his beach theatre at Seaside, Ore., for the summer. He expects to do a big business with his Orpheum this season.

DEAN COLLINS, Universal publicity man in the Oregon territory, framed up a novel lobby display for the showing of "The Kaiser" at the Sunset theatre, Portland.

E. D. STULLER has opened a new house at Glendale, Ore.

LESTER MARTIN has discontinued the People's theatre at Athena, Ore., and has shipped the equipment to Portland.

NEWS of a big theatre deal at Salem, Ore., is expected most any day. They say George Bligh is going to retire from business in the Oregon capital and turn to Marshfield or Astoria, or perhaps both coast points.

C. M. HILL, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Oregon, is a perpetual interrogation point these summer days. He wants to know whether there are any fish in Oregon. He hasn't booked any yet, despite investment in automobile and angling equipment sufficient for the rest of his life.

DOROTHY JACQUISH, clever manager of the Dreamland theatre, Ontario, Ore., was a Portland visitor the other day.

R. R. HUTCHINSON is opening a theatre at Winona, Wash.

W. E. MOON of Ritzville, Wash., has sold the Rex theatre to Frank P. Egan.

N. E. LEIGH will open his new house in Parma, Idaho, this month. He is also building at Nyssa, Ore., and Wilder, Idaho.

In Butte Film Circles

AMBASSADOR GERARD'S "My Four Years in Germany," is taking like wildfire in Montana. Managers report extreme satisfaction over the great picture and the patrons flock to see it. Such are reports coming from the leading theatres where it has thus far been exhibited.

WILLIAM FARNUM in "True Blue," proved a big success at the Rialto the past week. It was a great production and surely pleased patrons. Still, people in the cattle country could not conceive of such a brand as the "Little Z." Whether little or big, the brand is the same and would be known simply as "Z." It might be a "Lazy Z," in which case the "Z" is lying horizontal, or a "Flying Z," when at haphazard angle as though flying through space. Of course, if the intention was to refer to the ranch as a little one, the name would pass muster. Carelessness in nomenclature is often seen in western pictures.

THAT the business outlook is as good as could be expected under present war conditions, which are exacting a toll of young men from this state, is the report from B. H. Collier, traveling representative of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in this territory. Mr. Collier has just paid a visit to eastern Montana towns and submits this report to Branch Manager Wilson.

R. C. HUDSON is back from a visit to eastern Montana theatres. He says the indications are for improved business, crops looking better than two weeks ago.

R. E. McINTYRE, with the home office of Famous Players-Lasky at Salt Lake, was in Butte for a few days. He was checking the Butte business.

"TED" JOHNSON, traveling for Metro, for the Salt Lake office, was visiting exhibitors in the state.

MEL WILSON, just back from the convention of managers of western film exchanges for Famous Players-Lasky, reports a pleasant visit following the San Francisco meeting, at the Los Angeles studios. He was royally entertained by the managers and studio employes. In Portland he was the guest of H. T. Rosebaum, branch manager in that territory.

BUTTE theatres are not enjoying the brisk business that they generally do, the draft showing its effect at the box office. It is estimated by local government officials that this city has sent 5,000 men to the army and navy of the nation, by enlistment and through the select service law.

'Frisco Sees Preview of Valentine Film

A MIDNIGHT preview of the "The Unchastened Woman," booked for the Tivoli, was given in the latter theatre on July 2d. Grace Valentine, the star, is in San Francisco, playing a five weeks' stage engagement in "Lombardi, Ltd.," at the Cort theatre. She attended the preview and saw for the first time the result of her work in the filming of the production at New York last winter when she was at the same time playing in "Lombardi, Ltd." at the Morosco theatre. The midnight showing was witnessed by a large audience of theatrical and newspaper people, who watched with intent interest until the last scene was pictured, a little after 1:30 o'clock in the morning. Director I. E. Chadwick, who directed the picture, was also present, having come out from New York on a seven-day trip. M. J. Cohen and Turner & Dahnken arranged the preview.

Hayakawa Presides at Allies' Cafe

SESSUE HAYAKAWA presided over the "Allies' Cafe" at a social function in Hollywood a few evenings ago. Pretty girls of all the Allied nations acted as waitresses. There were sixty tables in the cafe and the place was crowded during the entire evening. The gross receipts of the cafe, amounting to $2,000, were turned over to one of the local charitable institutions.

Late Briefs of Salt Lake City

MISS DONZELLA CROSS has succeeded J. S. Stout as "salesman," with the Salt Lake Universal Film exchange.

"THE YELLOW TICKET," Pathe film, ran in Ogden four days. This is the picture which had such a successful run in Salt Lake recently.

R. C. CLARK of Moab, was in the Famous Players-Lasky office recently and replenished his equipment. While visiting here the power plant at his own town went on the "blink," owing to the big cloud burst, and held up his show for a week.

GEORGE MAYNE, manager of the First National local at Salt Lake, says "Pershing's Crusaders" did a six days' capacity business in Salt Lake, seats at 25 and 50 cents. It was booked for Ogden from July 7 to 11.

FRED JENKINS, manager of the Orpheum theatre at Oakley, Idaho, says Universal is his motto when it comes to serials that please the public, and has just contracted for "The Bull's Eye," as a summer feature.

CARL PORTER, assistant manager of the Paramount-Empress theatre at Salt Lake, took his wife and family to Evanston, Wyo., for an auto ride, recently.

"THE LION'S CLAWS," a Universal favorite, has won over Prichett and Neilson of the Elite theatre, Mammoth, Utah, according to Gus Hager, branch manager of the Universal at Salt Lake. Another Universal film he is finding taking well with the exhibitors, is "The Mystery Ship."

GEORGE MAYNE of the First National at Salt Lake, reports that "Tarzan of the Apes" is pleasing them in Idaho and is doing a big business. Another play which is taking like wildfire is Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," according to Mayne. It played at Pocatello four days.

C. E. PECK, JR., accountant at the Salt Lake office of the Universal, has received a letter from E. Susman, now with the Sixty-first infantry in France, a former Salt Laker, telling of a show given for the soldiers at the Y. M. C. A. "hut," in which the program consisted entirely of Universal films. "On the Field of Honor" was the main feature and was enjoyed to the limit, Susman says.

MADAME PETROVA appeared in person at the American theatre on Saturday, July 6. This Salt Lake motion picture house had many star attractions booked for the coming season but Madame Petrova's visit, at which time a Petrova film, "The Light Within," was given, was one of the best which Manager Mayne had to offer.

L. D. PURDY, local Pathe salesman, has left for a three weeks' tour of southern Utah.

GEORGE E. CARPENTER, manager of the Paramount-Empress, reports good business being brought by "The Firefly of France," featuring Wallace Reid. The lobby of the theatre is decorated with bunting, in honor of this war drama.

W. H. CALKINS, branch manager of the Pathe, says that the war picture, "The Allies' Review," is being requested by all his Pathe exhibitors.

HERMAN BROWN, president of the Idaho Exhibitors' League, writes that the "Tarzan" feature got him the only real money that he has had for some time.

GEORGE MAYNE, manager of First National branch at Salt Lake, reports excellent summer business by all the First National attractions.

THE American theatre is playing First National attractions as well as Metro and Select pictures, Vitagraph and Pathe.

R. E. McINTYRE, auditor at the New York office of the Famous Players-Lasky, was in Salt Lake recently, and is making a trip through the western offices to enable each exchange to give better service to the exhibitors and more efficiency in handling the business for the coming year. The new releases start September 2.

"TARZAN OF THE APES" has been doing capacity business recently, as well as Charley Chaplin in "A Dog's Life," at the American theatre.

VITAGRAPH'S local management has been showing "Over the Top" in Salt Lake, Arthur Guy Empey's play, depicting modern war conditions.

GOING into the office of George Mayne, of the First National, the correspondent saw a copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS lying on his desk. On inquiry, it was learned that the genial head of the concern thinks a lot of the newsy publication and wouldn't be without it for the biggest film ever produced. He says it means money to the producer and exhibitor alike, to take it.

THE First National has just acquired the "Still Alarm" rights and "The Mothers of Liberty or the French Boy's Answer."

THE branch auditor of the World Film Company was a visitor at the company's Salt Lake branch, this week, and was pleased with the office work, when shown around the branch by Mr. Wolf, the local manager.

GEORGE MAYNE, manager of the American theatre, announced the "Moral Suicide" for the American theatre, July 9, and the following week Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in "The Passing of the Third Floor Back."

A WONDERFUL business is reported in "My Four Years in Germany," in California and the Northwest, by Metro exhibitors.

ANNOUNCEMENT in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, by the main office of the Famous Players-Lasky, of their production plans for the new year, has instilled a splendid spirit of optimism throughout the exchanges of the Salt Lake district. Various branch managers have written to Mr. Marcus, expressing their confidence that they will write a much larger volume of business in the coming than in the year now closing. Exhibitors throughout the territory have written Mr. Marcus, promising they will take a larger percentage of Paramount-Artcraft pictures than they did last year.

THE draft is hitting the operators' union hard, in Salt Lake, there not being enough operators here now to go around.

Directory of New Theatres

ARIZONA

A. F. Ahrens, lessee and manager of the new Hippodrome theatre, now under course of erection at Douglas, announces that the work will be completed by August 1 next. The material used in the building is concrete and gypsum blocks.

CALIFORNIA

Miller's new theatre now nearing completion at Los Angeles is to be known as "the California."

Rapid headway is being made on the work of remodeling the Loring theatre. C. L. Nye, owner of the building, is spending something like $15,000 on the work, and when he completes it for Howe and Merrill, Riverside, will have one of the finest theatres of its size on the Pacific Coast.

M. F. Terry is about to erect a number of houses for Government employees at Terminal Island, Los Angeles, and in addition will put up a large motion picture theatre for their use.

CONNECTICUT

Architect Herbert R. Brewster, 116 Nassau street, New York, has been commissioned to prepare plans for a new theatre to be erected by C. Ducy and W. T. Murphy, at New London. The site will be the property recently purchased on Bank street by the Abonn Clothing Company. As yet no details have been arranged.

ILLINOIS

Rumors are rife in Hillsboro to the effect that Art Moore, who has recently bought a piece of property on Main street, is about to erect a motion picture thereon. Mr. Moore is, at present, noncommitttal as to his intentions.

INDIANA

Plans have been prepared for the erection of a new motion picture theatre at Hammond to cost $50,000. It will be located across from the post office, and will be modern in every respect.

IOWA

Johnson and Swanson have completed plans for improving and enlarging the Mystic Ttheatre building, Madrid. The building will be lengthened twenty feet on the rear, the stage enlarged, the lighting facilities improved, and the seating capacity increased. When completed, it is believed, the seating capacity will be greater by about 100.

MINNESOTA

Frank Rabinowitz, proprietor of the Empress theatre, Duluth, has bought a piece of property adjoining Monitor Hall, upon which he intends to erect a motion picture theatre.

NEW YORK

A modern theatre to cost upward of a million dollars will be built by the B. F. Keith interests at Fordham, according to plans that have just been filed. Permits have been granted, and the only thing that stands in the way of beginning building operations immediately is the scarcity of steel.

The new theatre will go up at the corner of Fordham Road and Valentine avenue. It will face 104 feet on Fordham road and 200 feet on Valentine avenue. Entrance will be on Fordham road.

The style of architecture will be French renaissance, and will be of the very latest design. Building materials will consist of marble and brick, limestone and terra cotta, and the building will be of steel construction and entirely fireproof throughout.

Work has been resumed on the two new theatres being built by Selwyn and Company on West Forty-second street, near Broadway, New York City. The steel and other building materials needed for the two theatres are now available, and the work will be rushed in order to have them ready for opening about the first of December.

The theatres are to be of steel and concrete construction. They are to be built by the Fuller Construction Company.

One of the new theatres is to be known as the Times Square. No name has been chosen as yet for the other. When completed they will make three new theatres to have been built by Selwyn and Company on West Forty-second street within a year. The first to be completed will be the Selwyn theatre. That is to be opened early in September, the first attraction being Jane Cowl in "Information, Please," a new play written by herself in collaboration with Jane Murfin.

Through arrangements with Artcraft Pictures, George D. Grundy has turned his Lexington theatre, New York City, into a picture house, and will offer photoplays there at popular prices immediately after their first showing on Broadway. There will be a change of bill twice each week; the first attraction being held the first four days of the week; the second, the last three days. It is understood that this arrangement will continue until Mr. Grundy's plans for the forthcoming season will be made public.

by WALLACE IRWIN

Directed by David Smith

All through their years of youth, they had visioned that one radiant event—their marriage to each other. And just as their hopes and dreams were on the eve of realization—then—

She received the fateful message that he had been killed. And,—despairing, frantic, her heart dead within her—she consented to marry another man.

And then—the scene at the marriage altar—the knowledge that the man she loved still lived—that the bond of marriage loomed between them like an unscalable wall! Was there no way out—no law of God or man?

Yes, there was one. Not the divorce court, nor yet widowhood. But one ancient law that once more let the sunlight filter into the life of a true woman.

"And so as we two old people sat in the darkened theatre, suddenly there flashed upon the screen pictures of muddy men marching, clad in the uniform that marked them as British "Tommies," fresh from the shock of battle and scenes of carnage, yet smiling as only brave men can smile; then came more pictures, this time of the men who said and made good their words "they shall not pass", the heroic French who for four years have borne a terrible burden and borne it well; then more pictures of other great fighting men, the Italians, proving their mettle on the Piave; and then, with the audience rising and cheering, down a dusty road in a never ending line, our own boys with the sun of France glittering on their helmets, on their way to the trenches to take up Civilization's burden. Our eyes were wet, for among them, probably, was our own boy who is 'Over There'! We have the Allied Governments and Pathé to thank for the thrills we got from the 'Allies' Official War Review.'"

"ANGEL CHILD"

Kathleen Clifford is one of the few screen stars who can successfully delineate youth of the "Angel Child" age with its extremes of energy, fun and propensities for practical jokes.

In her first Plaza production Miss Clifford presents a splendid piece of child character study and, with the aid of a capable cast, succeeds in producing a most facinating drama lightened by bright touches of genuine comedy. Pictured in Five Reels.

Released as part of Hodkinson Service.

First U. S. Official War Feature

EVERY MAN, woman and child in the country wants to see pictures that show what Uncle Sam is doing to help win the war. "Pershing's Crusaders" tells the story fully of the first months of activity, and finally shows the welcome of our own boys to the shores of France, with General Pershing at their head.

Fathers and mothers, sweethearts and wives, big sisters and little brothers want to know what their boy is doing, how he is being cared for, and how their money is being spent.

Show "Pershing's Crusaders" at your theatre and so answer these questions—answer them with pictures that tell the truth — that give accurate information.

Many exhibitors have already booked "Pershing's Crusaders" for an early showing. Numbers of requests are coming in daily. Is yours among them? If not, get behind the Government and announce to your patrons they will have the privilege of seeing this great patriotic film in your theatre.

THE UNBELIEVER

Mr. H. E. Ellison, Manager Rialto Theatre, Denver, Colorado, says:

GEORGE KLEINE SYSTEM,
DENVER, COLORADO.

Dear Sir:—

I regret that it was impossible for you to be in Denver during the run of "THE UNBELIEVER" so you could have enjoyed with me the enthusiasm of our audiences.

The engagement broke all records of the Rialto by a good margin the first week and then held it over four additional days, which, as you know, is something very unusual on Curtis Street. I am satisfied it was the most talked-of picture ever shown in Denver. It is more than "just a picture." "THE UNBELIEVER" is one of those rare gems we see only occasionally. It scores from some angle with every man, woman or child who sees it; and that is a quality rarely found in a production of any sort.

During the first week of the engagement more than 200 men enlisted in the Marine Corps with the recruiting officers stationed at the theatre, and it was so much talked of that the leading minister of the city used "THE UNBELIEVER" as the subject of his sermon following the showing of the picture. This was the Rev. Dr. Boyle of the Central Presbyterian Church.

I am satisfied that a return engagement will again do a fine business and am ready to talk to you about such engagement any time.

With best wishes,

Very truly yours,
SIGNED: H. E. ELLISON.

On the Way to the Hub

WHAT will the Boston Convention be?—and do? The answer, given from the present outlook, may be summed up by a question mark.

We don't know.

We are wondering—like others.

The attendance will be small. The small town exhibitor is having his troubles, and railway expense is high these days. The big town exhibitor is unusually busy, and, as usual, he doesn't give a rip about League affairs.

There has been a little political buzzing—very little, however, and of a deeply subterranean order. We don't know what it means and care less.

Ernest H. Horstman is the only avowed candidate for President of the League. He is, in our opinion, a good man; and his platform sounds good, especially that plank in which he declares that League administration and the film business should tolerate no connection whatever.

There is rumor of a Chicago candidate—possibly Peter J. Shaefer, a prominent representative of that group of bigger theatre owners which the League has never had as active members and officers and which any exhibitor organization must have, to be strong and representative.

The Boston Convention is a reflex of last year's.

The Boosters Are Alive

THE Boston Boosters, through their numbers and enthusiasm at Chicago, carried the Convention date back with them. They expected an Exposition, but will have a ball instead; and Boston has always made these affairs very successful.

The Boosters are a live organization. They believe in the principle of exhibitor organization—for organization's sake. And they believe that exhibitor organization is possible and practical.

Success to them! And praise be for honest principles and worthy enthusiasm.

But, unfortunately, the same reflex that carried the Convention to Boston carries along a League beset—what remains of it—with political commercialism.

Will politics be played?

Yes—unless the New England exhibitors stamp them out.

And politics will do either one of two things—elect officers whose tenure of office will be simply a matter of self-glorification and advancement through title holdings, or else politics will sell the League out to some commercial enterprise.

And either way spells ruin for exhibitor organization the coming year.

What will it be, gentlemen?

You are facing a serious situation.

The country needs you—needs you badly. The President has asked, directly and solemnly, for your aid.

"The Maker of Morale"

THE motion picture today is recognized as the maker of morale; and morale or spirit, it may be called is—right here and in the trenches of Europe—an indispensable factor in the war for civilization.

These are no high sounding phrases, gentlemen; these are homely facts and solemn ones.

Your screens should be tendered through exhibitor organization. If this isn't possible you don't deserve the name of exhibitor organization.

And if you don't rise to this demand—this opportunity—some other organization will. For the war and the motion picture's inevitable part in it will certainly not wait upon you.

We are asking that you make this situation the keynote of your convention, that you subject every man and every proposition brought upon your floor to the searching light.

It will shine clear through the self-seeking politician, and, equally, through every proposition that doesn't make for a stronger industry and the closer application of this industry to the prime duty now facing it.

We want you, too, to understand our attitude toward the Convention and toward the M. P. E. L. of America.

On Our Own Feet

WE have no axes to grind; no politics to play; the success or failure of your convention and your organization to follow don't mean one selfish dollar to us. We are totally independent of yours and every other organization or branch of or enterprise in the industry.

Our prime duty is to be of business service to the exhibitor of motion pictures.

Therefore we believe in and are back of exhibitor organization—of exhibitor organization whose prime duty it is, also, to be of business service to the exhibitor—of exhibitor organization which, thereby, becomes so strong that in any exigency which threatens the industry, as in a supreme crisis like the one that now threatens America, can rise and do its duty to the motion picture.

We have made a serious error in the past.

In our efforts to help build and maintain exhibitor organization we glossed over its weaknesses and magnified its strength. We made important gatherings out of conventions whose weakness was pitiable.

Not the least bad effect of this has been the state of mind of the big theatre owner. Being busily occupied, he has believed that League affairs were successfully handled and didn't need him.

Exhibitor organization does need this exhibitor. There's a place and an office for him. Exhibitor organization will never amount to anything until it does include him.

We propose to tell the truth hereafter.

The truth today is that you have little organization left; that you have got to build anew, with a new foundation and a clean slate.

The best thing you've got is the certainty that exhibitor organization is a necessity; and that now patriotism alone demands it. No exhibitor has a right or a genuine excuse to evade the call of organization.

So on our part, gentlemen, we are looking and hoping. What will the answer be?

Pruning the Deadly Overhead

WE continue to talk about unnecessary expense in distribution. We contend and insist, in one breath, that there are too many exchanges.

Yet comparatively we do little about it. Distribution, like the discussion of it, has gone on in just about the same way. And the number of exchanges has not been decreased.

Last spring, W. W. Hodkinson determined to place Paralta pictures through the branch offices of the General Film Company and now the American Film Company announces that its products will be distributed through Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The move seems an eminently sane one. Pathe Exchange will perform for the American Company simply the mechanical functions of a clearing house which this distributor is very well qualified to do because of its specialization in its particular field, to the advantage of the producer and to its own profit.

The American Company without tying up considerable capital in exchanges, and without the maintenance of the very considerable exchange overhead, secures a very satisfactory mechanical distribution, and effects for itself the saving which the picture producers today can very well use—for instance, in the giving of additional service to the exhibitors of its pictures.

This is not a merger of exchanges. The American Film Company will have its own salesmen, do its own advertising, give its own service on its pictures. It merely utilizes the room and equipment of the Pathe branches.

Merging the exchanges is another matter that is just as difficult to bring about as the merger of producers.

The American plan is simply doing what is done in other lines of business where the wholesaler handles many competing lines of goods, giving no preference to any one, but simply filling orders as they are created by the quality of the goods, and by the manufacturers' selling efforts and enterprise.

We haven't too much of selling and advertising effort today. That is not the trouble. We have too many routes over exchanges. These routes can be greatly diminished without interfering in the least with the field of any manufacturer, and with the result of greatly reducing the present unnecessarily high cost of distribution.

What is to keep other companies from following the pathway that has been opened?

Too Much of Good Things

THOMAS D. SOREIRO of Boston comes to bat on the subject of titles.

Titles and subtitles have a lot to do with box office success, he admits; but some producers seem to think they mean everything. One recent picture contained nearly a thousand feet of subtitles.

Subtitles should be an adjunct to action: but they should not replace action. Action, on the other hand, should take any opportunity to do without subtitles.

Since January 1st and including all trade paper issues to date Motion Picture News has published 153 more pages of paid advertising than any other trade paper.

There's a reason.

See page 546.

The audience may miss a subtitle and thereby lose continuity where the picture depends overmuch on its text matter. It is easier to pick up the thread of the story where scenes abound.

Again subtitles are not popular in foreign language speaking districts. There's a danger, all in all, in restricting the true province of the picture by giving it a language rather than an action appeal.

War Service First and Last

THE lines starting on the previous page were written as the title indicates, "On the Way to the Hub."

Now, as we sit in a Boston hotel, with the elections still to come, we are more and more impressed with the absolute necessity of exhibitor amalgamation to the end that the theatres of the country may put forth their utmost for war service.

There is present here in Boston the inevitable atmosphere of politics—but there is underlying it, and threatening to envelope it, the sincere conviction on the part of many of those in attendance that war service must hurdle all thoughts of petty politics and internal strife.

No words of ours can point this warning too strongly.

No past political quarrels and present animosities will serve to excuse the industry if the dawn of Peace finds organized exhibitors unworthy of its blessings.

One solid exhibitor organization must come—whether it be an amalgamation of the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. or whatever the means employed. United effort we must have, regardless of the outcome of the week's election.

If it be necessary to secure unity the officers chosen at this Convention can make no greater contribution to the cause of Democracy than to resign—stepping aside in the face of necessity.

Boston Delivered the Goods

WE remarked above that the New England exhibitors and Boston Boosters were alive.

Writing from the Hub we would like to add the fact that they are efficient and successful hosts.

The arrangements for the Convention and entertainment are perfect—a fine tribute to New England and its exhibitors.

It is one of the regrettable happenings of an industry which has its share of such incidents that an unfortunate chain of events should have robbed the New England exhibitors of the full benefits of their efforts.

Serving It With Speed and Ginger

IF you want to get a lesson in the art of drawing up a binding guarantee turn to Page 571 and read the first publication of the new export regulations issued by the War Trade Board.

There's a summary there of the agreement which the foreign buyer—not the exporter, mind you—must sign and turn over to the Trade Board representative at the particular Embassy before he can receive the film shipment which has already been licensed for export from the United States.

And there isn't anything short of guaranteeing the state of his mother-in-law's health which that agreement doesn't call upon the buyer to sign.

We can foresee some lusty howls from buyers in neutral countries when they are called upon to sign the dotted line—either that or they will affix their signatures with their fingers crossed—and then it will be a healthy chase for the authorities to keep up with them.

But our information is that regulations similar in scope are now enforced on exporters by all the Ally countries so they must be prompted by experience and a knowledge of the necessities.

But read them—you'll get some pointers on drawing up contracts.

And as we understand it—picture men are always doing either one of three things: "Sitting in on a conference;" "at an important showing in the projection room," or "signing some big contracts."

* * * *

But, speaking of conferences, we know of one film man who'll bust up a conference just to shake hands, and say: "Hello! I'm busy. Can't you come around to-morrow?" and you leave with a smile.

The man is Richard A. Rowland.

* * * *

WHILE you're back on Page 571 reading that agreement we mention above, glance over the department "The World Market."

And make a mental note to look for it every week.

We'll tell you why. Glance through the trade journals of almost any other American industry these days and you will marvel at the amount of time and thought that is being given by the leaders in all walks to the export question present and—after the war.

Put your ear to the ground in the neighborhood of Wall Street and be surprised at the rumblings of Big Money laying plans for world markets—and, incidentally, not forgetting films in their calculations.

If we are to keep pace in the "after the war" rush it certainly behooves all of us to keep an eye on this export field.

And "The World Market," now enlarged, will do it for you.

* * * *

You can't beat that boy, Frank Tichenor. When he had to choose a floor in 729 Seventh avenue for his local General Film Exchange he chose the ninth—with the result that almost everybody who enters the building stops at the G. F. office.

For the local cars end there, and the express cars make their first stop there.

While on our own floor, the fourth—you can always find the stairway.

* * * *

HOW'S this for an all-star show—S. L. Rothapfel, of New York and the Marines; Harold B. Franklin, of Buffalo; S. Barret McCormick, of Indianapolis, and L. H. Grandjean, of New Orleans?

That's just part of the bill offered by the Exhibitors Service Bureau this week—and just an indication of the all-star attractions there every week.

It's called our EXHIBITOR DEPARTMENT—but frankly, for reading of the System Magazine type on our own picture business we would commend it to producers and exhibitors alike.

For instance, this week Rothapfel starts a series on the handling of the propaganda pictures in theatres—as valuable an aid to the cause of the Committee on Public Information as it is to the exhibitor.

S. Barret McCormick's third article uses his experiences as a basis on which to discuss "Continuity in Advertising."

Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, talks on giving the theatre atmosphere with stage settings.

L. E. Grandjean, publicity manager of the Liberty Theatre, New Orleans, gives valuable hints in describing the unusual and striking pre-opening campaign which he conducted for that theatre.

Take an hour off—settle down after dinner to-night, and give yourself a reading treat. And learn what you have been missing.

* * * *

And speaking of those big exhibitors we think that some of them have taken to commenting to MOTION PICTURE NEWS office. We've seen Harold Franklin in the office twice within two weeks; Frank Newman, of Kansas City, twice within two months, and every now and then Soriero, of Boston; S. Barret McCormack, and half the Advisory Board.

* * * *

YOU can't blame us for taking up all the space we have so far on this page talking about ourselves. What chance have we to give you a lot of breezy personal jottings with half the industry up in Boston?

If you didn't go yourself—which means if you were in our select company—then you will want to read the first complete story of the happenings to date appearing on the following two pages.

You'll find there plenty of hints that the next few weeks will not be shy of newsy happenings. There is the defi of the League to the National Association; the prospect of amalgamation with the A. E. A.—oh, there's lots of spice in sight.

And there's the hint that late events Thursday may cause considerable rumpus—even a split.

It's a merry life.

CARL LAEMMLE said something of interest when he declared at the Chicago convention of Universal Managers that women would be appointed to all future sales vacancies caused by calls to military service.

The same day George Kleine was quoted as declaring the possibility of women branch managers for his service.

And World Pictures sends us a story regarding one of their managers—a woman.

This is getting serious.

The next thing you know we'll be losing our job to a woman trade paper editor.

And then those hounding press agents will have to be nice.

We'll have our revenge.

League Prepares for N.A.M.P.I. Fight

Resolutions Adopted in Boston Call for Fifty-Fifty Representation on Association's Board and All Committees— Tender Olive Branch to A. E. A.

BOSTON (Special).—Smarting under the effects of the Exposition fiasco, it did not take the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League long to cast a gauntlet of defiance at the feet of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. But instead of the expected withdrawal from the N. A. M. P. I. the attack took the form of a strategical move in the adoption of resolutions calling for a fifty-fifty representation on the Association's Board of Directors and all committees.

Other resolutions adopted at the convention, which probably holds the record for slim attendance, resulted in the tendering of an olive branch to the American Exhibitors' Association; and others covering advance deposits, Sunday opening and the fifteen-cent reel tax.

Tuesday Night the Start

Events started with a rush on Tuesday night when at the initial meeting of the Convention a resolution was passed to the effect that the exhibitor directors representing the League in the National Association refrain from taking part in the Association's activities until the League is given a fifty per cent representation on the Board of Directors and all committees, or until such a reorganization of the Association is made as will permit of this.

Pending this action of the National Association the Executive Committee of the League is given full power to act.

A resolution then followed giving the services of all members of the League to the call of Adolph Zukor in charge in the industry's drive for the next Liberty Loan.

The Maine exhibitor, Alfred Black, was responsible for the resolution pointing the way towards amalgamation. This called for a doubling of the Executive Committee membership so as to permit of representation for the A. E. A. in the event that amalgamation becomes possible.

Another dig at the memberships of the National Association was read in the resolution calling for an investigation of the fifteen-cent reel tax. Many of the delegates were emphatic in their declaration that the last word had not been said on this question even though it has been simmering quietly for the past few months.

That perennial topic of discussion at exhibitor conventions, the advance deposit, did not fail to make its appearance. Tuesday's session voted that the League would seek during the coming year to have legislation placed on the statute books of the various States placing advance deposits for film rentals under the control of the different State banking laws.

NO CANDIDATES

AS far as the atmosphere in Boston would indicate, the election of officers for the National Association on Friday, will proceed with the smoothness of a well-oiled clock.

No candidates are mentioned—not even for the office of president. If there is any electioneering being done then it is moving so quietly as to shame an Indiana politician.

The general opinion seems to prevail that William Fox can have the job of president if he wants it. Pressed further the same general opinion will admit that William A. Brady can have the job again—if he will reverse his decision to withdraw. Walter Irwin and Arthur Friend are also mentioned.

But there are no avowed candidates—there is apparently no electioneering.

It was decided to appoint a permanent committee of the League which would have as its object the securing of legislation in the various States permitting the opening of picture theatres on Sundays during the war at least.

The National Association's Plans

William A. Brady addressed the League members at the Thursday afternoon session, following which the National Association's share in the Boston week got under way with the dinner to T. P. O'Connor, M.P., Cinema Censor for Great Britain, in the evening. Many of the film magnates who had been conspicuous by their absence earlier in the week arrived on the one o'clock train from New York on Thursday.

The National Association's election is scheduled for Friday morning with the perspective slate still a dark mystery.

League Politics Shape Up

League politics was not long in filling the air with the arrival of the delegates on Tuesday. And Peter Schaefer, of Chicago, was quick to jump to the front as the dark horse probability for League president.

It became apparent then that the election as usual hinged on the New York and Chicago votes. But this did not put a quietus on the electioneering for other candidates. New England did yeoman work for Horstman, with Black, of Maine, seemingly at odds however, while Pennsylvania was on the job boosting for Judge O'Donnell.

As a matter of fact there wasn't much room for electioneering. The attendance was one hundred and twenty-nine delegates according to the per capita taxes paid, but it is likely that eighty would be a figure closer to the truth.

Trouble Looms Up

There were strong hints that trouble would develop from the ranks of the New York delegates. Headed by Sydney Cohen and John Mannheimer, these exhibitors were present with the cry of war service on their lips, standing as a unit for amalgamation of the Exhibitor organizations to give the best results. Rumor had it that New York was likely to start a contest over the legality of the election.

Another item prompting trouble arose when the news became public that a committee appointed by President Lee A. Ochs had given the stock in the Trade Review held by the League back to that publication.

Delegates found it impossible to learn the reasons alleged for the action, nor were they exactly certain as to the legality of the transfer in the arbitrary manner used.

Praise for the New England exhibitors on the perfect arrangements for the Convention were heard on all sides.

A letter received from Walter W. Irwin and read at Thursday's dinner requested that the National Association postpone action on the League's defi until a full meeting of the association could be held later.

Mr. Irwin was kept from attending by a recent accident. On Thursday afternoon the prospect of a quorum for the association meeting was slim.

Reach Settlement in Stewart Fight

Louis Mayer, of Boston, Secures Anita Stewart Contract—Year's Litigation Ends with Both Sides Friendly—Courts Upheld Vitagraph

FOLLOWING a series of conferences between attorneys representing the Vitagraph Company of America and Louis B. Mayer of Boston, it became known Thursday that an amicable arrangement had been made whereby Vitagraph agreed to a settlement of the damage suit of $250,000 which has been pending against Mr. Mayer and his associates in the courts of Boston by the payment of Vitagraph a very substantial sum.

It was also announced by Vitagraph that, owing to the time lost through the automobile accident in which Miss Stewart figured, it had been determined that the period of her services left to them was too limited to carry out its production plans, and that it had agreed, as part of the settlement, to let Mr. Mayer have her now instead of on September 3, when she would go to him under a contract signed last year, and which was to take effect when the time expired on that date with Vitagraph.

Mayer Makes Large Payment

Mr. Mayer said that in consideration of the settlement of the Boston litigation and in consideration of Vitagraph's fairness in letting him have Miss Stewart's services, he being particularly anxious to get her at once, he had agreed to the payment of a substantial sum of money to the company.

Thus ends a legal controversy which has continued for almost a year, with friendly relations now existing between all parties to it.

It was last September that the Vitagraph Company brought suit against Miss Stewart to restrain her from leaving it and breaking her contract with it, naming Mr. Mayer and others as co-defendants with her. It developed that Miss Stewart had signed a contract to work for Mr. Mayer, her services for him to start when she was through with Vitagraph. The Mayer contract was not an issue in the suit, the Vitagraph contention being based solely on Miss Stewart's attempt to break her contract with it, and Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, announced at the time that he was suing not only to protect his company's interests, but also to make a test which should establish a precedent in the matter of a star's contractual obligations to the producer.

Justice Mullen, of the New York Supreme Court, granted Vitagraph a temporary restraining order against Miss Stewart, and subsequently Justice Mullen's decision was confirmed on appeal by the Appellate Division the injunction continuing indefinitely. The case was brought to trial before Justice Daniel F. Cohalan, in Part V, of the New York Supreme Court, on January 22 last, and the hearings lasted three days. He rendered his decision the first week in April, ordering Miss Stewart to finish up her time with Vitagraph before attempting to work for any one else, and fixed a period of twenty-six weeks as the amount of time she owed the company under a contract by which she was guaranteed $127,000 per year by Vitagraph. This meant that she must work for Vitagraph until about September 3, and thereafter she began work at the Brooklyn studio under direction of Wilfrid North.

Miss Stewart had only been at work a short time when she and her director, with the other members of her company, were caught in a serious automobile accident in Brooklyn. Many members of the company were injured, Miss Stewart being so badly hurt she was laid up for more than a week. Her director, Wilfrid North, however, was out for more than a month, and when he returned to work, was using crutches. This loss of time, according to Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, interfered seriously with the plans he had made for Miss Stewart.

"It was our intention," he said, "to make a series of pictures with Miss Stewart as the star, but owing to the loss of time engendered by the automobile accident, it became apparent that in the limited period of time left to us, it would be a tremendous task to make the pictures and to make them of the quality we had decided upon. Therefore, when Mr. Mayer made us a very substantial offer to settle the litigation and expressed a wish to get Miss Stewart's services at once, we decided to accept his offer.

"The settlement was made on an amicable basis, and all parties seem satisfied. In our original suit, I had at stake the principle of a star's obligation to an employer as well as the interests of the company, and the courts vindicated that principle fully."

VAN BEUREN SIGNS THE DREWS

Bill Posting Magnate to Enter Films with Comedy Company

MOTION Picture News is enabled to definitely announce the plans of Mr. and Mrs. Sydney Drew to make their return to the screen.

In connection with the announcement comes the important news that A. J. Van Beuren, among the most important factors in the bill-posting world, is planning to enter the motion picture field.

Van Beuren, acting in association with Dr. Harry Kelton, has placed the Drews under a long-term contract which calls for the making of twelve two-reel comedies a year. Releasing arrangements have not yet been decided, but it is said that the arrangements for distribution are in the hands of William (Pop) Hart, long identified with New York Exchange circles.

It is said that the plan of one comedy a month was decided on because the Drews intend to devote special attention to have them "produced and not manufactured."

Production will start late in August when the Drews' successful stage production, "Keep Us Smiling" opens in New York for a season's run.

Solve Troubles of Denver's National Film

All of the internal difficulties of the National Film Corporation of this city have been satisfactorily adjusted through the efforts of George A. Levy, chief of the industrial bureau of the city of Denver.

O. D. Woodward, former president and directing manager of the corporation, has resigned from all connection with the corporation except that of a stockholder, and all differences between Mr. Woodward and his former associates have been mutually reconciled. As a result of this arrangement he has turned over to the corporation the contract of purchase covering the entire twenty-eight acres of ground on which the studio is located; certain blocks of stock over which there was disagreement as to ownership, and also his contract as directing manager.

Under Mr. Woodward's direction sixteen pictures have been produced by the National. He is succeeded as a director by Frank B. Willis, present business manager of the corporation.

Chas. Christie's Wife Dies on Coast

Mrs. Edna Durant Christie, wife of President Charles Christie of the Christie Film Company, died Tuesday evening at the Methodist Hospital, Los Angeles, following an operation for stomach trouble. The funeral will be held Saturday morning at 10:30, with interment in Hollywood Cemetery. The pall bearers will be George Melford, Robert Thornby, George Loane Tucker, Scott Sidney, William Horsley and Fred L. Porter.

Mrs. Durant came to Los Angeles from London, Ontario., four years ago.

Triangle Making Many Additions at Studio

In addition to the announcements contained in the "Live News from the Producers" section of this week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, late advices from Los Angeles indicate that the Triangle organization is continuing to add to its studio forces at the West Coast studios.

The newcomers whose acquisition is told of in the late news are all directors. Lawrence Wyndham has been contracted for to produce the coming Taylor Holmes features. Jack Conway, who previously contributed his name to many Triangle successes, is returning to the fold as a director, as is E. Mason Hopper, now finishing his second production for Metro starring Bert Lytell.

Farrar Off for Wyoming for "Hell Cat"

With "The Turn of the Wheel," her first Goldwyn production completed, Geraldine Farrar left New York this week for Wyoming, where her second Goldwyn vehicle, "The Hell Cat," will be staged. Reginald Barker, producer of the initial production, will also handle the reins on the second.

In addition to the star and director, and an advance man to select locations, the party traveling to Cody, Wyoming, includes Lou Tellegen, the prima donna's husband, a Goldwyn publicity representative, a complete technical staff and her personal attendants.

"The Hell Cat," which is from the pen of Willard Mack, is described as "absolutely modern in treatment and theme." Milton Sills and Thomas Santschi are included in the special cast secured to support the star.

Mary Won't Start Work Until September

LOS ANGELES (Special).—The current week again brought its usual batch of Mary Pickford rumors, consequent on the fact that the little star's current Famous Players contract has expired and she is going on a vacation.

But out of the mess of rumors, last-minute indications now point strongly to the fact that Famous Players-Lasky will come through the storm with flags waving. In any event, Miss Pickford will not resume work until September, and there are hints that she may retire for several months.

Hampton Del Ruth Leaves Sennett Forces

LOS ANGELES (Special).—Hampton Del Ruth, for the past five years scenario editor and manager of productions for the Mack Sennett comedy organization, has resigned. No announcement has been issued as to his future plans.

Rumor on the West Coast also declares that Polly Moran, the Sheriff Nell of the Sennett comedies, is forming other connections at the expiration of her contract on July 22.

Honor Roll

Charles Condon, well known and popular in motion picture circles of New York, who was for a number of years connected with Motography and more recently with Photoplay Magazine as advertising manager, has received his call in the draft and will probably depart for one of the National Army camps the first of August. Condon was a member of the new 7th Regiment, New York State Guard, and has already received training.

Beverly Griffith, personal representative of Joe Brandt of Universal and for a long time connected with this company in various capacities, has enlisted in the aviation section of the Signal Corps and will train for a commission at Puget Sound, Seattle. Griffith was cameraman, assistant director and assistant manager of production to Henry McRae at Universal City previous to his appointment as traveling sales representative.

Bernard P. Arons, formerly with Bert Adler as his assistant in his publicity business and cashier in the Pathe Park Avenue studio, writes from Camp Joseph E. Johnston, Florida, where he is in the quartermaster department, that he expects to go over soon. Meanwhile he would like to hear from his friends in the business, care of Supply Company 315, Barracks K 4.

Two new stars will soon be added to Triangle's service flag. When the drawing of draft numbers of boys who have turned twenty-one in the past year was held, two Triangle employes found their numbers among the first out. They are Cyril Gardner, the "boy cutter," and John Curtis Gault, in the Transportation Department. Both are preparing to leave on a moment's notice.

J. E. Beck, formerly assistant manager of the Vitagraph Exchange, Cleveland, is now a corporal in Uncle Sam's army. He is stationed at Camp Gordon.

Tom Forman, well known screen actor who has been seen in many Paramount pictures, is now a lieutenant in the army, having just won his commission at the officers' training camp at Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga.

John Miller, for several years operator at the Colville theatre, Colville, Wis., left last week with the draft contingent and hopes to get into the aeroplane section of the army. He went to Vancouver.

Next Fairbanks Scheduled for August 5th

August 5th has been set as the release date for the next Douglas Fairbanks production by Artcraft. It is "Bound in Morocco," written and staged by Allan Dwan. The locale denoted by the title was faithfully reproduced at the Lasky studio for the production.

Universal Gets Sturgeon as Feature Director

LOS ANGELES (Special).—R. S. Sturgeon, for years well known as a feature producer, especially for his Vitagraph successes, has been signed by Universal to produce outdoor pictures.

Mr. Sturgeon will direct Monroe Salisbury, who has come to the front rapidly during the past year as a Bluebird star. Work is already beginning on the first Sturgeon-Salisbury production, "Hugon, the Mighty," a story of the Canadian Northwest.

A new office has been created at the Universal studio and Eliot Clausen appointed to the job. He will be known as the "Manager of the Continuity Department." Clausen was the author of "The Kaiser" and the continuity on "The Yellow Dog," on which production work is nearing completion.

Director William Taylor Joins Officers' Camp

William D. Taylor, long listed among the producers of screen features, sailed from New York last week to join an English officers training camp. Taylor, who is president of the western division of the Motion Picture Directors Association, is an Englishman, born in Ireland.

His most recent activities have been as director for Mary Pickford, his name being found on the productions, "How Could You, Jean?" "Captain Kidd, Jr.," and "The Mobilization of Johanna," just completed.

Jack Levy in Charge of Fox Philly Office

George Dembow, recently Fox manager in Philadelphia, has entered the army and is succeeded in the Quaker town office by Jack Levy.

Levy has been connected with the Fox New York exchange for some time and also has many friends in Philadelphia, where he was formerly manager of the Greater New York Film Rental Company and later connected with the Fox office there.

Abel Now with Fox

Sydney E. Abel, who has had wide experience as a film salesman, has become identified with the Fox Film Corporation as a special representative, it is announced from the William Fox offices.

Mr. Abel, who had been special representative of Select Pictures since the organization of that concern, is one of the best known film men on Broadway and brings to his new work qualities of salesmanship that make him a particularly valuable aide.

What Kind of a Fellow Is—Earle?

Being a Glance at the Real Human Side of the Big Men of the Picture Game Caught in Action

By William A. Johnston

WHAT chance have we got to add anything to your general fund of information regarding Edward Earle in the slender confines of this page? It can't be done. Didn't a two hundred or so of you hire a banquet hall at the Hotel McAlpin only a few months ago just because you already knew what kind of a fellow Edward Earle is?

And didn't the fact of your gathering there on that occasion prove that you already know that—in the language of the club—Edward Earle is a regular fellow?

What more can we say?

What can we say that will compare with the words that came from the speakers' table that night, or with the hearty appraisals of this fellow Earle that we heard from the tables all around the room?

We repeat — it can't be done.

And besides — speaking of comparisons — what chance have we to shine in rivalry with the wit of Toastmaster Landon on that occasion?

Come to think of it, perhaps we should have induced G. Warren Landon to write this page this week.

Then we might have escaped with some of the tattered shreds of our own reception.

But for the benefit of those who were not present on the occasion of the industry's tribute to Brother Earle, and of those who did not hear the echoes—their ears must be bad — we will tackle our subject.

Edward Earle, in the first place, is not the Vitagraph actor. Let us make this plain at the outset for the benefit of the stray fans who may chance upon this copy of MOTION PICTURE NEWS in the months to come.

The Edward Earle of our sketch directs the destinies of the Nicholas Power Company.

The rest of you know this, of course, and as for the fans, why we like to boast here in the office that 'twere easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a fan to get on our subscription list.

To go on! Edward Earle is, to our knowledge, the first and only banker to be lured bodily into the motion picture business.

Some other bankers may hape seen their bankrolls lured into the business; a few may even have received in return the favor of meeting one of the stars whose salaries were biting chunks into the aforesaid bankroll.

But Edward Earle is not that kind of a banker. He chose an institution of the motion picture business as solid as any bank, and he went at it heart and soul—he's a real working executive.

To go on still further: Edward Earle is the first and only banker, again to our knowledge only, who meets you with an all-wool, true blue smile.

We may be prejudiced; perhaps that is our personal angle on bankers.

But at any rate, Edward Earle is human and likeable at the very first glance.

He meets you with a real smile and he greets you with a real handshake.

Then he talks to you like a regular fellow — with nary a touch of posing.

He gives you the feeling that the same qualities of solidity which made him a banker are being put into his present job of handling a projection machine company.

And the same qualities that make you like him and make us say these things about him must run deep, because we know of no executive whose associates are more loyal.

So, if you would know more in answer to the query, "What Kind of a Fellow is — Earle?" we can refer you to:

Will C. Smith.

S. Snowden Cassard.

G. Warren Landon.

Or, you might write to Panama and hear it in Spanish from—

A. J. Lang.

"A REAL CAMPAIGN BOOK"

Wm. E. Furber, Press Representative of the American Feature Film Company, Boston, thought so much of MOTION PICTURE NEWS Service Section on "To Hell with the Kaiser" that he wrote to Metro: "Couldn't we issue a quantity of these to the exchanges so that the individual exhibitors could be supplied with them when the picture is booked? If the NEWS still has this matter standing why not grab it and make up a real Campaign Book for the exhibitor.

"Here To-Day; Gone Tomorrow"

That's the Way It Works with Exchange Managers in Minneapolis —"Off Again; On Again Finnegan"

MINNEAPOLIS (Special).—Minneapolis has seen more exchange managers come and go thus far this year than it did during the previous eighteen months, according to records.

Recently Harry Graham, the only man to manage one exchange for over a year and a half, resigned as manager of the local Kleine Exchange to become district manager for the organization.

Later Jack Corbett, manager of the Triangle Exchange for about six months, was called into army service and a month after Corbett answered a governmental summons his successor, W. H. Seymour, did likewise. W. C. Lestico is now at the Triangle helm.

Charles Stombaugh, who opened the Standard Exchange here about seventeen months ago, recently left the city to become Pathe manager at Omaha. L. C. Larson left the General Exchange about four months ago to join the Universal road staff. He was succeeded by C. C. Knapp, who resigned a month later. Mr. Knapp was succeeded by R. K. Evans of St. Louis, and after three weeks Mr. Evans resigned to take charge of the Jewel Exchange, and Arthur Huesman, former booker, became General Manager.

Changes that have taken place during the past six weeks were as follows: H. J. Roberts resigned as Pathe manager and returned to Spokane; Louis H. Coen resigned as Metro manager to take charge of the Universal Exchange; E. R. Pearson resigned as Universal manager to devote his entire time to the First National Exchange; Myron T. Conhaim sold the Supreme Exchange to Frank Thayer; E. A. Westcott resigned as Fox manager.

Recently R. C. Fox resigned as manager of the Goldwyn Exchange and is said to be slated for a promotion to the New York Exchange.

Managers of the leading exchanges of the city at the present time are: Paramount-Artcraft, C. L. Peavey; First National Exhibitors' Circuit, E. R. Pearson; Metro, A. H. Fischer; Vitagraph, E. S. Willis Leaves Fox for Sporting Goods Business

Lloyd D. Willis, advertising manager for the Fox Film Corporation, has resigned to enter the sporting goods business. He has organized the firm of Lloyd Willis, Inc., and has taken over a store in the Strand Theatre Building, at 1579 Broadway, for the sale of sporting goods, cameras, both motion picture and still, camera supplies and high grade novelties.

Mr. Willis is president and controlling stockholder in the new firm, which is capitalized at $75,000. Henry Michaelson is vice-president and secretary and Captain John J. Pitzer, late of the New York Fire Department, is treasurer.

Mr. Willis has enjoyed a long association with the Fox company, joining the company in 1915 as assistant to the general manager. He visited all exchanges in the United States and Canada and was later appointed assistant general manager. During W. R. Sheehan's absence in England he managed the affairs of the corporation and on Sheehan's return he visited Australia, New Zealand, Honolulu and Samoa in the interests of the company. Together with his recent duties as advertising manager he also took charge of some of the administrative details of the company.

Feist at World Meeting

Felix F. Feist, sales manager for World Pictures, last week was in attendance at a conference of the company's Middle Western sales managers held at Chicago. At the conference plans for the late summer and fall were discussed and details developed.

You are not going to war. The men who are need all the comforts you can give them. Help them get cigarettes. That is your patriotic duty. If you aren't helping in the "smokes" campaign, get busy—now. Don't be a slacker!

In and Out of Town

Harold B. Franklin, manager Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, returned to Buffalo this week, after a week's stay in New York on business.

Harry Charnas, Standard Film Service, Cleveland, a prominent independent buyer in the Ohio and Kentucky territories, was back on the job Monday, after a business trip to New York, where he looked at the current offerings on the independent market.

Harry Grossman, associated with B. A. Rolfe in the producing field, stopped off in Cleveland last week for a chat with Leon D. Netter, Masterpiece Film Attractions, that city, relative to Mr. Netter taking over the distribution of the forthcoming Rolfe serial production, starring Houdini and the Florence Reed features. We have not learned the outcome of this little chat.

Frank L. Newman, manager Royal and Regent theatres, Kansas City, Mo., returned to Kansas City this week. He spent several days in New York on business.

Thomas D. Soriero, manager of the Park theatre, Boston, and the Strand, Lowell, Mass., was in New York last week.

Edward L. Hyman, former manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, and later engaged in managing Liberty theatres for the Commission on Training Camp Activities, is expected in New York this week to take his new post as booker of films for all the Liberty theatres.

Essanay Has Chaplin Comedy—Not Re-Issue

Essanay announces that it has a Charlie Chaplin comedy, "Triple Trouble," produced by Essanay in two parts, for early release and further announcement states that "the comedy is new throughout, not a foot of it having been shown on the screen before. It is not a re-issue," reads the announcement, "nor a re-hash, but a new film in its entirety." The comedy was produced at the Essanay studios on the Coast. It is being released through the George Kleine System. Prints have been shipped to all the branch offices, with a full line of advertising.

"Women for All Sales Vacancies"

Laemmle Announces That Policy for Universal in Filling Vacancies Caused by Men Entering Service—Operators and Deposit Abuses Discussed at Chicago

THAT women would be appointed to all sales vacancies occurring in the future in the Universal ranks occurring as the result of men leaving to enter the military service, was the announcement made by Carl Laemmle at the convention of executives and branch managers in Chicago just completed.

Injuries to films caused by the failure of exhibitors to quickly replace competent operators called into military service, and charges that many exhibitors were abusing the deposit system so as to hamper competition, were other topics discussed during the convention. The record of the three day sessions indicates an unusually interesting meeting.

Women Already Entering

Two women are already on the Universal sales staff. One of these is actually declared to be breaking all records in the Salt Lake territory, while the other is setting a good pace in the Oklahoma City office.

Indications that the coming year is going to see more and more exhibitors adopting a policy of booking "specials" were reported by the various exchange managers. Announcement was made that the Universal policy for the coming year would be modeled along these lines. The increased favor of unusual short subjects was also commented on in connection with the coming release by Jewel of the two-reelers, "The Geezer of Berlin" and "The Sinking of the Lusitania."

Carl Laemmle presided over the convention, assisted by Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer of the company, and by Harry Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions.

Plans for added advertising and publicity assistance to the exhibitor were carefully gone over and the experiences of the various managers in this direction were compared. In this connection Edward Armstrong, head of Universal's Denver exchange, made an interesting statement, which was supported by the majority of the managers present.

According to Mr. Armstrong, the exhibitor today doesn't so much buy a picture for its entertainment and quality values as for its advertising possibilities. In proof of his contention the Denver exchangeman told of the dozens of good films which are literally going begging throughout his territory. Although the exhibitor can get almost any of them for a song, he refuses to show them because they do not possess the angles he favors for exploitation.

One of the evils experienced by the exchanges which was given considerable attention was the claim that exhibitors in some territories are abusing the deposit system. It was declared that it is the practice of these men to obtain an option on all features which they want to keep out of the hands of their opposition by payment of a comparatively small deposit. This done, they do not show the pictures thus secured, but continue to postpone the playing dates until long after the initial advertising value of the feature has disappeared.

Then they notify the exchanges that they are willing to forfeit their deposit. Plans to meet this abuse were adopted.

Another type of exhibitors who came in for discussion are the men who use deceitful or fraudulent advertising. These are the men who label junk pictures, picked up for a song, with a title closely resembling "The Kaiser," or any production nationally advertised. In this connection Mr. Brandt told of the vigorous measures both Universal and Jewel were taking to prosecute exhibitors guilty of thus deceiving the public.

Of timely interest, in view of the rising costs of everything connected with the motion picture industry, is the fact that a recent census made by Universal of all the picture theatres in the country was Mr. Brandt's announcement to the managers present that but two per cent of the exhibitors in the country continue to charge a five-cent admission. Even these theatres, however, demand ten cents for Saturday and Sunday.

Brandt Tells of Danger

That an increasing number of incompetent operators were not only causing a heavy loss to exhibitors and exchanges, but were also endangering the lives of photoplay patrons, was the startling announcement made by Mr. Brandt in an address to the exhibitors.

The Universal official declared that as the result of the draft good operators had become scarce. Instead of preparing against the loss of these men by breaking in others, the exhibitors apparently postpone action until the very last minute, when they either attempt to run the projection machines themselves or else send their sons into the booths. The inevitable results are irreparably damaged films or fires.

Emphasis was given to Mr. Brandt's utterance when wires from both the Denver and Cleveland offices were received telling of the dectruction by fire of two prints of "The Kaiser."

Taking advantage of this incident, Universal's assistant treasurer pointed out that in both cases the exhibitors would be compelled to pay $600 for each of the destroyed prints. The contract now in use by every film organization holds the exhibitor responsible for loss of films by fire, if it should be proved that this loss is the exhibitor's fault.

Among officials who attended the Chicago meeting were Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Brandt, and Mr. Berman, of the home office; Messrs. I. Lesserman, Morris Hellman, S. J. Goldman, Julius Bernheim, I. Gettleson and Irving Mack, of Chicago; C. C. Smith and Joseph Roderick, Milwaukee; Joe Schnitzer, R. W. Abbott and D. Adams, Indianapolis; Sam Sax, Cincinnati; E. J. Smith, Cleveland; W. D. Ward, Detroit; R. K. Evans and L. H. Coen, Minneapolis; Edward Armstrong, Denver; John McAleer, Pittsburgh; Barney Rosenthal, St. Louis; Sam Benjamin, Oklahoma City; M. J. Frisch, Des Moines; Milton Feld, Kansas City; J. H. Calvert, Omaha, and G. A. Metzger, Portland.

Kleine Suffering Through Draft Inroads

The draft is making such inroads on the young and capable men of the film business, according to a statement from the George Kleine Chicago office, that that film pioneer is thinking of putting women in charge of his branch offices. Mr. Kleine has used women before in the selling end and as managers of "shows" and found them entirely suited to the work.

Griffith Film Plays Return Date in Los Angeles

Two more weeks have been added to the Los Angeles run of the Clune production "Eyes of the World," this film having just closed an engagement at Clune's Auditorium where it played to fairly good business. This makes a total of ten weeks this picture has played at this house.

Griffith's "Hearts of the World," which recently set a new record for continuous run of ten weeks at Clune's Auditorium after an absence of six weeks, has been bought back for an indefinite engagement. During the ten weeks' engagement recently "Hearts of the World" gross receipts were $97,000. The engagement was ended because of other bookings for this house, and with the reopening of "Hearts of the World" there was every indication that the business would hold up to the average of the first ten weeks for several weeks to come.

Another film enjoying a return engagement is Rex Beach's "Heart of the Sunset" which is on at the Palace. This film originally ran three weeks at Quinn's Rialto, and is brought back at the original prices.

Rochester Settles Down

Expected Shake-Up in Theatres Only a Moderate One and Situation Is Now Cleared — Vaudeville Takes the Gordon

ROCHESTER (Special).—Plans that originally called for a substantial shakeup in the motion picture situation in Rochester, N. Y., have been modified somewhat, so that now only the Gordon theatre will be affected instead of three other theatres. A. A. Fenyvessy, prime mover in the contemplated change, is to take over the Gordon theatre and use it as a low-priced vaudeville house, while the Family theatre, which heretofore he has been operating under that policy, is to become the home of a low priced musical stock company. Work of enlarging the stage of the Gordon theatre for vaudeville purposes is now under way.

The Gordon was the first of the large new motion picture houses in Rochester. In the heart of the best business section, it did a thriving business with first run pictures until the fall of 1916, when the opening of the quarter million dollar Piccadilly theatre, a stone's throw away, struck the theatre a severe blow. Then for a time the handsome Regent theatre got the cream of the first run patrons, but recently the Piccadilly began to pick up, while the Gordon continued to go into a decline. A few months ago the Gordon was put on a part time policy, open only Saturdays and Sundays and showing a cheaper grade of pictures, but that policy failed to better conditions.

Mr. Fenyvessy has faith that vaudeville will put the house in the running again, inclined to that opinion by the success of the Family theatre. He is a manager of original methods and shrewd business instincts, and every venture that he has touched so far in Rochester has proven profitable. In addition to the Family, he controls the Rialto and the Strand, picture theatres, and has an interest in the Rogerson Corporation, which controls the Piccadilly, Regent and Gordon.

Rumor had it early in the season that the Corinthian theatre, a burlesque house, was to be transferred to the Family theatre, which in turn would go up to the Strand theatre, the management remodeling it for vaudeville purposes. That deal apparently fell through, and no change will be made in either the Corinthian or the Strand theatres.

Another change has recently involved the Grand theatre, in early years one of the most prosperous houses in the city. T. G. Thompson, who, with George L. Tyler helped to promote the erection of the theater seven or eight years ago, has again undertaken the management and will show popular priced first run pictures.

This theatre was built by the Duffy interests, powerful financial interests of Rochester, and was leased jointly to Mr. Thompson and Mr. Tyler. The active management was given to Mr. Tyler, who conducted it successfully until about a year ago, when he sold out his interests at a figure reported to be in the neighborhood of $70,000. William H. Ten Broek, a Medina showman, bought a majority of the stock and managed the theatre through last summer and winter. Patronage declined, notwithstanding that the theatre showed a high quality of pictures at 5 and 10 cents, and Mr. Ten Broek was obliged to surrender his interests. The original lease of the theatre held Mr. Thompson as one partner, and with the abdication of Mr. Ten Broek the theatre came back onto the hands of Mr. Thompson. He is now applying himself to the task of bringing the theatre back to its former prosperity, with Joseph Stoffel, a successful showman in Rochester and nearby places, as right hand man.

San Diego Sailors Wire Thanks to Fox

Three thousand sailors at the United States naval base at San Pedro, California, have telegraphed a vote of thanks to William Fox for his help in staging a mammoth vaudeville entertainment recently given for the jackies under the auspices of the Stage Women's War Relief.

Mr. Fox, as soon as he was informed that Frank Lloyd, director of William Farnum, was to be stage manager of the entertainment, wired Sol Wurtzel, manager of the William Fox Coast studios, to do everything possible to make the vaudeville a success. The result was that a small army of Fox carpenters and electricians were soon on the spot, erecting stage and scenery for the production.

Those from the William Fox studios at Hollywood who were on the program were William Farnum, Gladys Brockwell, William Burress, Herbert Heyes, A. W. Fremont, Tom Mix, the William Fox String Quartet and a number of others. William Farnum, with the assistance of little Nancy Caswell, who appears in the Farnum picture, "Riders of the Purple Sage," presented an act from "The Littlest Rebel," in which Mr. Farnum scored a tremendous stage success a few years ago.

It is the intention of Frank Lloyd to give the same performance before the soldiers at Camp Kearny and probably at other big army camps on the Pacific Coast.

John Adolfi Not with Steger

It was reported in last week's issue of Motion Picture News that John Adolfi, one of the well-known directors of the business, was acting in the capacity of assistant director to Julius Steger on the forthcoming production starring Marion Davies. This is incorrect, as Mr. Adolfi is not connected with the production of the picture, either as assistant director or in any other capacity.

Blackton Forces Move

J. Stuart Blackton and the Blackton Productions, Inc., are now located in permanent executive offices at 25 West Forty-fifth street.

Guy Empey, "Over the Top" to a Captaincy

Arthur Guy Empey, author of "Over the Top" and star in Vitagraph's film production of that story, has been appointed a captain in the National Army and detailed to the Adjutant General's Department.

The securing of the commission makes good Empey's announcement just after completing the picture and also carries out real events just as they happen in the screen production.

Captain Empey is one of the most picturesque figures developed by the war. Prior to the sinking of the Lusitania he had retired from the U. S. regular cavalry with the rank of Sergeant Major, after serving six years. Long before that he had served several years in the Forty-seventh regiment, Brooklyn National Guard. So that the military spirit was strong in him when, indignant at the murder of women and children by the Germans, he rushed to England and volunteered in the First Royal Fusiliers of London. He saw eighteen months' service in France, was wounded seven times and invalided home, and immediately began a vigorous appeal to Americans to take their part in the war, to buy Liberty Bonds, to help the Red Cross and to do everything that they could to help the men over there.

Then he was prevailed upon by Albert E. Smith to appear in a motion picture version of his famous book "Over the Top," the picture being produced under the personal supervision of the Vitagraph president and directed by Wilfred North.

Keeney Claims Jewel Carmen

A statement issued from the offices of the Frank A. Keeney Company this week declared that the independent producer had signed a contract with Jewel Carmen.

The statement admits that the star is under contract with William Fox, in whose productions she has been seen recently, but declares that Miss Carmen only reached the age of twenty-one last week and that the new contract with Keeney is thus the only valid one.

Next Petrova Picture Is from Atherton Novel

"The Tiger Woman," fifth of the special Mme. Petrova productions, will shortly be ready for the initial showing. It is a film version of the Gertrude Atherton novel, "Patience Sparhawk," the popularity of which gained it close to ten editions in this country alone.

The production marks Ralph Ince's second effort as director for Mme. Petrova

Among the well-known players who will be seen in support of the Polish star are Vernon Steel in the role of Beverly Peale, Rockcliffe Fellowes as Garon Bourke, Norma Seifert as the drunken stepmother, Madge Sparhawk, Mathilda Baring as Mrs. Peale, Gene Burnelle as the daughter, Frederick Truesdell as the father, and Tefft Johnson, who interprets the character of Governor of New York.

The "Why" of Salesmen : : By W. E. Matthews

(The following letter from Mr. Matthews, who is a salesman for Hodkinson-General at Portland, is in reply to a recent article by Guy C. Leavitt, of Omaha. It attempts to shoot Mr. Leavitt's description of salesmen "full of holes.")

DEAR GUY:

In a certain issue of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS—time forgotten, but let us say four months ago—there appeared an article entitled "Why the Salesman?" Several film companies were gracious enough to lend themselves as a party to this article by furnishing photographs from a few current releases to accompany and illustrate. These photos, by the way, depicted a certain species of the Homo, supposedly a film salesman in the act of undergoing the tortures of the damned as the result of a "whispering chorus," the latter meant to represent an accusing body of exhibitors gathered about the poor salesman, seemingly there in shadowy form, to avenge themselves for past wrongs. The salesman was certainly victim to a bad case of nerves.

Now then, Guy, the writer being a film salesman, has waited patiently for the appearance of a defensive murmur from some brother salesman, since the time your article went to press. This having failed to materialize is pretty good proof that the contents of the article were not taken seriously by film salesmen as a class, but it is high time that somebody put you on the right track, for as a certainty that article was largely made up of material that merely expressed an opinion. Furthermore it lacked consistency, and here is the proof of my statement: Primarily you painted in the first act a scene depicting a piratical gathering that would have been interesting to our old friend Kidd, and it is safe to say he would have been there had he known it was going to be pulled. I speak of your mentioning twelve film salesmen gathered about the same stove in crooked attitudes befitting such a gathering, awaiting the first streaks of morning light, at which time they were planning to swoop down on a couple of unsuspecting exhibitors. Admitting you were right, Guy, and eliminating the crooked intentions for the coming fray—for I doubt the truth of that statement—but admitting their numbers, doesn't it look pretty much as though you had answered your own question of "Why the Salesman?" in that very paragraph? For yet have I to see the time, yet to receive the surprise, of walking into a hotel lobby any place, any time, there to behold twelve exhibitors waiting for the light of day to assist them in swooping down on an unsuspecting branch manager with the idea of booking his particular line of releases. No doubt there are branch managers whose night's rest has been disturbed by such dreams, but as an existing reality—never. And so what is more natural than to reach out after that which will not come to you voluntarily? I recall that this was fathomed by a reference to some modern Daniel Webster in the form of branch manager of note who sat at his desk and fairly mopped up via the three-cent-stamp route. This gentleman was sure some little genius, but these days most of the successful branch managers are 75 per cent. salesman and 25 per cent. executive, and woe unto the party who gains his office with the percentage running the other way.

As for the crooked practices of the salesman and his methods of misrepresentation, such a statement is impractical and a certain amount of reflection on existing conditions should prove it as such. Why?—well, the success of Mr. Salesman no longer depends on his sales argument, descriptive of something he can not deliver, but instead depends on his ability to tell the story of his picture just as the author has written it and as the director has carried it out, for it is hardly likely that a salesman's fancy will be greater or more attractive than theirs.

Also the salesman must know his company's policy as this is becoming a very important factor with the exhibitor, who is every day realizing more vividly the necessity of booking not alone good pictures, but the quality of the distribution and where the men behind that policy are known, no salesman on earth can misrepresent his line, and if he is trying to sell something that is not properly backed it is high time he either came over on the right side of the fence or quit the game entirely for the benefit of others in it, for success can never come to him anyway.

Believe me Guy, I am selling film every day and know whereof I speak. When you make a statement to the effect that the Exhibitors as a class can be swindled and buncoed, or that any salesman with the average amount of common sense will even attempt such a practice you insult the exhibitor far more than the salesman, for thanks to the efforts of a certain individual, the trade journals and the fact that the motion picture industry is one of the biggest and cleanest games in the world, the exhibitor as a class, or individually, has long since come to be a business man of equal importance and proportions with any other merchant in his town and he buys his pictures with the same shrewdness that the shoe merchant buys his shoes. Assuming we are all in this old world with the one thought in mind—ultimate success—I trust film salesmen will be given credit for being just as ambitious as any other class of men that exist and the true film salesman knows that his success depends absolutely on exhibitor co-operation. If he has no co-operation to offer, then by the same token he has nothing to sell and consequently nothing to represent. On the other hand if his company's policies are known (and here again I will mention the trade journals), he could not misrepresent himself if he tried.

If the policies and the quality of the pictures being distributed under those policies are not known in the town which is listed for a call by the salesman, it is up to him to represent them to that particular exhibitor just as they are, and by so doing he will have a far better chance of securing the desired booking, and the salesman knows this and works accordingly, for it is impossible for the average film salesman to realize the magnitude of the article he is selling, or the brains and money that are behind his organization not to mention the fact that this same organization is constantly seeking out the services of talented and high-salaried actors, authors and directors to produce pictures night and day that he may ultimately meet the exhibitor and honestly say, "These productions are among the best." Therefore it would be absurd to attempt exaggeration of such a condition and I know as a positive fact that film salesmen as a rule do not follow such tactics. In fact Guy, I am afraid you are classing the boys under a very unworthy heading as a result of information gleaned in cases that were exceptions, as the film salesman to-day is of almost equal value and importance to the express companies carrying film shipments, and of a very recent date I have personally come in contact with several cases where the salesman has gone to considerable trouble to assist in putting pictures over with a bang after he has sold them, and if this condition does not exist in the East I will mention that the West is a huge expanse of territory that holds forth no barriers other than the Rocky Mountains, over which trains are passing daily.

Wanted—Real Pictures : : : By A. L. Kahn

This little article could be published under various titles, each as meaningful as the one used, but Mr. Kahn emphasizes most of all his contention that salesmen do not bring "real" pictures into his territory. Incidentally he declares the State rights market is not in good shape, and gives the reason for his belief.

I READ an article in your June 15 issue, in which Mr. J. Steiner took a slam at the Independent Exchanges of the Western States, and it is no more than fair that we should get a chance to defend ourselves.

I wish to say that if the salesmen who leave New York would being along some real pictures, it would not be necessary for the independent exchanges to hand the exhibitors a bunch of junk, or try to sell pictures that are five or ten years old.

The independent market today is not in top-notch shape, simply because the independent exchange cannot procure the right kind of pictures at the right price. Consequently, what is the result? We are compelled to go over our old stock, and dig up some real pictures, which they are, in comparison with some of the new releases.

We agree with Mr. Steiner that the exhibitor is willing to pay a good price for good independent pictures. But where are we going to get them? When an independent manufacturer produces a good state right picture, he immediately calls in large program distributors, and tries to sell them the United States rights. If they refuse it, then it is thrown on the independent market. Now if it isn't good enough for them, who have other good pictures to help it along, it surely isn't good enough for the little man.

When an independently produced picture is offered to independent distributors first, the price is so high, it would ruin them to buy it. If they would only expect a legitimate profit instead of figuring that a certain production should bring $100,000 for the United States when it only costs $20,000 to produce, we would buy more pictures during the year than we are now buying, and make a little money.

On a recent visit to New York several brokers had a compilation of figures showing what each town in my states would pay for a state right picture. How in the world can any one in New York, who has never been in this section, figure what each town should bring? If they can, there must be some wonderful mathematicians in this country.

Independent producers: for your benefit, I want to say that we are not a bunch of rubes out here, and that we know a good picture when we see it.

Produce pictures that are in demand, and sell them to us on a let-live price, so we can make some money, and you will never go wanting for independent buyeres.

Penal Code Censorship—Only : By Paul Smith

CENSORSHIP presents a difficulty, increasingly dangerous, whose development threatens the best interests alike of the patron, the producer and the exhibitor of motion pictures.

The present tendency in states and cities is to place arbitrary discretionary power in the hands of some person or board, often not even subject to court review.

Against this tendency all parties at interest, including the general public, should unite in a campaign under the slogan "No censorship except under the Penal Code."

In legal theory this, of course, is the only valid basis of censorship. On constitutional grounds no control of motion pictures is possible except as an extension of the police power of the state.

Discretionary censorship in any field of activity is un-American and dangerous.

Apply it for a moment to magazines. There has grown up a very dubious literature which forms a stock in trade of most of the newsstands. It would be highly unfortunate, however, to give discretionary power over magazine publication in the hands of a politically appointed board. We should quickly find corrupt efforts to hamper any expression of opinion in the legitimate magazines against the powers that be.

Exactly the same inherent principles apply to the freedom of the screen as apply to the freedom of the public press or platform.

I am well aware of the answer which is frequently made, that the children stray into motion picture theatres "in quest of innocent amusement," and that, therefore, nothing must be put in the motion picture theatre beyond the reach of the child's mind and no moral problems must be discussed on the screen which are beyond his ken. It would be just as intelligent to say that all language should be reduced to words of one syllable, that we should talk baby talk in order that our little ones may understand us. A simple solution of this problem is to have every production so advertised outside that the public will know exactly what is inside.

There are four great objections specifically to discretionary and autocratic power of the censorship of the screen, each of which I may illustrate with the much discussed, much misunderstood picture, "The Finger of Justice."

This picture was produced in the midst of a tremendous campaign whose purpose was to break up the political protection of commercialized vice, gambling and crime in Northern California. I had made scores of speeches throughout the state. Finally it occurred to me that if I should dramatize these speeches—put their essence into a highly entertaining melodrama—I might legitimately influence thousands of people in California otherwise beyond the reach of voice or pen, and the story might be carried to the ends of the earth.

A few of my friends provided the money, and we produced this feature.

My first objection to discretionary censorship lies in the fact that it strangles the freedom of the art of the screen.

For instance, we found in Pennsylvania that our picture clashed with a set of so-called "standards."

The standards of the Pennsylvania Board, if rigorously applied, would eliminate the Bible, Shakespeare and most great paintings, operas and dramas.

Likewise we found that the Commissioner of Licenses in New York stated that if any picture were permissable dealing with commercialized evil he would pass our picture, but that this subject could not be discussed either on the screen or on the stage. He refused to commit himself as to whether it could be discussed in the pulpit.

It is an absurd and indefensible position that any subject may not be discussed if the discussion itself is a proper one. Thus to limit the art of the screen by placing arbitrary power in the hands of politically appointed, wooden-headed, mechanical-minded censors is fatal to the free development of the genius of the American people in motion picture art.

The National Board of Review, with its bulletin against the so-called white slave picture, recognizes that every production must be considered on its individual merit, and with great heartiness passed this picture on account of its social propaganda value.

If there is to be anything like the development of initiative with the incoming of new and constructive ideas, the expression of great new dramatic impulses such as Ibsen gave to the stage, the strangling hand of the mechanical censor has got to be removed.

In the second place, this discretionary power of censorship is so disturbing to the producer as to imperil the interests of the business, which in turn, of course, means a lower grade of picture for the patron. There must be a certain amount of uniformity in censorship if the motion picture business is to be maintained.

So long as we are subject to the whims of political and religious prejudices, to sectional provincialisms of arbitrary censors, we are going to be afraid to venture to say anything but the ordinary on the screen.

The third objection to this present autocratic system is that it places too much in one man's hands, creating opportunity for graft and oppression.

In New York the theatre managers are so pitifully in the power of the License Commissioner that in at least one instance a prominent manager feared to stand on his legal rights, and the mere hint of displeasure from the commissioner was sufficient to crowd him into yellow submission.

Finally, I oppose arbitrary censorship because it is essentially un-American. We have protected ourselves in this country by penal

Constructive Co-operative Booking By Frank Rembusch

THERE is always a fundamental keynote to everything. The gospel and fundamentals of pictures are GOOD PICTURES. With good pictures ever the first thought we may consider the natural desire of every exhibitor "GOOD PICTURES AT REASONABLE PRICES." This is made possible by good pictures produced and distributed economically. But always, first and forever, good pictures.

At a certain period, some years ago, one man had practically the whole picture market in the palm of his hand. He gave this simple correct formula for marketing pictures in about these words: "Produce good pictures and play them as many days as possible." In this way the producer receives a just reward for his picture and the exhibitor is able to rent the picture at a price where there will be some reward remain after presentation. This principle will always be true, even though not always carried into practice.

Every year we have noticed a gradual increasing power of the exhibitor in the film market. This power is very evident in co-operative booking plans. Exhibitors shall see that this power is properly used. Co-operative booking has been advocated for many years and can either be a great benefit, work much good to both producer and exhibitor, or, if formed along wrong principles, work harm to the industry.

At the meeting held in April at the Hotel Astor to consider all co-operative booking plans we read extracts from an address that Mr. Seivers gave three years ago at Chicago at a similar gathering. Most of the principles in Mr. Seivers address will fit today into the three national booking plans that are being offered to exhibitors. But there is a peculiar feature about co-operative booking, i. e., "all of the principles of full co-operation must be present and active in a plan or the whole idea is a failure, even though the general principles are correct."

It is a good saying that "what is wrong in principle will be wrong in practice." The plan proposed three years ago is wrong because it advocated that exhibitors should produce pictures. It seems self-evident that if exhibitors produce pictures or producers exhibit their product we may expect poor quality of pictures and reckon with the box office receipts.

The motion picture can only be as great as those forces which control its destinies. We firmly believe that the pictures should be free from censorship and all evils from without the industry. Therefore, to encourage the best pictures, we must have a free market and development within the industry. The best thought, the newest idea, must be at all times welcome, free and open, to the screen.

Exhibitors must be free to select the best pictures on merit alone and receive the good pictures of any producer without arbitrary restrictions, such as star contracts, etc., where quality is doubtful.

When exhibitors select good pictures and play them as many days through the force of co-operation, then co-operative booking will work good rewards for both exhibitor and producer.

WHEN CO-OPERATION FAILS

If a few exhibitors go into the market and pay a great star double the salary over what an old line producer has been paying and increase the film rentals of all other exhibitors an equal per cent, then exhibitors are not co-operating, but going from bad to worse. Exhibitor's dominance is desirable, but only when this entire branch of the industry exercises a dominating force towards the highest possible development of the business.

The everlasting struggle in the film market is "who shall dominate?" This power seems to go round in cycles and always follows the path traveled by the exhibitor which the exhibitor believes will lead to good pictures. Some years ago the market was dominated by three groups of producers who distributed in three large distributing companies. Exhibitors and producers made good profits. Production was kept down to about 100 reels a week, against about 300 today, and prices were very reasonable because these 100 reels played everywhere. There were a large number of smaller theatres, which, however, is equalized by large theatres today running more reels. We had ideal conditions. Why did they change? It is easy to remember that pictures were every day about the same—one, two and three-reelers. There were producers who saw greater things in pictures, produced them and consequently the market passed to other hands because of the better pictures.

Exhibitors will always pay a good price for good pictures. Too often exhibitors are over-sold, because they appreciate more than any one that the life of their business is good pictures.

ADVANCE DEPOSITS

Film service should be paid for on the day or a few days before used. The objection to the advance deposit is not the cash payment in advance of showing. The evil of this system is in allowing producers to borrow from the box office of the exhibitor to finance the making of pictures before we know what the picture is going to be. Producers who expect exhibitors to buy pictures of unknown quality should not be encouraged. The exhibitor puts up his theatre and adds the last finishing touch before he asks the public for a dime. The exhibitor needs the production to good pictures to secure his investment, and he cannot know what pictures are going to be unless he has had some voice in the story, scenario and star. The best plan is for the exhibitor to buy in the open market, and co-operative booking will enable him to buy properly. Through the advance deposit system we have been sending our money to New York, where a few could use that money to over-bid other producers; as a consequence salaries of stars have advanced and the cost of film service is 300 to 500 per cent more than it was before this system came in vogue. Any co-operative booking scheme that proposes to exhibitors to send their money to New York, or any other place, where a few can play with it, are encouraging the advance deposit system over again, and that plan should be condemned. Co-operation means that all of the units booking together combine their buying power and playing days, but each unit must hold its power to that extent that fair play will result. A large number of playing days can buy a picture at a price to each exhibitor much less than individual purchase, but no co-operative booking plan can be any stronger than its individual units.

DISTRIBUTION

Co-operative booking suggests exhibitor distribution. It matters little who distributes so long as same is done efficiently and economically. Distribution should really be a business of itself, and some day will be. The numerous exchanges today are a waste of time, an inconvenience and loss. One large distributing base in each large centre could handle all film. Co-operative booking seems a natural way of bringing this about.

Any one who has studied the gradual development of the film industry will agree that co-operative booking is here on trial and to stay. This business goes around in cycles. We are now entering the cycle, "Good pictures at reasonable prices; produced economically and distributed efficiently, encouraged by co-operative booking."

Co-operative booking will remedy many evils if promoted along right lines. If dominated by the wrong few and the same mistakes are made in judging correct values, it may be destructive instead of constructive.

The World Market

Spain Short of New Subjects

Reports from Spain declare that many of the renters have been forced to suspend their usual weekly showings to theatre owners owing to a serious shortage in the number of new pictures available.

The principal reason advanced for the scarcity of new subjects is delay in receiving films ordered from England, France and Italy. Custom authorities are holding up shipments from all these countries for rigid inspection and in addition demand exacting guarantees and pledges from the Spanish agents that nothing connected with the film is of German origin.

A recent statement in The Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly (London) declared that it took film shipments on an average of two months to go from London and Turin to Barcelona and more than a month from Paris.

Elphinstone Circuit Handling Impressive List

J. F. Madan's Elphinstone Cinema Circuit, India, in an announcement recently received, shows an impressive list of feature productions being booked in that chain just now.

The list includes, "Masks and Faces," "The Girl Philippa," "Womanhood," "The Witching Hour," "The Common Law," "The Barrier," "The Lone Wolf," "Frou-Frou," "Chase Me, Charlie," "The Argyle Case," "The Gay Lord Quex," and the serial "The Great Secret."

The Elphinstone Circuit, with head offices at 5, Dharantola, Calcutta, now includes the following houses: Elphinstone Palace, Cornwallis, Albion, Rizon, and Corinthian theatres in Calcutta; Elphinstone Picture Palace in Madras, Rangoon, Delhi, Darjelling, Mussoorie; the Elphinstone Bioscope in Bankipore, and the Alfred theatre, Calcutta. These are operated in association with the Excelsior theatre, Bombay; Empire Cinema, Bombay; Electric Picturedome, Allahabad; Kohinoor Cinema, Benares; Crystal Bioscope, Bangalore; and the Rink theatre, Lucknow.

Garrett Not Associated with K. W. S.

Edwin E. Wolf, film broker, announces the following correction to an announcement published recently in the trade papers:

"Through an error in publishing the incorporation of the K. W. S. Distributing Co., Inc., the name of Sidney Garrett was mentioned as one of the incorporators. As much as we would like Mr. Garrett in this company, he was not one of the incorporators nor is he in any way associated with the K. W. S. Co.

A WORD OR TWO IN PASSING

THE Pilgrim's Progress of the film exporter in America has surely been a course not without a humorous aspect.

Not more than four years ago the average American manufacturer's knowledge of the export possibilities of his product began and ended with the word London. If he established a London agency, or made a contract with a man with a London letterhead, he washed his hands of his export problems.

A few knew that the house of Glucksman was a good customer for South America; a smaller few had been SOUGHT OUT by Japanese exporters handling everything from tractors to tracts and desirous of packing a few reels of film as ballast.

There it ended.

Selig had Montague; Lubin had Brockliss; Kalem had Nicholls; Mutual had Roy Aitken; Universal had Tupper; and so it went.

And Broadway—had you asked "Where can I find an exporter?"—could have given but one name, Millard Johnson of Australia.

But the war settled down into its semblance of eternity and—"how swiftly tempus does fugit."

The manufacturer met the taciturn Reginald Warde; from David Howells he learned that there was a place called India; the Paul Cromelin he had grown to like as the handler of Cosmofotofilm's imports came to his aid with "words to the wise" on exporting; Sydney Garrett arrived to announce a vastly expanded J. Frank Brockliss; John Olson's name was found on a Times Square door; the house of Glucksman became known to more than the wise ones; Hiller and Wilk expanded.

Winfield Sheehan went exploring for Fox; Harold Bolster for Goldwyn; J. C. Graham for Famous-Lasky.

Until now—

There are more exporters of one kind and another—

Than there are ships to carry their exports.

Italian Company Has Negatives for Sale

Motion Picture News is in receipt of an announcement from Augusta Films, of Rome, Italy, that the negatives and North and South American rights are for sale on the following subjects: "The Martyrs of Belfior," "The Death of Miss Cavell" and "The Heroes of Serbia."

The first named subject, running fourteen hundred metres, tells of the oppressions of the Austrians on the Italians in the territory wrested in past wars; the second, of 850 metres, is a picturization of the life and death of the martyr nurse, Edith Cavell; the last mentioned, as indicated by the title, covers the invasion of Serbia by Austria.

The subjects have met with success in Italy and because of the war interest it is thought would find favor in this country.

Augusta Film, of which Cesare Santaro is proprietor, would also like information in full regarding any available American subjects of a nature similar to those mentioned above.

Mercanton Arrives with French Films

Louis Mercanton, the producer of "Mothers of France," featuring Sarah Bernhardt, has just arrived from France with the negatives of a number of recent productions. Mr. Mercanton will make his headquarters at the French Pictorial Service, of which Edmund Ratisbonne is the director, at 220 West 42d street.

Shipments to Russia by Sea

Reports from abroad indicate that increased facilities for shipping of films to Russia are expected with the completion of the organization of a new shipping line to acquire ships now in Sweden's home harbors and build new motor ships. The "Svensk-Russian Shipping Co." has been organized in Stockholm with a capital of $800,000.

Piedmont Reports Large Foreign Sales

Exporters Must Give Guarantees

Film Must Be Shipped to Trade Board Representative and Is Not Released Till Buyer Has Signed Strict Pact— Hold Exporters Responsible

NOTICES received by film exporters in New York City during the past week indicate that the War Trade Board has settled on a definite policy in regard to picture shipments. The rulings indicate a policy similar in many respects to that enforced on exporters of film from Great Britain, France and Italy to neutral countries.

The most important feature of the new regulations is an exhaustive guarantee which the foreign recipient of the film must sign before receiving his shipment, and a phrase in the license application signed by the exporter declaring that "the undersigned represents and declares that the named recipient is responsible and guarantees that such named recipient will comply with all of the terms and conditions."

Other Matters Settled

Though no official notice has been received by most exporters, statements from the National Association during the week also declared that an agreement had been reached with the Committee on Public Information by which the matter of including educational film with all shipments will be left largely to the volunteer co-operation of the exporters. In addition, it is understood that voluntary methods will be used to prevent the making of films likely to misrepresent America in neutral countries.

The regulations received during the past week first cover in brief the points previously understood regarding exports, i. e., first, that exposed but undeveloped film may not be exported under any conditions; second, that unexposed film may be exported only in quantities sufficient for foreign language titles, except under special license to Canada and Newfoundland; third, that positives may be exported only after approval by the Committee on Public Information and censoring by Customs officials, and, finally, the securing of a license from the War Trade Board complying with all regulations.

The new regulations require that the film shipments must be consigned to the representative of the War Trade Board, and by him delivered to the foreign buyer. Names of the representatives are given for the following countries: United Kingdom, L. P. Sheldon, American Embassy, London; France, George McFadden, American Embassy, Paris; Switzerland, Ellis Loring Dresel, American Legation, Berne; Cuba, Henry H. Morgan, Havana; Spain, W. A. Chadbourne, American Embassy, Madrid; Argentine, S. S. Burnet, American Legation, Buenos Ayres; Brazil, Henry R. Amory, American Embassy, Rio de Janeiro.

The Recipient's Strict Guarantee

In consideration of the release of the film to the foreign buyer by the Trade Board representative, he must sign a guarantee embodying the following points:

First, that the film or copies of it will not reach any enemy of the United States or its allies.

Second, that the film will not be re-exported from the particular country without the written or cabled approval of the War Trade Board.

Third, that none of the film or copies of it will be exhibited at any place where films made by enemies of the United States are shown, or where film detrimental to the interests of the United States or its allies is shown.

Fourth, that the recipient of the film will not himself exhibit at any time any film manufactured in the country of any enemy of the United States or its allies, or any film directly or indirectly of advantage to enemies or detrimental to the United States or its allies.

Fifth, that after completion of the life of the films they will either be destroyed under the supervision of the War Trade Board's representative or returned to the United States.

Sixth, that the film or any part of it may not be sold, rented, loaned, assigned, transferred or delivered to any person not complying with all the clauses of this agreement.

Seventh, that the film will at all times be exhibited in the same shape it has been approved by the United States authorities.

Eighth, that the film will be surrendered on demand to the War Trade Board at any time any duly authorized representative of that Board finds there has been a violation of the agreement.

Ninth, that the unexposed film covered by the license application will be used solely for titles and will be shown for approval to the War Trade Board's representative.

Printed information on the back of the official form of this agreement contains the following: "Applicants for licenses to export moving picture films are warned that they will be held responsible for the actions of the recipient. Applicants should not execute Form x-20 unless they are prepared to accept such responsibility. It is suggested that applicants safeguard their interests by securing adequate agreements of indemnity from such recipients."

NOTHING TO IT!

A NEW YORK daily during the week published a story to the effect that an embargo might be placed on the export of motion picture film by England.

The rumor caused a bit of excitement until investigation showed that its source lay in the fact that motion picture film is now on the "conservation list," as among articles for which strict regulations have been laid down by the war trade Board.

But aside from these rules, already known to all exporters, there is no prospect of an embargo. The story was of importance because of the inclination of American officials to follow foreign precedents.

Regarding the Film Tax on Export Shipments

From David Howells, president of the Exporters' Association, MOTION PICTURE NEWS has received a copy of the following ruling from the Treasury Department regarding the application of the film tax to exports. In transmitting the letter Mr. Howells makes this comment: "A circumstance of importance not covered in this ruling is where the manufacturer delivers a print to an exporter, who in turn ships it to foreign territory. Under this circumstance it appears that a 12-cent-a-foot tax must be paid. This seems entirely unfair and discriminatory in favor of the manufacturer."

The ruling follows:

TO COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE AND OTHERS CONCERNED:

Section 600 of the Act of October 3, 1917, imposes a tax upon automobiles and other enumerated articles, and Sections 313 and 315 upon non-alcoholic beverages and other enumerated articles, sold by the manufacturer, producer or importer. Section 9 of Article 1 of the Constitution of the United States provides that "No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State."

Articles may normally be exported in several ways: (1) They may be shipped by the manufacturer to an agent in a foreign country and after reaching there may be sold by the agent. (2) They may be shipped by the manufacturer to a foreign purchaser to fill orders received by an agent in a foreign country. (3) They may be shipped by the manufacturer to a foreign purchaser to fill orders received by the manufacturer in the United States. (4) They may be shipped by the manufacturer to a foreign purchaser to fill orders solicited by mail and received by mail from the foreign purchaser.

In accordance with an opinion of the Attorney-General, dated June 5, 1918, it is held that the specified taxes do not apply to articles sold in foreign commerce by any of the methods outlined by a manufacturer, producer, or importer located in one of the several States of the United States. The taxes apply, however, to articles sold in foreign commerce by a manufacturer located in a Territory or elsewhere in the United States than in a State, and to articles sold in commerce between the United States and any of its island or other possessions except the West Indian Island acquired from Denmark.

This decision is supplemental to Regulations No. 44, approved May 31, 1918.

DANIEL C. ROPER,
Commissioner.

Robertson-Cole Settled in New Enlarged Quarters

Due to the increase in their business during the past few months, the Robertson-Cole Company, under the direction of W. H. Selley and Miss Edna Williams, have been forced to expand their film activities with the result that their film department is now located in new and commodious quarters at 1600 Broadway. They have their own projection room, complete departments for the sale, exploitation and delivery of film.

This company has been prominently identified in the exporting field for many years. No small part of the business of this organization consists of doing the actual exporting for some of our foremost foreign sales companies, this work consisting of routing, shipping, taking care of collections, exchange, insurance, etc.

Buyers' Lobby a Brockliss Feature

An innovation in the new quarters of the house of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., has been installed by President Sidney Garrett. A visiting buyers' lobby has been furnished completely, both as a rest and conference room, as well as a foreign film journal library. Every motion picture publication in both American and all foreign tongues is kept on file for the reference and edification of foreign buyers.

As the projection rooms are busy practically every minute of the day, the lobby is a great comfort to foreign buyers while waiting for their particular production to be screened.

"Need Campaign to Awaken Foreign Press"

President Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean Film, is behind a campaign of education that has its chief aim getting important foreign newspapers to give films the same proportionate news space they secure in the American press. He quoted an article in the London Post that comments on the apathy of European newspapers thusly: "While pages are devoted to theatres and music halls, but hardly a column to the pictures, although the latter advertise also." Mr. Cromelin says that this unfortunate condition obtained just as thoroughly in America up to five years ago, but was changed by united exhibitor action.

"American exhibitors got tired of the poor news recognition," he states, "when trade writers like Johnston and Sargent pointed out that baseball, which did little or no advertising, received pages to the 'sticks' given pictures. These men, being journalists themselves, made the important disclosure that the newspaper readers who 'counted'—the sort that bought the wares of the advertisers—were of the sex that doesn't read ball news—but WOULD be interested in picture news. In other words, the newspapers were overlooking their own interests in overlooking the exhibitors. No fact could be plainer.

"Well, it is this simple fact that we want the foreign cinema man to get before his press. We want him to tell the local publisher that a well-conducted department of motion picture news will be the biggest asset his paper can have.

Stoll Now in Scotland

The Stoll Film Company, handling Goldwyn productions in the United Kingdom, has opened its Scottish office under the direction of John Jacobs, former general manager of the Broadwest Film Co.

Offices have been opened by Mr. Jacobs on West Nile Street, Glasgow. Mr. Jacobs is assisted by Percy Humphries.

Glucksmann House Continues Busy Operations

An interview with Jacobo Glucksmann, manager of the New York buying office of Max Glucksmann, indicates that this concern continues its operations on a large scale. Max Glucksmann has just acquired the exclusive rights for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile on the following eleven Balboa subjects:

"Jackie, the Hoyden," with Jackie Saunders.
"The Angel Child," with Kathleen Clifford.
"The Broken Vow," with Kathleen Clifford.
"Petticoats vs. Pants," with Anita King.
"Whatever the Cost," with Anita King.
"The Locked Door," with Gloria Joy.
"Mary Lee Mixes In," with Gloria Joy.
"Sallie O'," with Gloria Joy.
"Wanted, a Brother," with Gloria Joy.
"No Children Wanted," with Gloria Joy.
"Little Miss Grownup," with Gloria Joy.

Besides the above, Max Glucksmann has recently acquired the exclusive rights for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay, Chile, Peru and Bolivia on four W. H. productions, namely, "The Painted Soul," "The Cup of Life," "The Mating," "The Reward," with Bessie Barriscale.

The New York office has just given the Precision Machine Co. three orders for a quantity of Simplex projectors to be shipped respectively to Argentina, Chile and Uruguay direct. Since the house of Max Glucksmann acquired the exclusive distribution rights for the Simplex machine last year, this machine has been installed in the best theatres in the Argentine, where it has impressed the local exhibitors with its reliability and efficiency, enabling Max Glucksmann to dispose of all the machines previously shipped and creating a demand far greater than originally anticipated.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

[These reviews, by P. S. Harrison, are based solely on the entertaining qualities of the picture. All other factors are considered of secondary importance.]

"To the Highest Bidder"

Alice Joyce Seen with a New Type of Villain

(Vitagraph—July 22. Directed by Tom Terris)

THIS offering starts off fine. It shows several situations with heart interest which bring sympathy to the star. About the middle, however, the story becomes impossible, while towards the end the roles of the hero and villain are reversed. This causes the sympathy to switch also.

The story was written by Florence Morse Kingsley. It shows Steven Jarvis threatening to foreclose on the property of Barbara Preston and her little brother. He offered her the alternative of either paying up the overdue mortgage or becoming his mistress.

In order to avoid either Barbara offered her labor for five years for sale to the highest bidder. Jarvis, coveting her, bid the highest through a third party just as David Whitcomb, her sweetheart, whom she was forced to give up on account of her little brother, arrived from the West with a small bank roll. Barbara told him he was a little too late and that she was going to stick to her contract. He replied he was going to marry her contract or no contract. After a while, however, David became fascinated with a pretty waitress, whom he marries.

In the meantime Jarvis disclosed to Barbara the fact that he was the owner of her services, and that he was sorry he made such a proposal, and asked to be forgiven. He also told her he would be happy if she would consent to become his wife. Eventually she married him.

It is a bad thing to have the heroine marry a man who has made such a dishonorable proposal to her. No amount of repenting on the part of the villain will be enough to purge him in the minds of the spectators.

No vulgar scenes are shown while the bargain goes on. Children will hardly get on to it.

"False Ambition"

Alma Rubens in a Feature That Suffers in Cutting

(Triangle—July 21. Directed by Gilbert P. Hamilton)

YOU would have to possess the wisdom of Solomon before you could make out what this picture aims to tell. It has been so badly chopped up in cutting and editing that it has lost its continuity entirely. The material is there and with proper subtitles to supply the missing links it could have been made into a fairly good picture.

The story was written by E. Magnus Ingleton. As nearly as it can be made out it tells of a heroine who succeeded in stealing her brother's sweetheart. She borrowed some money from him to go to the city and buy her trousseau but forgot to go back. She had ambitions so she became a clairvoyant and gained fame.

Later she became an impostor. She assumed the identity of a dead girl but not long afterwards was found out. She now comes to realize the folly of her false ambitions. Eventually she married a young man who loved her sincerely.

Another bad feature in the story is the fact that the heroine is not given a sympathetic part.

You will be able to get by with this but be careful and don't boost it too much. The picture is clean.

"The Locked Hearts"

Gloria Joy, the New Child Star, Pleases Harrison

(Oakdale-General Film. Released in July. Directed by Henry King)

NOT every good director can direct children. This requires somewhat of a special study. First of all, he must understand their nature and must like them, and second, children must like him.

Mr. King has demonstrated his ability for such task. He has produced some very fine pictures such as "Little Mary Sunshine," "Told at Twilight," and many others in which Baby Marie Osborn starred. He now promises to duplicate that feat with little Gloria Joy who is remarkably free from self consciousness for a child of her age and especially when one takes into consideration that it is her first picture.

The story of course is a simple one. Gloria's mother died just after her birth. Her father hated Gloria for that, so he went away to foreign lands. During his travels he saw a father who risked his life and battled with a ferocious kidnapper in order to save his little child from his hands. His own fatherly love now having awakened he returns to find his little daughter grown and lovable.

The picture contains plenty of human element. Booze scenes are entirely absent. It is good for diversity of entertainment therefore it ought to please any audience.

"A Woman's Fool"

A Pleasing Drama for Harry Carey's Latest

(Universal Special—August 12. Directed by Jack Ford)

THIS is a pleasing little picture chiefly because the hero is given a human part. It is full of heart appealing situations.

The story is based on the popular book, "Lin McLean," by Owen Wister. It tells of a big-hearted cowboy who quit the ranch and went to the city. There he meets a woman whom he takes to the country to save her from drudgery. In time he became interested in her and decided to marry her. However, he was shocked to find she was married. She had again met and joined her husband who had come to the little town and posed as a "rain maker."

The hero goes to the city to spend Christmas. There he meets a little child without home and adopts him. After the holidays he returns to the country with his little charge.

The woman, being mistreated by her husband, returns to the country and tries to persuade the cowboy to marry her but he scorns her. He had already met a real girl who loved him and who had also taken an interest in his little charge. Eventually he married her.

The child stuff will get real sympathy. On the whole it is a good picture and you should not be afraid to show it.

"By Proxy"

Roy Stewart in a Clean Picture That Entertains

(Triangle—July 21. Directed by Cliff Smith)

THIS is another picture of the Red Sanders' series, by Henry Wallace Phillips, and a good one. The hero again takes the sympathetic part in it. Picture goers will be pleased with it.

The story tells of the efforts on the part of the hero to make happy a love-sick cowboy. He volunteers to kidnap the girl, but he followed the wrong clue and got the wrong one. In the end he offered to compromise by marrying her himself.

The photography is splendid. The fine views of the rough country with the cow herds should prove a treat to picture goers in general especially to those of the large cities.

It is a clean picture that will appeal to all classes.

"The City of Dim Faces"

Sessue Hayakawa's Latest Paramount a Race Clash Story

(Paramount—July 15. Directed by George Melford)

DRAMATICALLY this offering could not have been better. The photography, interior settings and Chinese costumings are simply marvelous. The atmosphere is also extremely realistic.

As far as entertaining picture goers is concerned, opinion will be divided. Those who draw the line on the race question will not care for it, those who don't, will enjoy it. There are also several heart appealing situations to help make it entertaining among the latter.

The story was written by Frances Marion. It depicts life in San Francisco's Chinatown. It describes how a young Chinaman, born of a white mother, fell in love with a white girl. She first reciprocated but later rejected him.

Thus jilted he determined on revenge. He made her his captive and sold her at a Chinese auction. But when told that he himself had white blood in him, at the risk of his life he rescued and restored her to her home.

The ending is very dramatic and somewhat depressing. He tears the bandage from a wound in his hand. It was inflicted on him while rescuing the girl. Thus he dies from loss of blood in the lap of his mother who went insane from her long imprisonment.

"The Vamp"

Enid Bennett in an Entertaining Paramount Offering

(Paramount-Ince—July 22. Directed by Jerome Storm)

"THE VAMP" is an interesting and entertaining offering. It is somewhat original in construction.

The story was written by Gardner Sullivan. It tells of a wardrobe girl in a musical show who had married a young man just out of college, where he had prepared for the ministerial profession.

The young man's uncle put him in charge of the Community House. It was built for the workers in his mines.

The uncle did not favor the match, but he told the girl she must show him she was the right kind of a wife for his nephew.

She helped catch a German spy who was trying to foment a strike among the miners by bribing the foreman. She thus proved she was made of the right stuff.

The picture is clean and suitable for any kind of an audience.

"The Dream Lady"

Carmel Myers in a Light But Pleasing Story

(Bluebird—July 29. Directed by Elsie Jane Wilson)

A LIGHT story, but well handled, makes this picture pleasing. There are no big situations to speak of in it, but it will hold your attention just the same.

The story, written by Margaret Widdemar, depicts a young orphan girl as possessing an imaginative disposition. She is a dreamer.

After the death of her uncle she devotes her time in helping other people have their dreams come true. This leads to some complications, which are eventually cleared away. In the struggle she loses her heart to the knight of her dreams.

It is a clean and breezy little picture, suitable mostly for high class audiences.

"The First Law"

Irene Castle in a Melodrama of the Serial Type

(Pathe—July 28. Directed by Lawrence McGill)

THE entertaining values of this photoplay are based on physical action. Also on the mystery element to a certain extent. It contains no heart appealing situations.

It is a picture of the serial story type with the hero and the heroine and of course the villain. The hero in this case is a wealthy young man who keeps himself modestly in the background and devotes his fortune for the betterment of the poor, while the heroine is the daughter of a prominent physician who had retired from activity after a nervous breakdown due to financial failure.

It is just a fair program picture.

"Impossible Susan"

Margarita Fisher Pleases in a Light Offering

(Mutual—July 22. Directed by Lloyd Ingram)

THIS is a pleasing little picture. It is another demonstration of what a director can do with ordinary material.

It is a simple love story, but owing to intelligent treatment it has been made into a good wholesome entertainment.

The story shows a brother who endeavored to prevent his young, wild brother from marrying a woman of the sporty type. He employed the cousin of his housemaid, a young country girl, for the purpose. He dressed her up in fine clothes and with the aid of a friend taught her good manners. He thus succeeded in attracting to her the attention of his brother who made love to her and asked her to marry him. When all was ready for the marriage, however, he fell again into the clutches of the other woman.

All the while, however, the young girl was in love with the big brother who had been most kind to her and whom she married in the end.

The case of the big brother's love for the girl is handled by the director most admirably. There are no facial twistings nor any subtitles to indicate that he inwardly loves the girl and that he prefers the happiness of his brother to his own. Still the spectator discerns that in the dignified expression of his face. Such handling raises the standard of picture production to a fine art.

The picture is clean and should please any audience especially the high-class kind.

"Less Than Kin"

Wallace Reid in a Dual Role Story

(Paramount—July 29. Directed by Donald Crisp)

YOUR patrons may enjoy this picture provided they don't take it seriously. It is the dual role type of a story with some of the situations impossible.

The story was written by Alice Duer Miller. It tells of the close resemblance of Robert Lee, a drunkard, and Lewis Vickers, a fugitive from justice for a murder he had accidentally committed (both roles assumed by Wallace Reid).

Lee died from dissipation and Vickers went to his home in the United States and assumed his identity. Eventually he was compelled to reveal who he was. When the sheriff attempted to arrest him he tried to escape. The girl who loved him followed and they were married. In the end he was pardoned by the governor.

There is some genuine comedy stuff in one part of the picture. It is caused by the splendid acting of one of the characters in the supporting cast. It helps add to the entertaining values.

The picture is clean.

"Neighbors"

An Average Offering with Madge Evans and Johnny Hines

(World—July 29. Directed by Frank Crane)

THIS is just a fair program offering. It lacks situations with heart interest.

The story was written by Maravene Thompson. It tells of the love of a young couple for each other and the objection of the boy's mother to the match because she disliked the girl's little sister. The latter, sometime later, saved the life of the boy's little sister at the risk of her own. The mother then consented to the union.

The kid comedy is a little too far fetched. It misses its mark laws against the criminal exploiter, and in the picture field in every state the man who deliberately panders to the nude, the lewd and the venal belongs in prison and can be placed there. Outside of this protection against crime in pictures, we want liberty in America.

The picture is clean and will just get by.

We are against paternalism. We are not children who need to be told what to see and think. We want to see and think for ourselves. We do not want the tendencies of thought to be regulated by any system of political control.

In the long run the business interests of the exhibitor will protect his theatre against things which are habitually vile. I know a theatre in a large city which had to change its name because of getting a reputation for dirty pictures; it had to repent and make a new start.

In the "No Man's Land" between the criminally bad and certainly good in the land of pictures the solution of the problem lies not in putting this dangerous and autocratic power in the hands of stupid censors; it lies in the voluntary co-operation of producers through the National Board of Review and in the self-protecting good sense of the American people in staying away from productions that are harmful.

Let us have no censorship except under the Penal Code.

Detroit Supplies One Model

Sunday Newspaper Comes Close to Giving What It Should in News Matter, But Rates Are High and Few Houses Advertise

THERE are too few times in this survey of the co-operation between newspapers and theatres in the principal cities that our hearts are made glad by what we find. But one case of this occurs when we turn to Detroit and find in one of the papers an almost ideal motion picture page. And that there may be no delay in giving credit where credit is due, let us say that paper is The Detroit News.

Yet at the same time we are told by leading exhibitors of Detroit, and men who are willing to spend money in advertising, that there is not a great deal of co-operation on the part of the papers and that most of them are not willing to go further than to give reading notices on the various productions and that they make no effort to encourage the really big things that some of the houses are doing.

The newspapers charge the theatres the amusement rate, and this is very high, $3.50 an inch in the Sunday papers. We imagine that this very thing keeps the majority of the neighborhood theatres and the smaller houses out of the papers. There are about 135 theatres in Detroit, and here is a case where the first newspaper that undertakes a campaign to get all of the theatres into advertising and makes a rate low enough to permit that will score a hit.

Many times in the course of these articles we have referred to the value to the newspaper of carrying a "directory" system of the theatres. We believe that a paper that could carry in its Sunday issue advertising of every theatre in the city and at the same time print a chart showing the attractions at the various houses for the entire week, as do some of the papers in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New Orleans and a few other cities, would be so supreme in the circulation field that there would be no question.

Today there is some one in nearly every family that is interested in pictures and that goes more or less regularly. The newspaper that affords its readers a ready reference place to which every one turns and finds its amusement for that particular day, is getting close to being a hundred per cent newspaper. There is not a daily in the country that would fail to print what baseball team is playing against the home boys that day, but for every person who goes to the ball game there are twenty that go to the motion pictures. That comparison may be far-fetched, and we will probably get the reply that baseball is the "great national sport" and that every one wants to read the baseball news whether they attend the games or not. Which is quite true. But it is also true that there are others in the family than the business man who has to hurry from home to work and the laborer, and that there are thousands of these who are interested in the motion picture. Some day we believe that the motion picture department will be just as much of a necessity in the daily paper as the editorial page.

Newspapers can afford to make a lower rate to the neighborhood houses and the smaller ones so as to get their advertising of the current bill each day. If the newspapers made this rate to cover the bare cost of publication they would be profiting by it, because of the circulation worth and the reader interest. These smaller houses should be satisfied with the general motion picture matter carried, without demand for reading notices, which are of little value to them, because the pictures have already been given publicity when they were shown at the first-run houses. And in a paper with such a photoplay department as The Sunday News, the smaller houses would find a place where advertising is practically a necessity.

Back from idealism. There are four papers in Detroit, but the circulation of one of them, according to Lord and Thomas, is so comparatively small that it may be dropped from consideration here. This is the way they line up:

Free Press, morning daily (137,163) and Sunday (150,933).

Journal, afternoon daily (106,385.

News, evening daily (221,183) and Sunday (174,547).

Times, afternoon daily (32,341).

Detroit's situation is peculiar in that some of the leading houses are far removed from the business section of the city. Ordinarily they would be classed as neighborhood houses, yet in this case they cannot be, for they have a city-wide appeal and in at least one case first-run and a theatre that leads in the matter of presentation of pictures and in newspaper advertising.

That very point, it seems to us, should be the argument why the strictly neighborhood houses should use small advertising space—if they could get the rate—to retain as much of their clientele as possible.

For instance, the Majestic is a mile and a half from the center of the city, but it is not only one of the leading theatres of Detroit, but one of the best in the country, and during the past few months it has established new records for long runs of big pictures. One theatre which advertises, the Ferry Field, is three miles from the center of the city.

Downtown there are twelve theatres. The first-run theatres are the Majestic, Washington, Adams, Madison, Majestic and Broadway Strand. All of these use the newspapers.

There is considerable syndicate ownership in Detroit, the John H. Kunsky Enterprises operating ten theatres, the Madison, Washington, Alhambra, Strand, Adams, Empress, Columbia, Liberty, Garden and Royal, while the Woodward Amusement Company has six smaller houses, Comique, Grand Circus, Woodward No. 1, Woodward No. 2, La Salle, and Rosebud.

Now, let's look at the newspaper situation and see what is being done. We started this article by mentioning the excellent page of the News. Three pages in the Sunday issue is devoted to amusements, the first page being given over entirely to motion pictures, and every line of matter we find there is real NEWS for the fans. It is well edited and there is no reason why every photoplay fan in Detroit and in the neighboring territory should not find mighty interesting reading in the News.

Across the page is an eight-column layout giving the attractions at the leading houses, but the reading notices are taken into the second page and the remainder of the first devoted to real news. Here we find a story with a two-column head about music interpreting the emotions of the film and other matter with news heading such as Cost to Film Just a Gamble, British Official Film Destroyed, Tom Moore One of Goldwyn Stars, etc. We mention these to show how real news matter can be gotten into the newspaper. There is a picture of Griffith "making up" Bobbie Harron. There is a clever column headed "Cut Backs," and illustrated with single column drawings, chatty sort of matter. Then there are "Filmographs," short paragraphs and other fillers. It would be mighty hard to beat that page.

There is further news matter on the second page. But first let us notice that the matter given to the advertising theatres is relieved of the curse of "reading notices" by the heading, "Synopsis of the Weekly Films." On this same page are pictures of Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, with a story about the war breaking up the duo, and another of Mrs. Castle with the news that she is going to France, and a third of S. Rankin Drew, who was killed in battle—all timely, up-to-date stuff.

The third page, which we have reproduced, is devoted to legitimate and vaudeville. Now right here is another place where Detroit is different from most cities, because two of the larger theatres, the Miles and the Orpheum, play vaudeville and pictures, but feature the latter. And they use advertising on both the motion picture page and the dramatic, in order to be sure to get the at-

Smaller Cities Named on Advisory Board

SINCE the Exhibitors' Service Bureau made its original announcement about a year ago, the smaller exhibitors have been invited and urged to send accounts of what they are doing to the Motion Picture News to be recorded in these pages. Many have responded but not the number that should have done so.

We have invited the exhibitors of all classes to call upon us whenever they want any sort of SERVICE, and there have been a surprising number of calls. We have done everything from naming a theatre in a town so small that there is only one showing a week to designing entire presentation for houses in the largest cities in the country.

Today the Motion Picture News is printing more matter about what theatres are doing than anyone ever believed it possible to gather together week after week. Not only are we telling you how the leading managers of the country are presenting various bills, but a number of them are writing articles for this department, which contain invaluable advice for everyone.

We realize that there are few theatres in the country that could do what the Rialto, or the Circle, or Shea's Hippodrome, or a number of the other leaders are doing. We do not print the matter because we believe that the same thing can be copied on the same scale, but for the inspiration that we believe that it affords—because smaller houses can get ideas from what these larger theatres are doing.

That more matter has not come from the smaller theatres we believe is because the managers feel that their efforts are not as worthy as that of the very leaders in the exhibition and that they have held back because of pure modesty. As a matter of fact, they should not feel that way. There are a hundred smaller theatres for each of the large ones and their fellows need to know what the smaller ones are doing.

Nearly all the members of the Advisory Board are men who started close to the bottom of exhibiting and we believe that they are familiar with the conditions that obtain there. But we are going further than this and have taken steps to name on this board a number of men who are operating houses in the smaller cities. Announcement of the first of these names will appear very soon. There will be others to appear later.

This step will make the Board representative of every branch of the exhibition field. We hope to gather together here a group of the leaders. It is impossible to name all of those who are really doing things and the names that we have picked are those of men and women who have already evinced a willingness to record their ideas for the benefit of others.

We believe that this is a distinct step forward.

For some weeks we have been planning to make this announcement, but we are hurried to it by the inspiring letter that we have received from Miss Flossie Jones, of whose success in Waukesha, Wis., a city of 10,000, we have told you. We take the liberty of printing a portion of it:

"The little manager needs so much attention and there is so much that he can do with a little help and a few suggestions that one should do everything in their power to further the cause. The News must be the prescription for all the exhibitors' ills. It is helping the big man tremendously. It is causing a competition for new ideas, the feeling that I want to do something bigger and better.

"It's all on a big scale, big things for the big city. But now comes the little fellow who has no daily paper, no up-to-date printer, no electrician, no symphony orchestra, and just a plain, ordinary house—no pep himself, nothing to spur him on and the taxes and the high cost of living and the lack of spirit to hold him back.

"He is the fellow to help and the hardest to reach. He is here and there, all by himself and growing apart from the industry. He is falling behind for lack of attention. The exchange men, his fellow exhibitors and even the periodicals are to blame, perhaps a little, because of the glamour of the new and expensive houses. We all frankly admit that the little house is the backbone of the industry. Then why not give them a little more personal attention and more practical suggestions.

"The News is wonderful. It is doing so much, but can't you do a little more? Your Advisory Department is great; there is food for thought in every issue but couldn't you add a page more—something exclusively for the little fellow, something he can reach and make him forget the show business is 'one long grind'?

"I want you to reach the least of all business men—the small town manager of the fellow who is merely running his house as a side line—the man who is not fair to himself or fair to the public because he is wasting his time and good pictures without trying to get the best results from every standpoint. I want you to show him how important he is to the industry, to the government, his own community and himself. I want you to give him new life, to show him the way to prosperity."

There is inspiration to us, at least, in this letter. And so we have taken the first step by going to the smaller cities for additional members of the Advisory Board. Miss Jones will, of course, be one of these. They will be managers who haven't the facilities of the biggest theatres, but who have the ginger, the brains and the determination to accomplish that counts. They will be just as LIVE WIRES as the proprietor of the largest house.

And this is just the first step of more SERVICE FOR THE SMALLER EXHIBITOR. It won't be our fault if we fail to reach them all. And in this we are going to have the co-operation of the greatest group of men and women that have ever been assembled in one body in the history of the industry.

Landau Shows How to Use Trade Papers

HERE is a statement of exploitation from the exhibitor's standpoint, addressed to the producers and distributors of motion pictures.

Leo A. Landau, manager of the Butterfly theatre, Milwaukee, demands that the manufacturers cut out the waste and that they devote their trade paper advertising to telling the exhibitor how to exploit the production.

Mr. Landau does not here deal in purely theoretical statements. He tells the producers just what they should do and how to do it.

It is the most illuminating article along these lines. Every line of it is full of thought:

Tons of useless literature, thousands of unused heralds, press sheets, cuts, mats, etc., are laying on the shelves of the distributing exchanges throughout the country, all charged to expense, in which the exhibitor is expected to share and from which he drives no actual value.

Is it possible, in this day, that there is an exhibitor who does not read at least one of the trade journals?

And if there be such an exhibitor, what interest has he in exploitation at all?

Why not, then, instead of amassing this accumulation of material, instead of using the advertising pages of the trade journal as a ballyhoo, use it to tell the exhibitor how to exploit his production?

What there is in it of special interest?

What particular class of people it will interest?

Why it will interest them?

Suggestions for gaining the "pulling" kind of publicity for it?

An illustration of one heart interest scene from the story?

A synopsis of the story?

An illustration of the star?

A notation of the various size mats or cuts of these illustrations that are obtainable upon request?

Why not put these things and other useful information which will show the exhibitor HOW to get money with the subject—that's the point, HOW to get money with it, instead of simply a BRAY that it's the best ever and a gold-brick description of its wonderful drawing qualities, written by a man WHO HAS NOT SEEN THE PRODUCTION and perhaps never will see it?

No advertising promoter for a film company has any honest justification to YELL about a production until he has reviewed it himself.

Exhibitors have been so frequently gold-bricked by the trade journal advertisements that (unless they are changed) these announcements will soon be passed over like so much mere paper and ink.

Time and time again have exhibitors complained that the mats and cuts were not suited for newspaper use—with what effect? The fellow in New York writes us we are mistaken—we continue to receive cuts that look fine on magazine paper but simply a blotch of ink in the newspaper. If they look that way in a big metropolitan newspaper, how must they look in the smaller city newspaper?

Why not make these cuts in various screens and furnish the exhibitor the screen HE knows he WANTS instead of telling him that he doesn't know what he wants?

The fault is, that the film companies employ men to prepare their copy who may be very fine and artistic copy writers, but they are NOT SHOW MEN—it takes a SHOW MAN to prepare copy for a SHOW—not merely an ad. writer with lots of ARTISTIC ideas!

The sooner the producing companies wake up to this fact the better it will be for all concerned, and some money will be saved.

So much for that part of the exploitation. Now for the "stills"—the exhibitor's SHOW WINDOW—and they ARE show windows at which the public "SHOPS," exactly the same as in the department store show window.

If the window trimmer displayed ladies' waists on sale for that day—if he had room in his show window for just eight of those waists, though the lot consisted of fifty or a hundred of them, which eight would he select—the LEAST attractive? Would he put in a single unattractive one? Would he put a waist in the window that was NOT in the lot on sale? Wouldn't he exercise the greatest care and take the greatest pains to make a selection for his show window display?

Yet, it has been said, by those who are in a position to know, that the motion picture director regards the "still" as merely a "necessary evil" and dislikes to stop to make them, and does so indifferently. Well, the writer wonders how much attention the same director would give to the production of a graphaphone record of a TALK about his picture, which was to be placed in front of every theatre playing the picture, for the passers-by to stop and listen to? If he knew that millions of people were going to LISTEN to that SPEECH about the picture, let us say for example, that these people were going to be gathered in a vast throng for him to ADDRESS, about HIS picture—he'd give a lot of TIME and THOUGHT to what he was going to TELL them—he'd be dog-gone careful what he said, too. Yet, the "still" is a "NECESSARY EVIL"!

WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE? ISN'T THAT JUST EXACTLY WHAT A "STILL" IS? A SPEECH TO EVERY PASSER-BY?

And now another cloud on the exploitation sky—and it's a dark one, too—THE REISSUE.

All fine to be done—deserving to be shown the public, time and time again—BUT NOT AT A LOWER ADMISSION PRICE THAN THE FIRST RUN IN THE LOCALITY CHARGES!

Now why not?

Everybody knows that no producer turns out 100 per cent of good productions—no exhibitor expects that. Yet, he pays, let's say, $100 a day for his regular program. Then why should the fellow near him who pays, let's say, $25 for a 100 per cent picture, be permitted to show it at a lower admission price? Why should the film company hit his first-run account in the face with competition which he cannot meet?

Bear in mind, all this time, that these reissues are 100 PER CENT PRODUCTIONS! They are being carefully CHOSEN. They show the SAME STAR—it's not like a "reissued" theatrical show playing for less money, because it has an INFERIOR cast. Not much—it's different! For example, some day "The Music Master" may show for less money with another star, but so long as DAVID WARFIELD is in it, it's the same "first-run" production as it were, and still plays at and GETS first run prices. And so it should!

It's generally conceded that reissues in the past year have hurt certain stars. It's not so much that they were bad pictures, as that they showed in all the cheaper theatres.

As sure as fate, if the producer does not wake up to the fact that a 100 PER CENT PICTURE with the ORIGINAL STAR and cast is ALWAYS a first-run admission price picture, and as such is unfair competition to his first-run account if shown for LESS money than first run, he will depreciate the value of that star's first-run new pictures, and the exhibitor playing that first-run will not be able to pay the rental asked him.

This, in the writer's opinion, is the gravest one thing on the exhibitors' horizon at this time, and motion picture journals should immediately open it up for general discussion before contracts for the new year are made and immeasurable harm done the exhibitor and the industry in general.

Your Idea and Ours

UNLESS your eyes are good you won't get all the "fine points" of this display. Yet the reduction that we have made here is not so great for the Clinton Square theatre, Albany, N. Y., used only seven inches three columns wide for the couple of hundred words that the writer stuck into it. It is jammed, crowded, messy, but it's much worse than that, for it has just about as many adjectives in it as were ever written into a circus display—and that is going some.

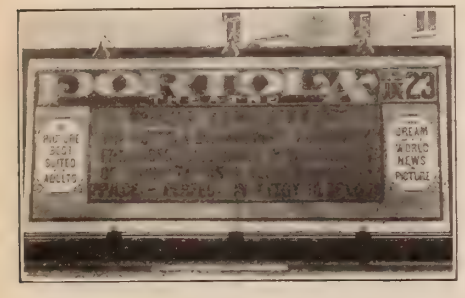
We are told that "A Man's Man" is "Best drama of the year," and a few lines further down we hear that "Blue Blood" is "the most daring of the season." The writer slows up a little when he gets to the June Elvidge picture and he only calls it "Fast-moving, intensely dramatic, and surprising narrative moving swiftly to a smashing climax."

Just a few of the adjectives: "Red-blooded, gripping, virile, spectacular, startling, fidelity, beautiful, splendid, striking." Heavens pity a constituency that has to be appealed to like this to see three really good pictures.

Samson didn't have anything on some exhibitors. He got his hair cut, but some showmen never venture enough to get theirs singed.

THIS is something unique in the way of billboard advertising. Several managers have used the personally guarantee method in their newspaper advertising of exceptional productions, but this time the Portola theatre, San Francisco, devoted whole billboards to putting the name of the theatre behind Alice Brady in "The Ordeal of Rosetta."



This paper was especially printed for the Portola and it is unique in that there is not a piece of the paper furnished by the producer or a picture of Miss Brady used. The reason for this is that the management wanted to center all the punch on the guarantee idea and did not want to put on anything else to detract the attention.

If you get enough pep in your business you'll soon be able to salt away a roll.

WEEK after week we, and the leading exhibitors of the country, have been telling the manufacturers to use their pages in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS to give the exhibitors a selling argument to pass along to the ultimate consumer—the patron. Recently we have had our attention called to the fact that many of the theatres are adopting advertising that is appearing in the trade papers merely to convince the exhibitor and that they are using this on the public.

Here is a case where the Tudor theatre, Atlanta, took a page from the trade papers, put the name of the theatre and date at the top and "No advance in prices" at the bottom and had an attractive display. It pays to watch the advertising pages of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS carefully. Most of the producers employ high-class artists and often there is material that can be taken by the exhibitor and used without great expense to him.

How much better would it be if all of the advertising was such as to help the exhibitor merchandise his picture!

HERE is the best Fourth of July advertisement that has come to our attention. It is the work of the Dayton theatre, Dayton, O., where the man who writes the displays is showing with every effort that he is really thinking. And the result is that he is getting over effective work.

Some may criticise this display on the ground that the writer has sacrificed the attraction for the design. This is true and if you are merely selling your picture, the argument will hold. But if you are selling your theatre, and that is the proper thing to do, it is good work. You must remember that the Dayton is a new house and that its needs to attract the attention of everyone. The originality of the design will catch every eye and we would wager that practically every person who read this newspaper also knew what was the current attraction at the Dayton before they laid the paper down.

And as we have said before it pays to show that you are up to date by marking holidays and special events.

Just because your house is small is no reason that it cannot be better than most small houses.

THIS display shows how repression may be used in advertising to secure emphasis. Now, Manager Charles C. Perry of the Strand theatre, Milwaukee, has a strong attraction in Theda Bara in "Under the Yoke." He wanted to play that strong, but he had also another object in view. He wanted to call especial attention to the fact that the Allies' Official War Review is having the first run at his theatre.

Now, most managers would have played up that fact just as strong as the Theda Bara announcement. In the first place there would have been a messy divided interest effect, and, next, some people might begin to hunt for "bunk." But Mr. Perry did what he wanted to do by putting the announcement in smaller type and making it appear less important matter, but he did it so well that we are sure that nine-tenths of the people read the whole announcement. It's not always necessary to yell from the house tops to get your message over.

What Live Wires are Doing

Let the fans, not your programs, do the exhausting in your theatre.

WITHOUT the slightest question of a doubt, here is the finest piece of star advertising, without the use of a cut, that we have ever seen, but with one serious fault.

It is the work of Max Allen, manager of the Monarch theatre at Edmonton, Alberta, Canada. Here the theatre made its name dominant. It played the name of Mary Pickford where it belonged and then with the circling formation of the name of the star it brought in the name of the picture. The boxed effect about the nature of the story is well done and the comedy is played in the right way.

But don't the people up in Edmonton know Bret Harte. We'll bet that there are a lot of Americans who have laughed and cried with him. The producer is always fond of slathering all over his cuts the name of an author that you have never heard of, telling you the director, the scenario writer and the camera man. But certainly in this case the name of the author was a thing to be brought in.

But from a hitting-you-in-the-eye and a typographical effect we cannot beat this in a thousand years.

Trouble with the "language" of some screens is that it needs an interpreter.

THERE'S just one thing wrong with this advertisement, and that appears in the box to the right of the Hun ruler's face. It reads "8 Magnificent Parts" and then "A stupendous, lavish and blood-tingling picture that will bring you to your feet when an outraged officer smashes the Kaiser's face." Now, this picture does not need those adjectives. They won't get a person into the theatre; in fact, adjectives such as these are calculated to arouse suspicion.

HERE is just about the best Douglas Fairbanks ad that we have seen in a mighty long time. But before we get called for an error we want to say that this reproduction was taken from the engraver and therefore the date of the showing does not appear here. There was also another little change made by placing a small Artcraft trademark cut where the monogram appears in this reproduction.

This is a splendid sample of what can be obtained with very light lines and lettering and with a predominance of white space. There isn't an adjective in the display. And you don't need it in cases like this. We'll make the flat statement that half of the theatres that advertised this picture in large space used the statement, "Fairbank's best picture," or something along that line. We don't believe in ever using that expression, and especially are we opposed to repeating the statement with each successive production.

List of the cast as it is done adds just a little more appearance to the display.

tention of every one that sees the paper.

Motion picture advertising in Detroit is all very similar, and one reason for this is that practically every house has done what every theatre everywhere should do—adopt a distinctive name plate and use it in every advertisement. That is one thing that is essential if the theatre is to become an institution and the manager who fails to make his house THE thing is not looking out for his best interests.

Washington theatre is 3 columns, nine inches, with cuts of the Gish girls and Griffith. The Majestic has 4¾ inches across four, there being no cut used. This was the second week of the run of "Missing" and the last week of operation before the house closed for redecoration. Madison uses four inches double and Adams just a little more with pictures of the stars, while Broadway, Strand and Liberty each use 3½, two columns wide. For some reason the advertisements of the Ferry Field and the Detroit Opera House, the latter running pictures during the summer, do not appear in the News. The Orpheum and the Miles each use two inches single on this page, announcing the picture and on the opposite page Miles has 3 x 7, on the entire bill, but featuring the Theda Bara picture. Orpheum, in its larger space, also features the picture star, Bill Hart.

Three pages are also devoted to amusements in the Sunday Free Press. The first of these is devoted to the legitimate, vaudeville and the parks with a three column layout on them and carries that class of advertising. On the opposite page appears the same motion picture advertising that appears in the News, with the addition of the Ferry Field, advertising the daily bill for the week, and the Detroit Opera House.

The third of the pages is the motion picture matter. There is a five column layout and reading notices for each of the advertising houses, headed with the names of the theatres. There are a few news items and a column of interesting "Screen Chatter," but it lacks a great deal of supplying the interesting page that the News offers.

The Saturday Journal carries all the amusement matter on one page. Majestic and Washington use smaller space than in the other papers and Detroit Opera House, Broadway Strand, Adams, Madison and Liberty use the same as in the others. There is a three-column layout and reading notices—and no real news matter.

Reading matter and adverising on vaudeville, legitimate, motion pictures, circus and dog and pony shows occupy a full page in the Saturday Times. We have not reproduced the page. There is an array of separate single column cuts. Wsahington, Majestic, Adams, Madison, Miles and Orpheum all use two column ads of varying depth.

Now during the week most of the theatres that advertise at all advertise every day. These are mainly card advertisements, about an inch single column, carrying the name of the theatre prominently with the title of the feature and the star. None, so far as the copies of the papers before us, increase the space they use on the change of bill. That probably comes from the fact that they get reading notices from all the theatres on this change.

This Is Claimed to be a Record Advertisement on a Single Production. It is a Fourteen Column Spread That Was Used by the Orpheum, Seattle

The Free Press is the best of the papers on the motion picture matter which appears in the Monday and Thursday issues. We have reproduced the Monday page showing a two-column cut of Jane Novak, and a little story about her and quite extended notices for each of the advertising theatres. There is also about a half column of interesting reading in "Screen Chatter." The same arrangement is repeated on Thursday, and this time we have a cut of the Dolly Sisters, reading notices and "Screen Chatter." On other days there is no motion picture mention. Majestic, Liberty, Madison, Adams, Broadway, Strand, Orpheum, Miles and Detroit Opera House used this paper daily.

The Journal carries the same advertisements and under the heading, "New Features in the Film Houses," gives reading notices on Mondays and Thursdays and on other days it carries a few lines giving the program at each house for that day and the next. This is a splendid feature and a help to the theatres.

The Times prints about a column and a half of reading notices on Mondays and Thursdays under two column heads, and carries advertising of the Washington, Majestic, Madison, Adams, Miles and Orpheum.

On Mondays and Thursdays the matter that the News prints is pure reading notices, and it carries advertising of all the houses that appear in the other papers except the Detroit Opera House.

But the News plays them going and coming, and in addition to its advertising of Sunday it also gets considerable space in the Saturday afternoon issues. It gives the picture houses a four-column layout and then a couple of columns of reading notices about the next week bills. About four columns of advertising is carried in the Saturday afternoon issue.

To sum up the Detroit situation: It is good in spots. The houses that do advertise do so consistently, but there should be far more of them and certainly the newspapers should make an effort to get the neighborhood theatres as regular advertisers. We believe that the trouble is the high rate that is charged, and there should be a lower rate as we have suggested that does not call for reading notices.

The Sunday issue of the News is splendid, but it stops there. We would like to see a daily column in that paper edited with the same intelligence.

The Free Press is doing good work in the Monday and Thursday columns.

Something is wrong, though, for there is not real evidence of the fullest co-operation all the way around. If the rate, as we have been told is to blame, there is probably a stumbling block that will prevent more theatres advertising. What we believe Detroit needs is some newspaper man with a knowledge of both ends of the game who can bring the theatre and the paper closer together.

Swimming Contest Staged for "Venus Model"

"The Venus Model" seems to be accepted by exhibitors in various parts of the country as affording an opportunity to do something original. George J. Schade, manager of the Schade theatre, Sandusky, O., and one of the most enterprising exhibitors in the country, is the latest.

Two days before the showing of "The Venus Model" he staged a swimming contest and offered a loving cup to be known as the Mabel Normand "Venus Model" trophy. Each contestant was given an autographed picture of Miss Normand. Professional swimmers were barred and a huge crowd assembled at the Sandusky Yacht Club for the event. The contest was preceded by a diving exhibition given by a professional attired in one of the "Venus Models."

How Rothapfel Views Patriotic Pictures

By S. L. Rothapfel
Managing Director, Rialto and Rivoli Theatres

This article gives some of the general views of Mr. Rothapfel on propaganda in motion pictures, based on the policies that govern the conduct of his two houses. This is the first of a series of articles which will take up the various phases of the manner in which the theatre can aid the winning of the war.

I HAVE been extremely busy of late and have not had time to answer a great many of the questions that have come to me, but at the earnest request of the editor of the Motion Picture News I will endeavor to give my views concerning patriotic propaganda in theatres.

In the first place, the motion picture theatre of today can do a great deal toward molding public opinion. It can do much to help the Government, but it must be handled with discretion, good taste and good judgment or else it will have exactly the opposite effect to what is desired. Wholesome propaganda presented in an entertaining way is not alone advantageous to the Government, but to the theatre and the man who presents it. I have noted the results and the enthusiastic way in which my audiences receive the propaganda pictures that I am presenting. They put the people in such a mood that they will accept more readily that which we wish to give them. And yet it has been hard work and has placed me in many embarrassing positions to maintain the high standard for which we are always striving.

We should avoid flag waving, braggadocio titles (commercial patriotism as it were), cheap sentiment, holding the enemy cheaply, bad taste in presentation, lack of dramatic psychology in presentation, overpresentation and, above all things, too much of the same thing on one bill are the things to steer away from. I must be frank and say that I have no sympathy whatever with the producer who commercializes patriotic love of country. A subject may be timely and in good taste, but the producer must also show this good taste. Unfortunately this is not always being done.

How the Rivoli Theatre Looks Now. It Was Intended That There Should Never Be Any Sign on the Building, But This Had Been Laid Aside for the Patriotic Display Which Includes the Emblem of the Marine Corps

The other night I had the honor to dine with some foreign officers and the conversation drifted to certain pictures that were being shown or had been shown in New York. This did not apply alone to the so-called features, but to the news pictures. Several of the foreign officers (among them being Italian, French and British officers) were strangely quiet. I noticed it and asked one of them with whom I had become good friends why he had remained so quiet during the discussion. He told me that it was a delicate matter, and that if he said what he really thought it might create bad feeling. When I finally made him give his opinion he said that unless people across the seas could know us as we really are we would be considered a nation of braggarts and egotists, and they would feel that we were not taking this great conflict seriously. I tell you, my friend exhibitors, that could you have heard this man speak and have seen the grave expression on his face you would have taken warning indeed. Don't let them use your theatre to exploit commercial patriotism. The Government does not want it, for it only acts as a boomerang. It is in extremely bad taste and, to say the least, most unpatriotic.

The Government has made the motion picture industry essential because it could not have done anything else. It is an essential industry and it can do the utmost good to the nation in spreading wholesome propaganda in a dignified, tasteful way and every exhibitor, every manager can do his country a great service as much as any man in a front line trench can do if he will bear in mind that he is invested with a responsibility which few seem to realize. He must guard that responsibility as a sacred possession and under no circumstance swerve from the straight and narrow path of good taste and discretion, absolute sincerity and pride of country and institution.

Next week I will endeavor to show the readers of the News just how and why we use propaganda pictures and to try to impart to you the reason for the remarkable success of propaganda films in the Rialto and Rivoli theatres.

I have been showing pictures for some time and I have never yet in all my career heard such outbursts of applause and enthusiasm as I have witnessed in these two houses during the past year. I have struck something. I have been guided by common sense and the advice of Government officials and only the other day I had a compliment paid to me by a very high Government official whose name I cannot divulge, but who said that we are doing more good in these two theatres toward our country's cause than any other medium he had ever known. This statement repaid me a million times for all the hard work and for all of the effort that I had given, and if it were within my power I would give a thousand times more.

"Raffles" Stunt Used With Success By Portland Theatre For "Madam Who?"

WALTER W. KOFELDT, highly successful ex-Pathe manager in the Pacific Northwest, with a reputation as a "stunt" champion, literally set Portland, Ore., by the ears during his second week as manager of the Majestic theatre. It was a "female Raffles" trick, turned in conjunction with the screening of the Bessie Barriscale - Paralta picture, "Madam Who?"

In co-operation with the Evening Telegram, one of the three Portland evening newspapers, Mr. Kofeldt secured three full pages of advertising for "Madam Who?" and the Majestic theatre, as well as many columns of free publicity. He billboarded the town, used the usual big space in other newspapers, had "Madam Who?" paged in every big hotel for several days, and had the town talking about "Madam Who?" long before the picture opened its one-week screening.

The "female Raffles" stunt is not a new one, but it's new as applied to pictures in the Northwest, and it went over big. Mr. Kofeldt hired a female detective to pose as "Madam Who?" and through advertisements and news stories in the Telegram the public was informed that the mysterious one would be at different stores at definite periods of the day. The person who addressed "Madam Who?" in the proper word-formula was offered $50 in War Savings Stamps.

A persistent girl cornered "Madam Who?" in a dairy lunch and was presented with the stamps from the stage of the Majestic at one of the early performances. "Madam Who?" this time a different one, again went about town fulfilling a promised five-day engagement, but, despite every effort, she evaded capture a second time.

The screening of "Madam Who?" was highly successful, despite hot weather, and Mr. Kofeldt has another success credited to his enviable record.

Yellow Background Used on "Yellow Ticket"

So far as records show, Criterion theatre, Atlanta, Ga., has pulled a new one. When it started in to advertise Fannie Ward in "The Yellow Ticket" it took a half page in the American and used a background of yellow behind it. The other matter was in type display with plenty of white space and very effective.

HYMAN AGAIN

He Will Now Book All Pictures for the Liberty Theatres

WHEN we selected the members of the Advisory Board we selected people who were doing things.

Edward L. Hyman was attracting attention as manager of the Victoria theatre, Buffalo, and for his work we named him.

But with the war well under way he decided to give his efforts to the Government and he was made manager of the Liberty theatre at Camp Wheeler, near Macon, Ga. In a few weeks came his promotion and he was sent to Camp Gordon, Atlanta, Ga., in the same capacity, but with the duty of selecting all the pictures for some ten Liberty theatres.

Now he has been promoted again. He has been sent back to New York to pick all the pictures for ALL the Liberty theatres. He will have his offices here in the future.

His articles have already brought much attention to the columns of the MOTION PICTURE NEWS. There will be others of them and they will have the same PUNCH.

Portland Exhibitor Making Own Feature Prologues

Claude S. Jensen, of the firm of Jensen and Von Herberg, controlling a string of theatres in Portland, Ore., Seattle, Wash., and other cities are going into the picture making business at least so far as Portland is concerned. They have installed complete motion picture camera outfits, together with laboratories for the development and printing of the film. Local events will be used.

During the recent showing of "My Four Years in Germany" Mr. Jensen arranged for a "home made" introduction. This was entitled, "Making the World Fit to Live In," and showed a battalion from the camp at Vancouver at drill and on march.

Says Mr. Von Herberg: "I feel that the patrons of motion picture theatres want entertainment and entertainment that's worth while.

"They want a good story picturized, a good cast to play the characters and a film of sufficient length to make the story entertaining. To that film my idea is to write a prologue, an introduction, that will have a bearing on the main features of the big picture to be shown and which will lead up to that film and add interest to it, rounding out a complete entertainment.

"The second idea is to provide news pictures of the doings in and around Portland and at the various camps where our boys are stationed, pictures that will be shown over our entire circuit, which includes Seattle, Butte and here."

How Stage Settings Provide Atmosphere

By Harold B. Franklin

Manager Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, and Member Advisory Board

This is the second of the articles by Mr. Franklin dealing with the atmosphere of the theatre. Because of the numerous stage settings of his that have been reproduced in these pages, Mr. Franklin is probably better known for this work than for any of the other many evidences of splendid showmanship that he gives. This article proves the value of settings in adding the atmosphere.

IN striving for better things in the presentation of motion pictures, managers of the larger houses have developed the art of stage settings to a high degree. It has been shown repeatedly that special stage dressings can be used with proportionate success in the smaller theatre. As there is an almost unlimited field, stretching from the Grecian period to the present day, to draw upon, suggestions for appropriate scenes may be readily found.

Stage settings may be divided into many classes. Most of the modern houses employ a special setting to display the picture screen. Some of these are elaborately planned, others are more simple in design. Many novel and pleasing effects have been worked out.

It is customary to give a specially prepared overture with illuminations in houses that boast of their music. The stage setting shows individuality and offers an attractive background to the orchestra. A delicate interpretation of a fantastic sunken garden, surrounded by a picturesque landscape bathed in light, does much toward enhancing the entertaining qualities of an orchestra. It is color-music made captivating not only to the ear, but to the eye as well.

Giving the Atmosphere

A striking stage dress produces a more practical and psychological effect upon the audience than one may realize. Patrons unconsciously welcome a few minutes' rest after watching the screen unfold seven, eight or nine reels. It gives patrons an opportunity to shift about, to listen to the musical feature, to converse and to admire the theatre in general.

At Shea's Hippodrome we have succeeded in developing stage settings to such an extent that we consider them as an essential part of our program. Settings that are a little story in light and paint have become very popular. These are specially painted every week and two artists are constantly at work on new ideas.

We have found that it is not enough for a setting to merely represent an attractive piece of country. Mere scenic embellishments are likely to become monotonous.

Our settings take the audience into the realm of fancy, the glory of battle, or the events of everyday life. Famous paintings offer a wealth of material. Big events can be successfully pictured and patriotic subjects are always available.

Some of these have the same effect as a posed tableaux, the only difference being that the figures are painted. During a recent Smokes Fund drive by the Buffalo Evening News, we prepared a setting that showed a wounded soldier with a Red Cross nurse filling his pipe. MOTION PICTURE NEWS reproduced a photo of this setting. In this connection we were able to get some very valuable free publicity from the local papers, who were very glad to reproduce the set in question. During the recent Red Cross drive we reproduced the famous poster "The Greatest Mother in the World," a cut of which MOTION PICTURE NEWS also published. The outline figures were shown against a sky of twilight blue and a red cross was hung to one side of the figures brilliantly illuminated. The effect on the audience was electrifying.

"America Is Coming," Fourth of July Stage Setting at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo

Patriotism Is Aroused

During the last Liberty Loan campaign we prepared a setting showing Pershing's doughboys going over the top. Against a blue sky, with exploding shells, that were electrically operated from the back drop, and an American silk flag waving, blown by a fan in the wings, a most realistic effect was obtained.

In working out these settings we have also developed what we are pleased to call cartoon-stage settings, which humorously treat situations in connection with the war. These always put the audience in good humor. This week we are showing a single Sammie taking back to the U. S. trenches from No Man's Land a half dozen Boche soldiers, whose faces show anything but content and satisfaction. The face of the Sammie, of course, is bubbling over with smiles. The audience, when it looks upon it, does the same thing, and here we have the desired effect, breaking the program of its monotony and adding the smile. That smile well repays the expense involved in the getting out of the special setting. Today if a theatre can make patrons smile its future is assured. Smiles have been placed in the "essential" list by everyone.

Special holidays always lend themselves admirably to special settings. Thanksgiving we showed a gigantic turkey. Washington's Birthday gave us an opportunity to stage a reproduction of the famous painting "Washington Crossing the Delaware," and on this occasion the lighting effects gave this subject color that even the painting does not show. Frequently settings are used to depict the atmosphere of the feature being shown. During the presentation of "The Bluebird" we selected a symbolic scene from the play for the stage setting. For "Uncle Tom's Cabin" we have planned a big plantation scene. Some of our patriotic settings have been loaned the city to aid patriotic movements, such as the Red Cross, W. S. S. and Liberty Loan.

Settings must arouse interest. The story quality in this case, as well as in motion pictures, has a strong hold on the average layman. A simple subject will at times have more appeal than an elaborate one. The love of pictures is universal. Stage settings are pictures in color and light and are to the eye what music is to the ear.

It is true that every theatre may not have the facilities to make a weekly change, but progressive exhibitors with initiative can at little expense give sufficient novelty to make settings an important feature on their program. Those who cannot afford scenic artists can usually find artistically inclined sign painters who can readily master the art of scenic work.

The lighting of stage settings is really a question of personal taste, and it depends greatly on the equipment of a theatre as to what can be done in this respect. Most modern houses are equipped with a system which enables them to use a combination of three colors, red, white or amber and blue. When these lights are operated on dimmers almost every desirable color or hue can be obtained. Where dimmers are

Wisconsin Manager Quickly Puts End to Boycott with Newspaper Declaration

THIS story is a little old, but everything is news until it is printed. It happened several weeks ago when "The Kaiser" was shown at the Majestic theatre, La Crosse, Wis. And it was not a piece of press agent's work, but an example of how a manager can meet a situation when he had the initiative.

Every one knows that there is a large element of German population in Wisconsin and there have been accusations that some of these were not loyal to their adopted country. Certain it is that a very secret boycott against the picture was started in that section. The truth did not come out until on Friday of the week during which the picture was shown and so the advertisement which is reproduced here could have hardly been used for the effect on the final day's business.

Manager Koppelberger, however, stood on his Americanism and wanted every one to know just what the position of the Majestic theatre was. So he inserted a quarter of a page advertisement that didn't leave much in doubt. "If you're for Germany stay away from the Majestic and La Crosse theatres. We serve plain notice that if we find in one of our theatres an enemy of the United States we will throw him out and throw his money in his face."

The men behind the boycott quickly ended their activities. Which proves there is no use of putting on the silencer when you mean business.

"The Kaiser" had one of the most notable runs in the history of the house, playing for a solid week. An augmented orchestra and the organ played a special program and the stage and lobby were decorated with flags. In addition to large newspaper space every available bill board was used and circulars were distributed in a radius of 75 miles.

In this connection Mr. Koppelberger called on and secured the co-operation of the merchants in the surrounding territory by carefully posting them as to the time of the performances, prices, etc., and they were prepared to answer any questions of their customers concerning the picture.

To Whom It May Concern:

It has come to the management of the Majestic Theatre that certain individuals are saying that the picture, "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," has "hurt" the theatre. The significance of this talk is a covert threat of boycott.

We accept the challenge. We stand by "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin."

Anyone who resents the message or the spirit of this picture IS NOT A LOYAL AMERICAN.

No loyal American will boycott a theatre for showing this accurate and instructive picture of German war methods and Germany's oppression of its own citizens.

Now the sum and substance of all this is that PRO-GERMANS are threatening to boycott the Majestic Theatre. We will beat them to it. WE DON'T WANT PRO-GERMAN MONEY! We don't want a dollar that isn't a loyal American dollar, a dollar FOR America, from the purse of a PATRIOTIC AMERICAN.

Get this straight: If you're for Germany, STAY AWAY FROM THE MAJESTIC AND LA CROSSE THEATRES. We serve plain notice that if we find in one of our theatres AN ENEMY OF THE UNITED STATES, we will THROW HIM OUT AND THROW HIS MONEY IN HIS FACE!

What Brought You the Most New Business During the Summer?

RECENTLY we printed a number of live suggestions for keeping up business in the summer season.

Some managers are inclined to get discouraged when the hot weather comes around and conclude that they are not going to do much business.

Others take on new ginger and speed up a little with the result that when the fall rolls around they find that they had a mighty prosperous season.

We believe that there are a large number of exhibitors in the latter class. We want accounts of what you have done for the benefit of the less fortunate. Where possible send photographs or reproductions of the stunt that you used.

Wyoming Theatre Runs Own Tobacco Fund

Joe K. Koehler, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Sheridan, Wyo., is having great success in raising money to buy soldiers tobacco. Already it has shipped one and a quarter tons of smokes, the most of it going to the One Hundred and Forty-eighth regiment, which is composed of Wyoming boys.

Mr. Koehler is not only using his theatre to foster this work, but he is distributing cards which bears an inscription "Joe K" says, and then a quotation about helping the boys out. Then there is a space for a large number of names and the signers can pledge any amount that they desire, though 25 cents is the amount suggested. It is reported that the signatures are coming in by the scores.

Up to the present the fund has been making a shipment each month and hopes to even increase the amount that is being sent "over there."

Intense Local Campaign on "Mormon Maid"

Alhambra Amusement Company, Utica, N. Y., reports a successful eight-day run of "A Mormon Maid," in which Mae Murray was featured, as the result of the strongly localized advertising campaign that was used. The picture was such a success that it was played for a week at the Alhambra theatre and then brought back later for two days at the DeLuxe, which is under the same management.

The entire publicity campaign was based on a fight against Mormonism and polygamy, along the line that the Mormons are taking advantage of the war to spread their propaganda. The endorsements of the ministers of the city were obtained as a result of the pre-showing of the picture and in addition to this city officials and the members of the New Century Club, the most exclusive organization of Utica, got behind the picture.

"The Unbeliever" Runs 4 Days in City of 31,367

"The Unbeliever" has just made a record-breaking four-day run at the Bijou theatre, La Crosse, Wis., a city of 31,367. From the very first performance the theatre was packed to capacity, and during the last two days hundreds of people were turned away.

H. H. Burford, manager of the Bijou, is a very consistent user of newspaper space, but in advertising "The Unbeliever" he used a great deal more space than usual, beginning his campaign a week before the showing. He augmented his newspaper advertising by a liberal use of window cards and billboards, and utilized the windows of several vacant stores to good advantage.

not a part of the regular equipment they can be installed very easily and at little expense. Strips of different colored lights also help to emphasize different parts of the set, such as faces, sky line, water, etc. Spot lamps and floods are also useful.

If I were arranging a setting for Mother's Day, I would select Whistler's famous painting of his mother. What a wonderful effect such a setting would have on an audience. The spirit of motherhood, accompanied by music expressing love and devotion, is appealing at all times to all classes. On Easter a religious subject might be desirable. A large white cross made up of frosted electric lights suspended at one side of a setting is also effective on this occasion. Last week as a Fourth of July setting we reproduced a patriotic subject showing the "Coming of America," which is illustrated here.

The effort is well worth while, and from a publicity standpoint proves most valuable, because patrons never fail to tell their friends of what they saw at Shea's Hippodrome. As a medium of instilling patriotism into an audience the stage setting is unequaled; in fact, we have found that settings of a patriotic nature have usually been the most successful ones. During the campaigns for the Red Cross, W. S. S. and Liberty loans, they form a striking background for Four-Minute Men, especially so when they are unveiled as the last few bars of a big patriotic overture are played and the speaker steps upon the stage. Exhibitors will find the subject one of great interest and a source of never-ending study.

Continuity in Advertising Pictures

By S. Barret McCormick

Managing Director, Circle theatre, Indianapolis

This is the third of a series of articles on advertising of motion pictures by Mr. McCormick. The first was on "Advertising to the Heart" and the second "Atmosphere in Film Advertising." Other articles by Mr. McCormick, who occupies a position at the very forefront of motion picture advertisers, will appear regularly every two weeks in these columns.

ADVERTISING is the sales spell-binder.

It influences buying only because it creates desire and pictures the necessity of a thing.

In all merchandising there is a natural tendency on the part of the consumer to oppose the salesman. The faction with the most forceful will power wins. If the consumer succeeds in convincing himself that he does not require a thing the sale is lost while persistency on the part of the salesman who is armed with convincing arguments of desirability will eventually succeed in consummating the deal.

Buying is entirely an emotional act.

In film advertising, perhaps more than in any other, the emotions have to be played upon not only with appealing copy but with a continuous drive against the resistance of the public.

Must Break Barriers

Before any advertising can succeed in its mission it must exert an influence over the public mind that breaks down the barriers of prejudice and creates interest in the place of a noncommittal attitude.

It must place the mind of the public in such a nervous state, so filled with suggestions, and created anticipation that resistance is impossible.

To sell a show the old fireside has to be made mentally undesirable and the easy chair as uncomfortable as a bed of cobble stones.

Advertising is primarily the faith of a producer in the merits of his product. Continued advertising is the public's acknowledgement of the merits of the advertised.

Just as success begets success and confidence creates confidence, so does continued and continuous advertising reflect the necessity and desirability of a thing.

Advertising is a power because it is founded on confidence.

As an argument in favor of continuity in advertising there can be no stronger reason than that the advertiser's faith in his merchandise is mirrored in his appeal to the buyer.

These are basic principles of the philosophy of printed salesmanship.

Impressions Short Lived

In motion picture exploitation as in all amusement selling it is well to remember that impressions are short lived. Department stores, it is said, estimate the memory of an advertisement to last twenty-four hours, with each hour after publication its influence dwindles simply because as the public detaches itself from the first emotional impulse to buy it musters its own reserves to resist the appeal.

In amusement advertising the most attractive of printed appeals will have lost its lure by the end of a day or two, in a week it has dropped into the great void of forgotten things. Suppose that a large display is used on the opening day of a week's attraction and assuming that every possible buyer was reached by it. How many people are able to follow the dictates of their desire and see the picture? Perhaps one-fifth.

What then of the other four-fifths? By to-morrow there is a haze over their memory, they are undecided, the gold has been tarnished by the appeal of other things. They have to be re-sold, the appetite whetted by another taste, and so persistency in advertising, as in personal salesmanship will eventually capture the entire group of sales possibilities.

Then why not so divide an advertising appropriation as to reach each day's prospects each day? A most desirable thing were it possible, but in advertising we deal with masses and not individuals. The big drive that begins previous to or with the start of an engagement, by its own overwhelming force weakens the power of the public to resist and makes it easier for the follow up campaign to rout out the backward or stubborn prospects.

The bass drum will attract a bigger crowd than a 'cello solo.

Appeals Are Varied

In picture advertising there are so many and varied appeals in each attraction that properly presented in a different fashion day after day some of them cannot fail to strike the responsive chord in every one who reads, and when that has been gained the emotional impulse will, in the majority of cases, influence purchase.

But it is bad policy to shoot one gun and wait for a bread riot to end the war.

As an example of continuity in advertising, both in the matter of continuity of thought and continuous salesmanship in print, MOTION PICTURE NEWS is reproducing advertisements used in the recent campaign of the Circle theatre for "Pershing's Crusaders." Here was a picture with almost countless sales arguments. An advertising campaign could have been carried on indefinitely without once duplicating in

Jewel Productions Starts Formation of "Yellow Dog" Clubs All Over the Country

JEWEL PRODUCTIONS is conducting a unique campaign in the pre-exploitation of "The Yellow Dog," the Henry Irving Dodge story which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and which is now being made into a motion picture. This campaign is destined to serve the government as well as pave the way for the picture, and it is unique in that the fact that the story is being made into a screen production is nowhere mentioned in any of the publicity.

The story tells of a commuter who was struck by the conversations that he overheard on the trains and in the community where he lived. He started in to organize the boys of the community into "Boy Detectives" and supplied them with cards which were to be handed to people who were heard talking against the government or spreading false rumors as facts. Jewel Productions is now spreading the formation of the "Anti-Yellow Dog" clubs to all parts of the country.

Theatres everywhere are being asked to co-operate in formation of these clubs. Recruiting posters have been issued and slides designed asking the boys of the community to gather at a specified date and place and organize one of these clubs. In addition to this there are folders stating the objects of the clubs, another giving directions for their formation, cards of membership and finally clips that are to be used by the boys in summoning the "Yellow Dogs." All of this printed matter closely follows the material that is used in the original story.

Jewel Productions, in its letters to exhibitors, point out that they will be doing a service to the country by the organization of these clubs along the lines that Mr. Dodge suggested. Certainly coming in vacation time and with the natural desire of the younger generation to act as detectives there should be a most popular appeal here. And there is not exaggeration of the good that such clubs can do. Great credit has been given the Boy Scouts of England for the work they have done in helping to ferret out spies.

Continuity in Advertising

print the appealing points. But for a ten days' drive a half-dozen of the most vital issues were selected, those possessing nearest to a universal appeal.

For several days prior to the opening interest was created in the first official United States Government film. A general impression of its nature was given. Desire to see what our own Government was doing was created? Minor points of appeal were eliminated, and the thing as a whole exploited in what might be called general publicity work.

With the opening of the engagement broadsides of four and five full columns were fired still maintaining the same general trend of the early publicity, but sketching an interesting synopsis of the broad panorama of war activities it contained, and into this was injected the thought of the lofty ideal that actuated our country's entry into the conflict.

That thought, the debt to humanity, the debt to France, the same ardent patriotism was carried into the next advertisement which had as its theme General Pershing's own words, "Lafayette, we come," words that have in themselves a tremendous driving force, a great emotional appeal.

Pride of Country

Next to overwhelming patriotism, pride was the most stirring of the issues contained in the film, the pride in every American's heart for what his country is doing. This was expressed in the four-column display captioned, "My Country 'tis of Thee."

Next came individual interest, the personal element, the appeal to the home where the service flag hangs in the window. The idea that this picture might carry a personal message to every home touched by the hand of war was conveyed pictorially through a drawing of a censored post card from "Somewhere in France" through which could be seen a regiment being reviewed by General Pershing.

This display, four columns, eight inches, appealed to love of country

Utilizing Publicity

During the campaign the War Department officially announced the safe arrival in France of a million men. This publicity was capitalized in several ways, among them a Fourth of July advertisement headed "The Million Men Under the Eagle's Wings in France," and which strove to give an inspiring picture of the Fourth of 142 years ago and to-day, when the Stars and Stripes symbolize the same motives now as when the bell in Liberty Hall rang out its message of Freedom.

Alternating with these were ten or more pieces of copy ranging from small two-column advertisements to four and five-column displays, dealing with everything from practical issues to emotional outbursts, but throughout the same general principle of selling was maintained, continuity of thought was gained by letting the powerful elements of patriotism and pride dominate while the lesser appeals found their own receptive audience. Continuity of selling power was gained by the accumulative effect, the constant pounding against the resistance of the public's unwillingness to buy.

Perhaps in many cases the lack of continuity in advertising is influenced by an overestimated value of "word of mouth" advertising. Its value as a selling force cannot be denied, but to depend on it is to revert to the methods of the town crier and to overlook the fact that the press is the universal tongue.

Johnson Couples Up Music and Film

Coupling up of music with pictures was well illustrated last week at the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis. Manager Julius Johnson is recognized as being one of the best musicians in the Northwest, having devoted himself to the organ before becoming a house manager. Yet he gives a great share of his attention now to the music and to the special settings which he changes twice each month.

During the overture, which featured a harp solo, the slowly changing lights finally flooded a garden scene, showing in the distance a lake. Just at the close of this the curtains came together slowly over the stage setting, the scenic staring right on the curtains before they parted again, baring the screen. This was a Robert Bruce-Educational subject, "The Cruise of the Quicker'n-ell," and so the water effects fitted in with the lake feature of the special setting.

Goddard's "Berceuse," played by organ, violin and harp trio, followed and then came the feature, "How Could You, Jean?" followed by a Vitagraph comedy, "Boodle and Bandits."

Splendid Advertising Campaign Arouses Interest in New Theatre Before Opening

By L. H. Grandjean
Publicity Director, Liberty Theatre, New Orleans

Here, we believe, is the best pre-opening publicity campaign ever put out by a theatre. These displays ran in two and three column width daily and discussed every feature of the news house.

THE editor of Exhibitors' Service Bureau of MOTION PICTURE NEWS has asked me to give my own story of the pre-opening campaign of advertising of Liberty theatre. He had read but a few ads of the series before complimenting me on what he said he knew would be a thorough campaign of the very sort that gladdened his heart, inasmuch as our friend, the editor, has so often appealed to theatre advertisers to keep their houses in the public eye, to give them an individuality which would make them appeal to the public on their own merits—not alone for what patricular attraction might be current. It has been a hobby with us to create a distinctive atmosphere about the houses we have managed and we shall not hark back to the past to recall its successes. We are now concerned with the Liberty theatre publicity.

The Liberty was designed chiefly by its capable manager, Ernst Boehringer, from ideas he had gathered in his extensive travels and from the very thorough school of practical experience; his assistant, the writer, also contributing ideas and transferring the combined ideas to paper for the guidance of the architects. We do not assume that architects are incapable of designing motion picture theatres, but how many architects know the problems of the exhibitor? How many, in fact, guide themselves in designing photoplay theatres by the fact that the chief concern of the exhibitor is to project a picture on a screen, said picture to be in focus at all points on the screen and not distorted? Not many, or there would be fewer screens tilted, fewer screens painted to obliterate the reversed keystone effect.

The Liberty was designed to be practical and to offer the utmost in comfort and convenience to its patrons. And as each of the features of the theatre were very carefully discussed, with the writer one of the parties to the discussion, the planning of the advertising campaign was not a particularly trying task. The campaign was conceived, written and carried out to advertise Liberty theatre. And it does not represent all that is intended in the advertising of Liberty theatre. We're going to continue to talk Liberty even while using lots of space promoting its shows. But Liberty theatre will become known as a house to go to even when the amusement seeker is ignorant as to what particular program he will find once he is seated; for we believe in house advertising.

The four-aisle plan is our idea of comfort and convenience. We have but six seats to the row in the side banks and eight to the row in the center bank
This means more aisle seats and fewer persons to cross for inside seats. It mean safety by facilitating egress. It means greater comfort because of better ventilation through smaller groupings of patrons.
By the use of the usual photoplay theatre aisle plans shown in the more heavily shaded portions of the above sketch, we would have materially increased our seating capacity. Or we may have increased it had we used the narrower chairs commonly installed in Photoplay Theatres.
We did neither of these things as either or both would be a detriment to your comfort. Our chairs range in width from 19 to 22 inches. Incidentally, ours is the best theatre chair in the world, and well worth telling you about. We'll do so tomorrow.

How Features of the Theatre Were Discussed

The pre-opening campaign of Liberty Theatre was inaugurated with an announcement that the house was practically completed and was soon to be opened. It called attention to the past satisfaction on photoplay lovers in the method of the Boehringer Amusement Company while operating Triangle theatre, hinted at a number of material differences in Liberty theatre and called attention to the announcement of the succeeding day which was to be an illustrated talk on projection. From then on, each day a separate feature of the house was discussed, each numbered and each noting the succeeding day's subject. Projection, aisle arrangement, seating, lighted raisers in stairways, ventilation, shadow boxes, duplex box-office, decoration, location, safety-first, prices, etc., followed in succesion until finally the opening date and feature were announced and dwelt upon and the advertising given a twist to promote a substantial benefit for the Red Cross on the opening day.

On the day of the opening, a ten-page special section was published in honor of Liberty theatre by the Times-Picayune, this honor having never been conferred on any private venture of any character by the conservative and venerable newspaper. And there ended the campaign.

On Wednesday, July 3, we placed a full page advertisement of "Over the Top" in the New Orleans Item, the first full page advertisement, by the way, ever used in New Orleans for the exploitation of a single picture or play. This page inaugurated the picture-promotion publicity of Liberty theatre.

If the picture-promotion publicity of Liberty theatre is as eagerly read and as favorably commented upon as was the pre-opening campaign, we will be more than happy. For we have tangible proof that our pre-opening campaign made a very deep impression.

LIBERTY Theatre
422-424 St. Charles Street
From the days of the Spanish regime in Louisiana, the block on which the Liberty stands has been a theatrical center in this city.
THE VERY SPOT ON WHICH LIBERTY THEATRE STANDS WAS THE SITE OF THE FIRST PRETENTIOUS AMUSEMENT HALL IN NEW ORLEANS. It was a Spanish enterprise—its entrance was in Camp Street.
It was also the FIRST BUILDING erected on REAL FOUNDATIONS in New Orleans. And now, beneath the Liberty is a solid foundation of the same stone as that with which the Vieux Carre was paved.
All of which is but history.
Today, St. Charles Street is in the limelight. It is the main traffic artery of the city—it is going to become the Fifth Avenue of New Orleans.
A short stroll from Canal Street past the interesting windows of excellent stores brings the downtowner who will not transfer for such a short distance to the Liberty. The resident of the upper section may alight not farther than two blocks away.
The autoist will find an excellent parking space in the generous width of Poydras Street between Camp and Carondelet.
Tomorrow: Safety first.

Perfume Employed in Big Cleveland Theatre

Manager Jack Kuhn of Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, scored a big hit by the use of perfume in connection with the showing of "Old Wives for New." There is a place in the picture where a curtain of lilies is shown and just at this point breezes of lily perfume were wafted through the house. This was accomplished by sprinkling the perfume on the blades of the big blowers in the basement and the scent was transmitted through the mushroom ventilators under each seat.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

INTO the presentations at the Rialto and Rivoli this week enters the spirit of France, marking the national holiday of our sister republic and ally—the Fourteenth of July. And the tribute is paid just in the right degree, not overdone, but always in good taste—stirring, but in a reverent spirit.

At the Rialto the tribute is paid with the overture "Robespierre" and a special setting. At the Rivoli there is a distinct number given to it with the "Marseillaise," sung and the attack on the Bastille reproduced in motion pictures in the cleverest sort of a way. At both houses the audiences are stirred to the greatest of applause. Not merely mad cheering, but the people are really moved by the heart appeal.

On another page appears the introduction to a series of talks by Mr. Rothapfel about linking the theatre and patriotism, and in a following article he will tell how he does this at his theatres, but certainly nothing offers a better example than the way that the Fourteenth of July was observed. Here was a case where it was a desire of every one to pay a tribute to France in return for the way that she observed our Fourth of July and we don't hesitate to say that every one goes away from the two houses this week feeling that they have done some little toward honoring the great, suffering nation of France by the cheers that they have given and by the tuggings that they have felt at their hearts.

"Marseillaise" forms the climax to "Robespierre," the Rialto overture, which is really a musical picture of the French revolution. First the lights of the theatre are all blue as the first portion of the selection is played. Then a bugle call is heard from behind the scenes and the lights all turn to red and the side panels part, showing the palace from which the revolutionists started on their march at the right and at the left the Bastille, which toward the end of the number bursts into flame. And near the end the lights become white again, giving the red, white and blue setting to the number. One need not be told to what height the audiences are aroused by this rendition.

Then follows a picture of "Paris, the Beautiful," made by Beacon Films, and for this five musical selections are used, "Guard Madelon," "Manon," "Amorouse," "Ponts de Paris" and "Passepied" No. 2. The French spirit is maintained through the musical number that follows, Count Lorrie Grimaldi singing the aria from "Robert le Diable," with the lighting effects all red.

Rialto Animated is unusually short this week, but it is there with the punch. It opens with Gaumont pictures of the navy boys the guest of the army at Camp Ayers, Mass., and for this the music is "Rifle Regiment" march. Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of the Mitchel funeral, with Chopin's "Funebre" on the organ. It produces a most solemn effect and there was but one thing to mar it when we say—the presentation. Some misguided partisan insisted on applauding the picture of Col. Roosevelt marching in the funeral parade, but this man was alone in his jarring note and his enthusiasm came to a quick halt. Tolling bells effects were used and toward the end "Taps" was sounded on the bugle.

"Washington Post March" is used for Gaumont pictures showing the launching of eight destroyers and nine ships at San Francisco on the nation's birthday, with keels for others being laid before the launching crowds had budged. Gaumont supplies pictures of the amphibious automobile at Chicago and here "Avec Elan" is used.

Then come Hearst-Pathe pictures of the King and Queen visiting one of the war plants and here "Royal Hearts" is used. The same selection is used with other pictures of King George at the Rivoli. This is done with a purpose, for in this number the British national air is counterpointed, and don't you think that it is fitting that a program that it paying especial honor to France should also show that we appreciate the part that the British nation is playing in the Great Sacrifice? This number gets a great deal of applause. Gaumont pictures show the inoculation of our boys in France for the fever and here the music changes to "There's a Million Heroes." There is an unusual but stirring finish with the Hearst-Pathe pictures of the parade of young patriots in Honolulu and "Liberty Bell March" is used. The finale is made all the more punchy by the display of allied flags by the marchers right at the end of the picture.

Then comes Lucy Lee Call singing "Give Me Back My Hope," from "I Puritani," before the Byzantine setting. The curtains at the side panels are in green, the footlights in red, the orchestra lighted in blue and the center dome in orange, crimson and green.

Practically all of the music for the feature, "The Vampire," is the light and airy sort, such selections as "Ziegfeld's Follies," "Katinka," "My Dreamy China" and "Opera Ball," together with several of the Rialto numbered selections which we have explained before. There are some clever effects obtained in the music, for during the scene showing the benefit where flags are waved after the news of the U. S. entering the war, the organ brings in just a suggestion of the national anthem and at another point "My Little Grey House" is played through twice with the full orchestra, and then as a violin solo, with the effect that every one in the house wants to whistle it. "Turkey in the Straw" gets a laugh at the point where Mr. Mulligan is found under the bed.

Selections from "Oh, Boy," played by the orchestra follow and then there comes one of the most amazing of comedies, a Fox Sunshine, "A Tight Squeeze." One of the funniest scenes is where the rooster chases the duck and the latter takes to the water and squirts a stream of it on the rooster. There is a goat and a donkey, too, and these wonderfully trained animals are responsible for many of the continuous laughs.

The French spirit is brought back with the final organ solo, "March aux Flambeaux."

Now let's go to the Rivoli and see the way that the tribute to France is paid there.

Here the overture is "La Forza del Destino," its title appropriate in the fact that the destiny of the world is today being fought in France. It is superbly rendered with all the lights in gold.

There is a novel introduction to the scenic, "Roping a Canadian Lynx." First there is a trumpet call in the orchestra and then another in the distance from behind the stage and the picture starts. The introduction to "Allegro Vivace" is used, being muted the second time, and then the last strain is played twice, followed by an agitato and then "Allegro Vivace" at the end.

Another of the striking John Wenger settings is used with Martha Atwood playing "In an Old-Fashioned Town." First the orchestra plays several bars and then the curtains part, revealing Miss Atwood seated at a piano. There is a tall center window just behind the piano and at either side circular windows with the figure of Madonna. Directly over the piano there is one hanging light and others barely visible in the folds of the curtains at either side of the stage. The stage is barely lighted and a burning candle on the piano is in sympathy with the air.

There is a delightful touch with the opening of the Animated when a scenic is shown with views on the Rue de Rivoli and a title tells us "Hence the name of this theatre." That title gets a big hand and the orchestra plays "The Fairest of the Fair." Of course every one sees what has been done. The Rivoli theatre has been linked right up with the capital of the nation whose day we are celebrating and we'll wager that this little incident caused more word of mouth advertising for the theatre than hundreds of twenty-four sheets could arouse.

IS THIS RECORD?

F. M. EDGETT, manager of the Lyric theatre, Earlville, Ill., claims to have set a world record in showing "Over the Top" for three days in a town of 1,000 inhabitants, and we are inclind to believe that he is entitled to the medal.

Mr. Edgett brought the Leland juvenile band over to play in front of the theatre during the engagement, and the boys and girls composing this organization made a big hit. The front of the theatre was decorated with pictures of Empey and scenes from the play.

He charged 75 and 50 cents admission successfully.

Rialto and Rivoli

Gaumont shows views of motor bike stunts in California and "High Stepper" is used. From the same source come pictures showing the first American bombing machines making good at Elizabeth, N. J., with "Air Queen" used. Gaumont pictures of the Mitchel funeral follow with "Funibre" used and "Taps," muted, sounded as the funeral party enters the church.

But we are not allowed to linger long in this spirit for we are given a thrill with pictures of the British King inspecting the tanks on the western battle front and in the front line watching a bombardment. As we have told you, "Loyal Hearts" is also used with this selection. And let us make this observation right here: If the British King gets nothing else out of the war he will know that the motion picture camera has made him one of the most popular of men. The King is shown to be a genuine man in all the pictures of him and in this instance he smiles into the camera and the audience applauds vigorously. Pictures of General Haig bidding the ruler farewell gets an especially stirring reception.

Then comes the Allies' Official War Review. You may remember that two weeks ago we declared that we believed that all records for patriotic applause had been broken at the Rialto and last week we told you that the Rialto record went by the boards at the Rivoli that week. Well, this week all we have to say is that we are done talking about records. When we saw the showing of these pictures it was the wildest demonstration of enthusiasm that could be possible without literally tearing down the house and throwing pieces of it around. Watch one of the things that brought this about.

"They Did Not Pass" is the first title and with a battle agitato we are shown pictures of the British guns which held the line against the Huns. There are some wonderful shots of all calibres of cannon and the enthusiasm is so great that it drowns almost the crashing music of the orchestra and works the audience up to a high pitch with the huge cannon mounted on railway cars.

Then the bugle call to advance and we are shown pictures of the Marines going forward. Just as this title is flashed on the spotlights are turned on the American and Marine flags on the proscenium arch and there is continued shouting as the boys are shown leaving their training camp and starting for the front. "Marine Hymn" is first used and then when General Pershing comes by in his auto the music changes to "Semper Fidelis," and the audience, OH, BOY! During the remainder of this picture these two official marine selections are alternated with drum rolls and trumpet calls leading them into each other.

There are still other thrills supplied with the title "with more than a million overseas millions of others are preparing" and here we get pictures at the Great Lakes training school. Sailors in white form the words "Great Lakes" and an anchor, and in red are the letters "U. S. N." and "100,000."

But watch the end. There come pictures of Our Boys entering the "Place de Bastille" and being cheered by the French throngs. With "Stars and Stripes" being played and the combination of the American troops and the French crowds can you imagine anything being more thrilling?

And yet, possibly there was in the next number, for here we had the tribute that was paid to the Fourteenth of July. The audience begins the opening strains of "Robespierre" and in the center of the curtain there appears a flash of the Liberty Cap and then the curtains part, showing a panelled setting and Desere La Salle comes on the stage attired as a French peasant of the days of the revolution and when he starts the first words of "Marseillaise" the audience arises to its feet and applauds. Now there is a most unusual effect used here in the middle panel of the setting, for motion pictures showing scenes in the French revolution are used. Mr. Rothapfel dug these up for this occasion and nothing could have been more appropriate. It was really one of the biggest hits that we have ever known, a glorious tribute to a glorious nation. And if every one did not leave the theatre with a fuller determination to make every sacrifice necessary that France shall be utterly redeemed we are poor judges.

Then follows the feature, "We Can't Have Everything." Are the producers going to bring the war into every picture? It looks that way and this particular one is not a bit strengthened by that, though there is a chance for a musical variation when the soldiers are shown playing the piano and the same tin-panny effect is reproduced.

"Love's Torment" is the theme and various other love selections are introduced with "Love Song" as the opening and a few strains of it near the end of the picture. "Love's Confession" is also used. "On the Volga," "Air de Ballet," "Dance Oriental" and "Follow the Girl" are also used. There is a little of the Egyptian dance in one of the studio scenes and toward the end in the soldier episodes we are given "When Yankee Doodle Learns to Parley Voo" and "Good Luck, U. S. A."

Mr. Rothapfel continues to give us selections from the successful operas of Victor Herbert and they are delighting the audiences. This week it is selections from "The Fortune Teller."

We are all sent away with a big laugh after we have seen the International Educational cartoon, Happy Hooligan in "Mopping up a Million." The orchestra gets an opportunity for some clever imitation effects and there come out the old favorite, "Hot Time," when the girl is seen playing the piano, and the imitations of dogs during the wrestling match gets a big laugh.

Now the result of the bill at the Rivoli. In the first place we have been given a splendid show. We have paid a tribute that we all wanted to pay to France and thanks to the arrangements we haven't paid it in any vainglorious way, but our hearts have gone out to Her of Joan. And we have paid a little tribute to the other great ally, Britain, and our own boys have not been forgotten. We have seen them in the Place de Bastille and we have almost been able to hear the welcomes of the French thousands gathered there to greet them. And we have had our own theatre linked up with one of the most beautiful of Paris streets—something that most of the spectators had never thought of before. And then we were brought back into the laughs, for there are many of them in the feature, and then the fun idea is kept predominant through the musical number and we all get away laughing.

The same thing has been accomplished in a different way at the Rialto, and between the two we believe that the Rivoli method is the more striking. But at any rate the pleasing thing about the two presentations is that waving of French flags or the time-worn device of crossing the Tricolor with the Stars and Stripes are not resorted to. It is simply another case of Rothapfel getting at the spirit of things and getting that spirit in his presentations and into the hearts of the audiences.

The things that he is doing at his two houses this week will be remembered long after all have forgotten how one day we got out and waved a flag and thought that we were showing a lot of patriotism. That was the patriotism of the muscle and the voice. In these other cases it was written into our hearts—and it stays there.

American Plans Told in Detail

S. S. Hutchison Makes Authoritative Statement of New Policy—Distribution Through Pathe with Special Representatives at All Exchanges

PRESIDENT S. S. HUTCHISON, of the American Film Manufacturing Company, this week issued a complete and authoritative statement regarding his plans for the coming season to a MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative in Chicago.

Aside from confirming the news first given in MOTION PICTURE NEWS that American releases would be distributed through Pathe, the statement tells in detail of the manner by which this will be done in collaboration with special American representatives at each Pathe exchange.

Mr. Hutchison declared: "The rumor that our future productions will be sold direct to exhibitors through American Film Company representatives established in Pathe exchanges is true. Personal representatives of mine will be found at each of the thirty Pathe exchanges in the United States on and after Monday, July 22nd, and will be pleased to meet all exhibitors and explain to them the details of the booking arrangement we have effected, also to show them the first completed subjects and take applications for bookings. The productions will star Mary Miles Minter and Margarita Fisher. The contract also calls for the release of the William Russell productions, which I control.

"You will note that we are not asking the exhibitors to book our productions unsight-unseen. The first of the new American releases will be actually on hand and can be seen on the screen at least sixty days in advance of their first public presentation. American will absolutely control the productions from the moment they are turned over to the director until the finished prints are passed out to the exhibitor for showing to his audience. Pathe will attend to the physical handling of the film, but American will both supply the production and control the selling organization. The salesmen who will be found in each Pathe exchange on and after Monday, July 22, will be personal representatives of the American Film Company and when an exhibitor calls upon them it is exactly the same as though he were dealing with the American Film Company direct.

"The forthcoming pictures are being staged by Directors Edward Sloman, Henry King and Lloyd Ingraham and I am confident will be voted superior to any we have ever offered in the past. However, we are letting the pictures speak for themselves and invite exhibitors to book them only after they have themselves witnessed them on the screen at any Pathe exchange."

Second Official War Film at Cohan

THROUGH the Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is chairman, and Charles S. Hart director of the division of films, the U. S. Government will present the second of the series of official Government war pictures, titled "America's Answer," at the George M. Cohan theatre, opening Monday, the week of July 29th.

The feature is in eight reels. It tells the story of the arrival in France of the first half million men of the American army and of what they have accomplished. From convoyed transport to the first line trenches the activities of the American army in France are portrayed on the screen.

The building of 800 miles of railroad in France, the erection of enormous docks, storage warehouses and railroad shops where hundreds of American-built locomotives are assembled, all of the work which is being done for the maintenance of the American Expeditionary Force in France, will be shown. There will also be shown the arrival and landing of "our boys" and interesting scenes of their daily life in the trenches and in rest camps. Panoramic views of military activities at the front are included also.

"America's Answer" was selected and assembled from over 30,000 feet of film made by order of General John J. Pershing under the direction of the General Staff, and photographed by the Signal Corps of the American Expeditionary Force in France.

Rork in South for Hayakawa

Sam Rork, manager of distribution for the new Hayakawa pictures, is now making a tour of the South in the interests of those subjects. Manager Rork had only recently arrived back in Los Angeles after a trip through the West and East that added numerous first run houses to the list that will show the eight Hayakawa releases scheduled for the coming year.

New Lois Weber Completed

By the end of next week Lois Weber will have completed the filming of her present subject titled "Orange Blossoms." Mildred Harris has the featured part in this Weber Production and is supported by Louis J. Cody.

Radical Change in Hart Subjects Promised

After a brief vacation William S. Hart has returned to the Ince studio and started work on his next release, as yet unnamed. The announcement states, however, that "it will be the first of a new series marking a complete change from previous pictures starring the famous Western actor." Wanda Hawley will be the star's leading lady.

The next Hart subject now on the release list is "Riddle Gawn," scheduled for August 15th.

Charles Alden Seltzer wrote the story, which originally appeared in the Argosy.

Katherine MacDonald again is seen as Hart's leading woman, while the heavy part is taken by Lon Chaney. Other roles are enacted by Gretchen Lederer, Gertrude Short, Leon Kent, Milton Rose and E. B. Tilton.

Kleine Receives Delayed Italian Films

George Kleine's new Italian war picture, which has been more than six weeks overdue and caused him no end of anxiety, has at last arrived at New York and passed the Customs. It will be released in a very short time. The picture was made under commission from the Minister of Munitions and Arms of Italy, and the battle scenes were taken by the Cinematograph Corps of the Royal Italian Army. These pictures will be a revelation to the American public, who have always associated the Italian nation with romance, poetry and music. They will explain, in a measure, some of the recent successes of the Italian arms and show how sincerely and earnestly the Italians are working for the great victory for peace and freedom, even down to the women and children.

Three Scenes From Lila Lee's First Paramount Picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," Which Fully Illustrate the Young Star's Versatility of Expression

Lila Lee Gets Good Cast on First Film

Harrison Ford is leading man. Ford has done much fine work in support of Vivian Martin, Constance Talmadge and other stars.

Raymond Hatton has a character role that is said to be one of the best he has ever essayed and to which he will as usual bring the remarkable talent of which he is possessed. Others in the cast are William Brunton, Parks-Jones, Spottiswoode Aitken, Bud Duncan, Eunice Moore, Maym Kelso, Nina Byron, William McLaughlin, Jane Wolff and J. McKinnon.

The picture is a whimsical story of New York tenement life and an imaginary place known as Dream Valley.

Hodkinson Every Week Soon

Review of Corporation's Activities Since Beginning Includes That Promise for Near Future—Six Star Series Now Available

RELEASES of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, now coming forward every two weeks, are likely to reach an every week schedule in the very near future, according to hints in a recently issued review of the organization's activities since its beginning eight months ago.

In all six "Star Series" are now available to clients of the Hodkinson Service, including the Paralata pictures, of which sixteen have been released to the exhibitors, and the Plaza brand bringing three new stars. The stars are J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaum, Henry B. Walthall, Anita King and Kathleen Clifford.

Mr. Hodkinson's personal statement continues: "The two thousand theatres that are using our service are the proof of our sincerity and the vindication of my ideals of fairness, equity and protection for the exhibitor.

"With the new product we have announced and will announce the number of these exhibitors, I know, will be greatly increased. On the other hand, our co-partnership plan, which, of course, rests on the base our distribution business provides, is going ahead with a constant and healthy growth that is most encouraging. The entire Western half of the United States is embraced by it, and we shall be ready shortly to announce the completion of our tie-in in several other States.

"We are firmly rooted and, because of these roots, are here to stay.

"Every exhibitor that supports us, even as far as using product we are distributing, is helping to build the structure that will eventually be a tower of strength to his own individual house, and which will offer him the protection and give him the benefit and freedom that he has wished for for so long.

"Our organization is not geared nor built with the idea of forcing product upon the exhibitor. We, rather, will buy for him the product he knows he can make money with. When this condition is fully realized, the day of the exhibitor being forced to use product that is actually unprofitable to him and which his audiences do not care for, will be past.

"Conditions in the industry as well as generally have made our battle a hard one, but we are winning, and winning in spite of the fact that our goal is so different, so much higher and so much harder to achieve than that of any other organization. Our slogan for the next six months is going to be, 'Watch us grow.'"

De Mille Promises His Share

Director-General Echoes Declarations of Famous Players-Lasky Heads and Pledges Self to "Help Morale" Policy

THE recent Famous Players-Lasky broadside announcing production and distribution plans for the coming year and placing emphasis on the policy of helping "to win the war over here" has brought a statement from Cecil De Mille, director-general of the organization, echoing these declarations and pledging the studio forces to carrying out their shares.

The statement, issued from the producing headquarters at the Lasky Hollywood studio says:

"There seems little for any one to add to what has so thoroughly been covered by Mr. Zukor and Mr. Lasky. Certainly I, for one, can only express genuine satisfaction at the outlook and the sentiments so effectively announced with relation to the organization's purpose in making its output definitely a part of the great machine for the winning of the war.

"'The motion picture is in the war to win the war,' says Mr. Zukor. I, for one, would certainly not wish to be identified with the making of films were it not so. And naturally my aim in producing pictures will be to live up to this purpose.

"I need make no comment upon the splendid program laid out for the coming year's output. I am personally charged with the production of six pictures. Of these I can as yet say no more than that each one, if it is within my power to make it so, will be better than the last. I and my associates are constantly striving to the end that our product may be better and better, artistically, technically—in every way. And, beyond all, it shall, within only the limits imposed by conditions or circumstances, be dedicated to the one cause which is now pre-eminent in the mind and effort of all Americans—the cause for which we are fighting.

"Mr. Zukor says again: 'The motion picture's mightiest task is to keep up the morale of the folks at home.'

"Unquestionably, this is the one thing toward which every phase of the amusement business should be directed. How enormous is the influence of the motion picture has been recounted time and again. It reaches all and every class; it can 'put across' its message where the stage drama or the printed page of book or paper may fail to do so, because it appeals to the visual organism—at once the most potent and primitive and therefore the most convincing. But, with thought behind the visual appeal; with careful attention to the psychological influence wielded by the picture, this may be exchanged enormously. In other words, by making people see, you make them think. How all-important that this thought force be properly directed and led, it is scarcely necessary to indicate.

"This has been concisely summarized in these ringing words by Jesse L. Lasky:

"'It is just as important to project the right sort of pictures "over here" as to fire the right sort of cartridges "over there." To the work of helping to keep up the morale of the Americans at home we dedicate our organization.'

"I may add to this only that every department of the organization in which I am concerned or over which I exert any control is dedicated irrevocably and unequivocally to the end expressed in such unmistakable terms by those who dictate the policies of the organization as a whole and with whom it is my constant and ever-increasing pleasure and satisfaction to be associated."

"Secret Strings," Tell's First Metro

"SECRET STRINGS," written by Kate Jordan and scenarioized by June Mathis, is now under production at Metro's Sixty-first street studio under the direction of John Ince. "Secret Strings" is the initial starring vehicle on the Metro program for Olive Tell. Miss Tell has the role of Alice Monroe, the American girl in Screen Classics, Inc., feature "To Hell with the Kaiser."

William J. Kelly will play opposite Miss Tell, portraying the part played by Lou Tellegen in the stage production of "Secret Strings"—that of a polished, shrewd and brainy crook. While a newcomer to Metro, Mr. Kelly has already co-starred in three photoplays, "Romance," "The Woman's Resurrection," for Fox, and with Jane Grey in "When My Ship Comes In." Mr. Kelly's most recent success was as Major Terry Fielding in "Seven Days' Leave," which ran at the Park theatre, New York, for twenty-six weeks.

Marie Wainwright has been engaged also as a member of Miss Tell's company. Miss Wainwright, when a child, created the role of Josephine in the famous old Gilbert and Sullivan operetta, "Pinafore," in its first American production by juvenile performers. She made her dramatic debut as Juliet in George Rignold's production of "Romeo and Juliet" at the old Booth theatre, New York, now a Twenty-third street department store.

Another member of Miss Tell's company who is well known to Metro fans is Hugh S. Jeffrey, who will play the part of the priest. Among the Metro photoplays in which he has appeared are "The Wager," "The End of the Tour" and "The Price of Malice." Other actors well known on stage and screen whom Director Ince has secured to support Miss Tell are Hugh S. Thompson and John Smylie, both of whom have been given prominent roles.

Mr. Ince is being assisted by Louis R. Wolheim, "Wallie Wolheim," as he is known by his associates. Mr. Wolheim is familiar with every angle in the motion picture business, and while with Metro has attained success in acting, writing and directing. He wrote Metro's patriotic play, "The Greatest Power," in which Ethel Barrymore starred. He was associated with Lionel Barrymore in directing another of Miss Barrymore's starring vehicles, "Life's Whirlpool." More recently he has been assisting Charles J. Brabin

Kathleen Clifford, Whose Latest Starring Venture Is In "Angel Child" (Plaza-Hodkinson Pictures)

Kathleen Clifford Added to Plaza Stars

The second star announced by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the new Plaza Pictures soon to be released is Kathleen Clifford, well known in vaudeville and previous to that on the musical comedy stage.

Miss Clifford will make her Plaza debut in "Angel Child," a comedy which finds her in the role of a mischief loving younger sister who keeps things lively for the rest of the family.

Aside from her stage career, Miss Clifford recently came into prominence because of her noteworthy work as a Red Cross nurse in England. She served there at the outbreak of the war until the strain forced her to seek a rest. Her splendid services earned for her the honorary colonelcy of a Canadian Royal regiment of infantry.

Reports Received on Fox Big Six Series

The first two of the William Fox Big Six series of re-issues for 1918, "A Fool There Was" and "The Bondman," were released last week, and, according to reports, has brought most favorable comment from exhibitors and inquiries regarding the future releases in this group of proved successes.

Several letters have been received, according to the Fox statement, from exhibitors who booked these films when they were first shown in their original form a few years ago. The letters are unanimous, it is said, in their praise of the revised versions.

The applause throughout the run of the picture was constant and hearty, and we congratulate you on your great success in producing pictures in natural colors."

Notice the Look of Awed Intelligence on Bill Parsons' Face, Gained from Reading the Valuable Booklet which He Discovers in "Bill Settles Down," His Latest National-Goldwyn Comedy

Fox Gets Four "Best Sellers"

One by Forman, One by Hurlbut and Two by Zane Grey Added to List for Production—Other Popular Works Picturized

TO the list of literary works which William Fox has to date reproduced for presentation on the screen the Fox Film Corporation announces that the rights to Justus Miles Forman's "Buchanan's Wife," William J. Hurlbut's "The Strange Woman," and two more of Zane Grey's works, "The Last of the Duanes" and "The Lone Star Ranger" have been purchased and will be seen on the screen as Fox productions.

The list includes some of the best known works in literature and the names of the best writers in this country and Europe. Not only have the books of contemporary writers been bought for Fox Films, but William Fox has gone into the classics and has picturized stories that will live forever. "Les Miserables," "A Tale of Two Cities," "Salome," "Cleopatra," "Camille," "The Two Orphans," "The Clemenceau Case"—all are classics.

"Jack and the Beanstalk," "Babes in the Woods," "Alladin and the Wonderful Lamp," "The Conqueror," starring William Farnum; "Camille," with Theda Bara; "When a Man Sees Red," in which William Farnum starred; "The Painted Lady," by Larry Evans, and "Treasure Island," Robert Louis Stevenson's famous book, are some of the popular works screened by Fox.

A similar grade of stories have been picturized for the William Fox Special Features. "Durant of the Bad Lands." "Brave and Bold," and "The Fallen Angel," which has just been finished at Hollywood, Cal., by Jewel Carmen, is an adaptation of the magazine story by Gouverneur Morris, "You Can't Get Away With It." "Fame and Fortune," just finished by Tom Mix for an early release, is the screen version of "Slow Burgess," a novel which ran serially in the magazines. It was written by Charles Alden Seltzer. Two more of Mr. Seltzer's books have just been purchased by William Fox for early production by Mr. Mix. These are "The Coming of the Law" and "The Two-Gun Man."

Wm. Farnum In the Fox, 1918, Version of "A Soldier's Oath"

Jewel Carman has just completed the filming of another magazine story, "Above the Law," which was written by Max Brand. The title of the picture has been changed to "Lawless Love."

"The Strange Woman" is a work which attained nation-wide popularity both as a play and as a book. Gladys Brockwell will star. In its stage version it ran an entire season on Broadway. It was written by Sidney McCall.

William Farnum is at work on "The Rainbow Trail," a novel by Zane Grey, which is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," also screened by Mr. Farnum. He will begin work upon the completion of "The Rainbow Trail" on one of the latest Zane Grey stories purchased by Mr. Fox, "The Last of the Duanes," or "The Lone Star Ranger."

Zukor Films Score on Board Transports

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has received a letter which he prizes highly. When the suggestion was made some time ago that the men on Uncle Sam's fighting ships and transports would appreciate the loan of motion picture films for their entertainment, Mr. Zukor was among the first to respond, with the result that hundreds of thousands of soldiers and sailors have been provided with Paramount and Artcraft features and shorter films, chiefly comedies, while on their way either to or from the shores of France. The letter in question was received from Commander Robert Henderson, U. S. N., in charge of one of the American transports which recently completed a trip to France and return. Commander Henderson wrote that the men appreciated the pictures highly.

In the First Episode, the New Universal Serial, "The Brass Bullet," Gets Away to "A Flying Start," and Is So Entitled. Juanita Hansen Is the Center of the Scene

Burlesque on "Kaiser" Ready

Jewel Productions Reports Additional Prints Necessary to Supply Demand—Comedy Burlesque with Propaganda

THE home office of Jewel Productions announces that because of the big demand for bookings on "The Geezer of Berlin," a comedy-burlesque on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," the various exchanges handling the Jewel production have placed orders for twenty additional prints to the number originally intended.

Harry M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., reports that there is every indication that "The Geezer of Berlin" will exceed in point of numbers the bookings obtained to date on "The Kaiser." "The fact that the first comedy ever handled by our organization combines comedy with patriotic propaganda is undoubtedly the reason for the demand that has already been made," said Mr. Berman.

"The popularity of 'The Kaiser,' of which this is a burlesque, has a good deal to do with the demand for the comedy," he continued. "Practically every exhibitor who ran the former has already requested dates.

"At the convention of Jewel salesmen held at Chicago recently, we gave a special showing of this picture to a number of exhibitors. Without exception, these men declared that the picture was a riot from a comedy standpoint. Everybody knows that the surest way to dispel the atmosphere of awe or mystery which surrounds an object—or an individual—is to poke fun at it.

"That's exactly what we have done in 'The Geezer of Berlin.' We have taken Willie Hohenzollern, his sweet little son, Von Hindenburg, and his soulmate, Von Tirpitz, and have subjected them to a bath of unalloyed ridicule. We've deliberately divested them of the 'superman' atmosphere with which they have taken pains to surround themselves and it's dollars to doughnuts that no person who sees the Jewel comedy will ever be able to repress a snicker when they think of the Kaiser.

"The value of the picture as propaganda can be judged when I make mention of the request we have just received from Lou Goldstein, Secretary of the Women's National Committee, American Defense Society, requesting permission to include the subject among the patriotic features which that organization indorses and which are presented under the auspices of its branches. Although the first Jewel Comedy is only two thousand feet long, we have given the advertising accessories the same minute attention as was the case with 'The Kaiser.' In fact, only in one particular does 'The Geezer of Berlin' fall short of being as complete in advertising helps as is the picture it burlesques and that is in point of twenty-four sheets. There is a series of one sheets, three sheets, slides, cuts, window cards, heralds, booklets and other advertising props."

The release date for "The Geezer of Berlin" has been set for Aug. 1.

Rockliffe Fellows in New Goldwyn Cast

Rockliffe Fellows, well known on the stage in support of Ethel Barrymore, and on the screen with Ethel Clayton, heads the supporting cast for Madge Kennedy in her coming Goldwyn "Friend Husband." George Bunny, Paul Everton, William Davidson, Victory Bateman, and Jean Armour are others in the list.

"Friend Husband," set in the atmosphere of smart society, has received special treatment from Hugo Ballin, Goldwyn's art director.

Casting Improvement Claimed by World

By the discarding of the system of casting a player on the basis of "stills" showing his past work World Pictures claims to have made an advance that assures splendid results in the acting of its productions. World Pictures is now casting players as much as possible only after screen tests and try-outs.

Regarding the step a World statement declares: "In most cases now when an experienced picture actor applies for work at a new studio he is compelled to show "stills" of the roles he has assumed in former productions for other companies. From these "stills" the director casts the actor and, naturally, casts him in the same sort of a role that he played in the other pictures. By this system a motion picture actor is tagged for a certain line of roles during his entire motion picture experience. It may be for roles that he dislikes, roles that he cannot play as well as other parts, but he simply can't get away from his tag—he's got to keep on playing for his entire motion picture career the same sort of a role that he played upon his first entry into pictures. And the worst of it is that in all probability the first director for whom he worked grabbed him out of a crowd and hustled him into a make-up without trying him out or testing his ability in any manner."

Joyce Film Comes Week of July 22

"To the Highest Bidder" is the title of the Blue Ribbon feature announced for release the week of July 22 by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, with Alice Joyce as the featured star. This is the seventh picture in which Miss Joyce has worked under the direction of Tom Terriss and is declared to be one of the best of the series. H. Productions' re-issues are booked in the largest houses in Greater New York. Jules Burnstein, manager of the Magnet exchange, says that a number of the exhibitors who have booked the series of re-issues paid in advance for the entire series and asked to waive the cancellation clause in their contracts. Big success with the series is reported.

Outline Pathe War Review

Official Government War Pictures Scheduled for Release on Pathe Program, July 22nd—Scenes on Firing Line

THE Official War Review, No. 4, issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, of which George Creel is Chairman, will be released on the Pathe program the week of July 22. This official Government war picture shows for the first time in this country the results following a German assault against the Allied lines along the Western front.

These pictures, taken by British cinematographers, show British soldiers, after days of fighting, leaving the first lines. They are covered with mud and exhausted but the smile of victory illumines their faces and they wave their hands cheerfully at the cameraman. They are shown on their way to rest and in the rest billets.

Other views show roads being prepared for an artillery advance; munition trains bringing up shells from the big guns and the field artillery prepares for an attack and the "limber line" that carries munitions to the batteries at the front. Just what kind of people the plain soldiers are in the ranks of the German army, is shown. In this reel are shown thousands of Germans who have been captured by the French and are being marched to the rear. These pictures show the low order of mentality of the Germans in the ranks.

Another part shows a French village that has been made the target of the big guns of the Germans and is devastated. There are pictures in this reel taken by the official Italian army cinematographers and show the Austrian positions at Valbella Peak as they appear from an Italian outpost; Italian guns on Monte Grappa bombard the foe; other batteries throw a curtain of shells to cover the advancing Italian infantry; the Italians reach their objectives, capturing possessions on Valbella Peak. In this section, too, are shown pictures of hundreds of Austrians captured by the Italians and being treated by doctors and being fed by kindly Italians. American soldiers are shown pushing forward to take their part in the heavy fight in a sector in France.

"Paid in Full" Stars Pauline Frederick

FOLLOWING the completion of "The Shadow of the Rope," Pauline Frederick will start work this week at the Fifty-sixth street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on her next production for Paramount release, which will be "Paid in Full," Eugene Walter's drama. As in her two previous productions for Paramount, Miss Frederick will be directed by Emile Chautard, the French producer, who will again have the aid of Al Lena as assistant director, and Jacques Bizeul as cameraman.

With the filming of "The Shadow of the Rope" completed, Director Chautard is now engaged in cutting and assembling the film. Before the work is finished Mr. Chautard and Mr. Bizeul will incorporate some rain effects which promise to be a novel contribution to motion picture art. The final interiors were taken at the studio last week, and included reproductions of the cells and cell corridor of the Tombs prison. One of the largest casts ever employed at an Eastern studio was utilized in this production, including Wyndham Standing, leading man; Roland Byron, Syn. de Conde, W. T. Hayes, W. Gross, Emma Campbell, Mrs. A. Wakefield, I. Nethaway, J. W. Johnson, Harry Kocher and Harold Heaton.

"Out of a Clear Sky," Marguerite Clark's big production for Paramount, has been finished so far as the actual work of filming is concerned, and Director Marshall Neilan is now engaged in cutting and assembling the many thousands of feet of film which were required by the numerous scenes. Miss Clark is now enjoying a brief vacation before starting on her next production. The same is true of Elsie Ferguson, who recently finished "Heart of the Wilds" for Artcraft, and Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the subjects of whose next productions will shortly be announced by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Four on List of Fox's August Releases

In "Doing Their Bit" Jane and Katherine Lee are supported by Franklynn Hann, Gertrude Le Brandt, Beth Ivins, Alex Hall, Kate Lester, William Pollard, Aimee Abbott, Jay Strong, R. R. Neil and Edwin Sturgis.

Gladys Brockwell is supported in "The Bird of Prey" by Herbert Heyes, L. C. Shumway and Willard Louis.

Virginia Pearson is nearing the completion of "The Liar," which is being directed by Mr. Lawrence at the Blackton studio.

In "Bonnie Annie Laurie" Miss Hyland portrays the role of an English Red Cross nurse.

Lois Wilson As She Appears Opposite J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Burglar for a Night.'

Christie Worries Not in Naming Comedies

Director Al Christie has struck a new note in the titles which he has bequeathed upon the newly made Christie comedies. "You Can't Believe Everything" is the latest picture to be named by Al Christie. It featured Jay Belasco and Ethel Lynne. Previous to that we have "Does Your Sweetheart Flirt?" with Dorothy Dane and Bobby Vernon; "Know Your Neighbor" and "Where Is Your Husband?" with Ethel Lynne and Jay Belasco.

The naming of a picture is the least of Al Christie's worries. He is particularly prolific as regards titles. Director Al was speaking of a forthcoming Christie comedy which will have to do with aeroplanes.

"I have picked Ethel Lynne to do the aeroplane story," said Al Christie. "I will make it in those captive aeroplanes down at the end of the Ocean Park pier and I'll call it "'There She Goes.'"

And just that quick, a title was given a picture which Mr. Christie will not begin to produce for at least two weeks.

"Testing of Mildred Vane," Allison's Next

May Allison's second Metro West Coast production carries the corking title of "The Testing of Mildred Vane." George D. Baker, manager of productions of Metro's West Coast studios, has prepared the scenario of "The Return of Mary," in which Miss Allison will be seen following her appearance in "The Testing of Mildred Vane. Charles T. Dazey wrote "The Testing of Mildred Vane." George D. Baker and H. L. Snyders did the scenario.

"Hypocrites" Will Open in Loew Houses

"The Hypocrites," the six-part George Loane Tucker production, starring Elizabeth Risdon, will open its New York engagement in the principal Marcus Loew houses, it is announced by J. A. Hammell, manager of General Film's local Exchange.

"The Sea Waif" New Title for Second Huff

"The Sea Waif" is the new title selected for the World Pictures production which will mark Louise Huff's second appearance under that banner. The story, by Captain Howard Irving Young, now in France, had been originally announced as "The Song of the Heart" but the title has been changed because of the discovery that another film company had produced a picture by that name.

World Pictures discovered when working on this production that Uncle Sam has placed a tight mesh of red tape about the use of ships for anything but industrial purposes and the photographing of coast scenes.

A ruling from "higher up" and permits of all sorts for every member of the company were necessary before Director Frank Reicher could take the scenes for this production requiring the use of a large ship off the Jersey coast.

"Over the Top" Adds Some New Laurels

"Over the Top" last week added a new record to its list of accomplishments when it opened the Liberty theatre, New Orleans, and brought higher admission prices than ever were paid by motion picture patrons in the Crescent City. One newspaper devoted an eight-page supplement to "Over the Top" and the new theatre.

Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph distributing organization, has received reports that "Over the Top" is packing the new house, and indications are that the original run, which was for one week, may have to be lengthened into two. Ernest Bohringer, general manager of the Liberty, in a letter to the Vitagraph Company, paid a splendid tribute to "Over the Top" and Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, its soldier-star, saying that the initial run of the picture confirmed him in the opinion "that 'Over the Top' is by far the greatest patriotic drama of the year and the strongest propaganda picture made with the assistance of the War Department."

Anna H. Sessions, Manager of the New Orleans Branch of the World Film Corporation

Woman Makes Good at World Branch

Anna H. Sessions, branch manager for World Pictures at New Orleans, is now entering upon her third year in that capacity. World, in announcing the celebration of the anniversary, said this position was not created for her in order to get publicity as the "first woman to hold down the job of manager of an exchange." She landed by making good from one position to another and when the position of chief executive in the New Orleans branch was vacant naturally Mrs. Sessions fitted right in and she is staying there because she is making good.

Fox Production, Feature at Baltimore Celebration

The William Fox production, "A Tale of Two Cities," starring William Farnum, was shown at the Peabody Institute, Baltimore, as the principal feature of Baltimore's celebration of Bastile Day, July 14, the national holiday of France. In speaking of the celebration, the Baltimore Star said:

"A special feature of the meeting was an excellent moving picture, 'A Tale of Two Cities,' the most realistic account in fiction of the Fall of the Bastile. This tale by Dickens was presented in film through the courtesy of William Fox, the part of the hero being taken by William Farnum."

Oakdale Dates Chosen by General Film

A definite release schedule for the Oakdale productions featuring Gloria Joy is announced this week by General Film Company. "The Licked Heart," the first subject in the series, will be issued the week of July 20, and the five remaining subjects will be released at fortnightly intervals. The second release of the series will be "No Children Wanted," following which will come "Miss Mischief Maker." The titles and order of the three remaining subjects will be announced shortly by General Film Company.

Simmonds Aids Exhibitor in Exploiting "Mickey"

Joseph Simmonds, president of W. H. Productions Company, which company will distribute "Mickey" on the independent market, for The Western Import Company, in a statement issued relative to the plans which have been laid for the exploitation of this feature, said:

"In the past, many of the state rights distributors of big pictures have been unable to secure not only for themselves but for buyers and exhibitors, results warranted by the production itself, because the advertising, publicity and exploitation campaigns were incomplete and of a poor standard. This will not be said of "Mickey." Every possibility of exploitation has been devised in the simplest form and woven into a continuity that is as perfect as the continuity of the picture itself. Our campaign book covers and illustrates every phase of this production. Our posters and lobby display are artistic, attractive and full of punch. Every bit of advertising matter is a written or illustrated sales talk to create interest for every type of people in "Mickey."

Florence Malone Added to "Sea Waif" Cast

Florence Malone, who made her screen debut in a serial, "The Yellow Menace," has been added to the cast of "The Sea Waif," on which World Pictures is now working with Louise Huff starring.

Miss Malone ranks high on the stage, her last season having been spent as leading woman for Guy Bates Post in "The Masquerader." She hails from Syracuse, N. Y., where her career began at the age of sixteen in a Chauncey Olcott company. She made a quick jump to the front, playing the lead to Tully Marshall the following season in "The Talker" at the Harris, New York. "The Commuters" followed after which she was a coast favorite for three years with the famous Alcazar stock company in San Francisco.

"Pershing's Crusaders" a Hit

First National Reports Glowing Tributes from Public Officials, Exhibitors and the Public on Official War Film

FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT, which distributing organization is releasing through its exchanges the official Government war film, "Pershing's Crusaders," gives a few brief extracts from reports received at the New York offices from prominent public officials, exchange men and exhibitors testifying to the success which this propaganda feature is meeting in its round of the country's leading theatres through the exchanges of the First National.

George Schneider, representative of the First National in Washington, D. C., where "Pershing's Crusaders" opened Monday at the Auditorium in the national capital to an overflow, reports that the opening night of its presentation there witnessed one of the largest crowds that ever turned out to see a motion picture in the capital city. Hundreds had to be turned away from the Auditorium, he wrote.

Ex-Governor Goldsboro of Maryland and Mayor Preston of Baltimore were the guests of honor for the occasion and delivered patriotic addresses during the intermission. "Pershing's Crusaders" gives every evidence of registering a phenomenal two weeks' engagement at the Auditorium, it is reported.

R. C. Seery, of the First National Exchange of Chicago, reports that "Pershing's Crusaders" is continuing to pack them in at several theatres in the Windy City, the business in many cases showing a substantial increase from day to day.

The following letter from Jacob Fabian, proprietor of the Regent theatre, Paterson, N. J., to J. D. Williams, gives interesting facts regarding the successful showing of the picture at the Regent two weeks ago:

"'Pershing's Crusaders' played this house last week, and I can truly say that in all my years of exhibiting I have never seen such enthusiasm nor heard such applause as were produced by this picture. During the entire week the house was in a continual uproar. The first day the attendance was good, and every day thereafter the number of people grew larger, finishing off on Saturday with a long waiting line. I consider this picture a patriotic spectacle which should be shown in every theatre in the land, because of the great interest which all my audiences took in seeing their boys at the business of war."

At the Garden, Des Moines, Ia., people stood in line for hours waiting to get into the theatre, where the big Government war feature was screened during the week of July 8, reads the report. The Des Moines newspapers carried columns in praise of the film.

The Evening Tribune said:

"The Garden theatre was dotted with anxious-eyed mothers and dads eagerly watching every foot of the 8,000 feet for a glimpse of their sons. How proud they must be—how proud everyone must be who is privileged to wear a service flag—to make the big sacrifice."

These successful premiers were varied in a novel manner on July 16, when "Pershing's Crusaders" was shown at the Military Academy at West Point. The engagement, which was personally arranged by Carey Wilson, was pronounced a success from every point of view.

Ebony Films in New Studio Quarters

"Catastrophe Cassie" is the title of the first Ebony comedy to be produced by the Ebony Film Company at its new studio on the east shore of Lake Winnebago, near Fond du Lac. Work was begun on the picture Saturday, July 6, with Director R. G. Phillips in charge. It is the plan to use two companies and produce two pictures a week at this studio. One company will be directed by A. B. Heath, the producer, the other by Mr. Phillips.

The casts of the two companies comprise some twenty-five people with Yvonne, Jr., as leading lady. Other members of the casts are Mattie Wilkes, long known as the "Black Patti," Mattie Edwards, formerly with the Lubin Comedy Company, "Bill" Ledman, Edward Tatum, Sam Robinson and Sam Jackson.

"Catastrophe Cassie" will be followed by "Poor Pay," and that by a series of six pictures based on the E. K. Means stories.

At the present time some twenty-five people are employed, which number it is stated will be increased as time goes on, and other subjects for production are accepted by the company. The Ebony Film comedies are released through General Film.

Vitagraph Starts Moreno-Holloway Serial

The Vitagraph's serial to follow "A Fight for Millions," featuring William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, presents Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway in the principal roles. Reports from the Vitagraph West Coast studios say that work on this serial is progressing rapidly.

The title to the Moreno-Holloway serial has not been announced. It was written by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, and Cyrus Townsend Brady. It tells the story of circus life under the "big tops." It is announced that W. S. Smith, Vitagraph's Western studio manager, has leased a tract of land comprising 100,000 square feet, on which to stage the circus. Paul Hurst is in charge of direction. Mr. Hurst sends word that he is employing hundreds of circus riders and performers and scores of wild animals for this serial.

The players chosen to support Mr. Moreno and Miss Holloway are "Chet" Ryan, brother of Joe Ryan, who has an important part in the Duncan serial, "A Fight for Millions"; Frank Jonnasson and Barney Fuerey. Miss Holloway and Mr. Moreno have the roles of circus performers. Work was started on the serial July 1, and will follow "A Fight for Millions."

Julius Stern Engages Avery for Comedies

Julius Stern, president of the L-Ko Comedy Company, announces that Charles Avery has been engaged to direct some of the forthcoming pictures to be filmed by that organization.

Avery is one of the industry's veteran comedy directors and comes to L-Ko with a long string of screen successes to his credit. Given his original opportunity by D. W. Griffith, Mr. Stern's new producer later became affiliated with the Keystone organization.

No less than thirty-one of the vehicles in which Roscoe Arbuckle has appeared were directed by Avery. He also produced the Hogan series in which Charlie Murray was starred. Probably the most notable comedy for which this director was responsible was "The Submarine Pirate," in which was featured Sid Chaplin, brother of the famous Charlie. Sid Chaplin appeared in six other Avery-directed pictures.

Immediately prior to his L-Ko connection, Avery was affiliated with Mack Sennet. The name of his first picture, which is now in course of production, has not as yet been announced by the head of the L-Ko company.

Cigarette Fund Receipts

Motion Picture News acknowledges with thanks the receipt from the Majestic theatre, Oakland, Neb. (H. A. Larson, proprietor), a check for $5.00, 50c. of which was contributed by O. E. Swanson, 50c. by Miss Ethel Hopkins and 25c. by Roy Ellis, all of Oakland, and the remainder of $3.75 contributed by the patrons of the Majestic theatre. In addition there has been received from the same theatre a box of cigarettes.

General Distributes Series of Camp Films

Intimate and highly entertaining views of soldier life at Camp Dix are contained in the second release in the series of camp pictures which are being distributed for the Connecticut Film Company by General Film Company. New York, Delaware and Massachusetts soldier boys are shown at work and play, among the more interesting features of the reel being the breaking of camp by New York troops, instructions in making a pack, a ball game between the Philadelphia Athletics and the Camp Dix team, a boxing match for the entertainment of the soldiers and Mme. Schumann-Heink singing to her soldier boys.

General Film reports an unusual demand for this series of training camp pictures, due in large measure to the fact that they are authentic and stirring.

Metro Adds Three New Motor Trucks

Three new two-ton motor-trucks have been added to the equipment of Metro's New York studio, and have recently made their initial appearance. They are resplendent in blue and gold, the firm name, "Metro Pictures Corporation," being painted in gold letters on a blue ground, with the Metro parrot done in its own natural colors. The words, "To Hell With the Kaiser," are emitted from the parrot's open beak.

The new trucks will be used for the purpose of conveying scenery, furniture, etc., to the Metro studio at 3 West Sixty-first street from the Metro warehouses. A new warehouse has just been acquired, the old building on Twelfth avenue, of three stories and loft, having been found inadequate for the growing needs of the concern.

"Cleopatra" Claims a Chicago Record

"The most successful run in Chicago this season," is the verdict of J. R. Grainger, Fox Film Corporation special representative, in commenting this week on the showing of "Cleopatra," the William Fox-Theda Bara spectacle-drama in the Windy City.

"Cleopatra," which has been playing at the Colonial theatre, Chicago, since early in June, has established a record for Chicago for the length of its run. The picture's run at the Colonial was a record in itself, but now it is booked for three weeks downtown, at the Rose and Boston theatres.

To show the repeating value of the spectacle, Mr. Grainger cites the fact that the Lubliner & Tranz and the Ascher Brothers' circuits of theatres have booked "Cleopatra" for forty-eight days' return engagements in the city. Managers of several neighborhood houses have complained that they did not book the picture long enough for its first run, and are taking it on for a second and a third showing.

Not only is "Cleopatra" going to show three weeks downtown, in the Rose and Boston theatres, but it also may be given an additional two weeks at those houses.

"Furthermore," said Mr. Grainger, "'Cleopatra' has been looked for a week each at Davenport, Ia.; Rock Island, Ill.; Peoria, Ill.; Gary, Ind., and Fort Wayne, Ind., and for two weeks at Milwaukee."

Catherine Calvert Has Herbert Rawlinson as Leading Man in Her Second Frank A. Keeney Production, "Out of the Night," Soon to Be Released

Strand Comedies Do Their Bit Regularly

Strand comedies, released on the Mutual schedule, have been of material help to various governmental and semi-official war agencies as a means of driving home forcefully to the picture-going public the necessity of keeping steady the "lines behind the lines," Mutual announces.

The current release, "On Her Account," is said to be a cleverly staged appeal for funds for the Red Cross. "My Lady Nicotine," a recent Strand, was such an original bit of propaganda for "smokes for soldiers" that "Our Boys in France Tobacco Fund" recognized it officially. Several of the recent Strands have been subtle appeals for food conservation.

Thomas Holding in Coming Bluebird Subjects

Thomas Holding, well known as a screen player in support of some of the most prominent stars, will next be seen in the Bluebird subject "The Dream Lady," featuring Carmel Myers.

Holding's interesting stage career includes starring tours in "Ben Hur," leads for Billie Burke and Maxine Elliott, and prominent work in England and Australia.

On the screen he has been seen in support of Pauline Frederick, Kathlyn Williams, Clara Kimball Young and Olga Petrova.

Hotels Show Films

Another hotel is showing Goldwyn pictures. The exclusive Homestead Hotel, Hot Springs, Va., has followed the lead of the Arrowhead Hotel, Arrowhead Springs, Cal. At the Virginia hostelry the films are shown four nights a week in the spacious Japanese room, seating six hundred. "The Auction Block" and "The Cinderella Man" have been played.

New Stars in Triangle Flag

Taylor Holmes Starts Work at Los Angeles Soon—Harry Mestayer Working on High Tide—Other Triangle News

(Special Los Angeles Correspondence)

ANOTHER company is to be added to the Triangle producing forces upon the arrival of Taylor Holmes and his director from New York. Mr. Holmes is well known on both the speaking stage and screen, and will be remembered for his successful work for the screen in Essanay's "A Pair of Sixes," "Uneasy Money" and "Ruggles of Red Gap" It is stated Mr. Holmes has been placed under a three-year contract by the Triangle, and on his arrival at the studio will begin filming a series of feature pictures.

Another new player for the Triangle is Harry Mestayer, a stage favorite and screen star. Mr. Mestayer will be seen in "High Tide" in the leading role, and will be under the direction of Gilbert P. Hamilton. The supporting cast will have Yvonne Pavis, better known ae Marie Pavis, and Jack Rollens, who have also been specially engaged for this picture.

Besides "High Tide," three other Triangle stories have been cast. "The Mask," from the pen of E. Magnus Ingleton, a mystery story, will serve as the next vehicle for Jack Livingston and Claire Anderson, who have just completed their work in "The Price of Applause," and who will be under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron.

"Wild Life," a Western romance written by Mary V. Dearing, and prepared for the screen by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., is to be the next subject for William Desmond, who will have the role of a "square gambler." Josie Sedgwick will play opposite Mr. Desmond in the role of the dance hall girl. Prominent in the cast are Dot Hagar, Ed Brady, and J. W. McLaughlin will again direct Desmond.

Margery Wilson, In the Triangle Play, "Marked Cards"

Director William C. Dowlan has been placed in charge of filming "Daughter Angele," based on the war and plotting of spies. Pauline Starke is the featured player and the cast includes Gene Burr, Myrtle Rishell, Walt Whitman, Harold Holland, and Lule Warrenton. Holland and Mrs. Warrenton will have the heavy roles. "Daughter Angele" is from the story by M. H. Stearns and was adapted for the screen by George Elwood Jenks.

The other new subject put in production is titled "Untamed," and will have Roy Stewart as the star, directed by Cliff Smith. This story is from the pen of Kenneth B. Clark. The picture will have more than the usual amount of exteriors and cattle stuff. No leading woman has been decided upon for Mr. Stewart, but Marion Marvin, who was seen opposite the Western star in "Cactus Crandall," will in all probability be selected.

Metro Installs Lockwood in Backer Studio

THAT Harold Lockwood's appearances as a star in the productions of Screen Classics, Inc., distributed by Metro, under which banner future Lockwood vehicles, beginning with the recently completed "A King in Khaki," are to be presented, will be made under the most auspicious circumstances, is indicated in an announcement of the arrangements which have been made to cover Mr. Lockwood's activities in the East, where he arrived with members of his company last week for an indefinite stay.

The Lockwood Company is occupying the Bacon-Backer Studios at 230 West Thirty-eighth street, New York, considered one of the most up-to-date studios in existence. It is a new plant with every studio facility known to modern picture making.

"Pals First" has been selected as the next subject and the production of it has already been started. It is a romantic drama based on Francis Perry Elliott's novel of the name and is recalled as having been presented on the speaking stage with William Courtenay and Thomas A. Wise playing the leading roles in an adaptation of the printed work prepared by Leon Wilson Dodd. The story concerns the adventures of two wanderers, Danny Rowland and Dominie, graduates of Yale, Harvard, Sing Sing and San Quentin, who arrive at a little Tennessee town tired and penniless and find shelter in an old southern mansion when an old darky servant believes Danny to be his long absent master. Danny welcomes the opportunity thus presented to him and introduces Dominie as Dr. Blair, a clergyman. The situation leads them into a whirl of romantic adventures in which a girl also figures prominently. Mr. Lockwood is portraying the adventuresome and likeable Danny Rowland and has in his supporting cast a number of prominent players whose names will be announced later.

The production of the picture is in charge of Edwin Carewe, who has staged many Metro releases.

Sizzling Titles for Fox Films

"Kultur," "The Prussian Cur," "Under the Yankee Flag," a Few of the Titles Named—Forces Working at Top Speed

TITLES that sizzle and ring with force would seem to be the Fox policy for the coming months judging from a few of the names for coming productions just announced.

Director Edward Le Saint is busily at work cutting and editing "Kultur," a coming Gladys Brockwell production, which it is declared will offer some sensational features. Virginia Pearson is at work under the direction of R. A. Walsh on "The Prussian Cur"; George Walsh has completed "Under the Yankee Flag," and Tom Mix in "Mr. Logan, U. S. A." completes the list of productions that ring the patriotic bell.

Recent announcements from the Fox Film Corporation would indicate that the producing forces are working at top speed.

In the West Director Robert Thornby has just taken Jewel Carmen, the Fox star and a company of players to Huntington Lake, where scenes will be filmed in the new photodrama "Lawless Love," which is adapted from a magazine story by Max Brand of the same name. The company expects to stay there about ten days.

William Farnum and his director, Frank Lloyd, and a company of thirty are now down in the Grand Canyon in Arizona filming scenes in the Zane Grey story, "The Rainbow Trail," which is sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage," another Zane Grey story just completed by Mr. Farnum. The company expects to be gone two weeks.

Director J. Gordon Edwards has started on "The She-Devil," his twenty-eighth production for William Fox. Director Lynn Reynolds is now in the second week of the filming of the Tom Mix vehicle "Mr. Logan, U. S. A." It is said that in this production Mix will be seen without his Western costume. In the cast supporting Mix are Kathleen Connors, Dick La Reno, Charles Le Moyne, Jack W. Dill, Val Paul and Maude Emory.

In the East a big production directed by Richard Stanton has just been finished. Peggy Hyland is working on "Bonnie Annie Laurie." "The Liar" is the title of a drama which Virginia Pearson has in work at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn.

First Fred Stone Film Completed

PRODUCTION work has been completed on Fred Stone's first screen production and already preparations are under way for "Johnny Get Your Gun," second of the Artcraft specials with the stage comedian in the leading role.

"Johnny Get Your Gun" is from the stage production in which Louis Bennison was starred. Like the initial Fred Stone screen effort, it will be directed by Donald Crisp.

The final week in the production of "Under the Top" in all probability was one of the busiest ever experienced by Fred Stone. In fact, the seven days may fairly be called "stunt week" for the comedian, for he probably did more stunts in that period than he would ordinarily do in several months at any other time. He jumped, ran, rode, climbed and tumbled from early morning till late at night.

For one thing, the other day Stone vaulted over seven horses, a considerable stunt for one who has not been doing it day in and day out for some time. Later he rode bareback, doing all the things a lady in fluffy skirts and fleshings usually does on a circus steed. Indeed, the picture circus has all the ear-marks of a real one, even to the sideshow and the freaks, the spielers, the ringmaster, clowns, etc.

May Allison Has New Leading Man

Darrel Foss is a new leading man who will be seen opposite May Allison in "The Return of Mary," that star's first picture to be made at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

"The Return of Mary" is from the play by Hale Hamilton. It is being staged by Wilfred Lucas, with a supporting cast that includes Clarence Burton, Frank Brownlee, Joseph Belmont, and Claire McDowell.

Worsley Directs New Glaum Production

Louise Glaum, Paralta star, began the filming of another production for that company this week. In this picture, as with her three previous Paralta plays, the star will be directed by Wallace Worsley. The working title is "A Law Unto Herself," which will, however, probably be changed before release. Miss Glaum paused only long enough after finishing her latest Paralta picture, "Wedlock," to permit the dressmakers to prepare her costumes for the new feature.

The original story was supplied by Francis Paget, and the screen version was written by Jack Cunningham. It is laid in the Champagne district of France, the time being in three periods—1894, 1904 and the present. The modern war is used as a background for the action, although it is in no sense a war picture.

The supporting cast includes Joseph J. Dowling, Edward Coxen, Sam de Grasse, Elvira Weil, Roy Laidlaw and Jess Herring. Pending negotiations for the services of certain other actors, whose parts will not be taken up until later, when the modern episodes of the picture are filmed, the selection of the cast has not been completed. L. Guy Wilky will photograph the production, which is being produced at the Brunton studios in Los Angeles.

Goldwyn Buys "A Perfect Lady" for Screen

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has purchased from Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf the motion picture rights to their stage play, "A Perfect Lady," and Madge Kennedy will have this as one of her first big Goldwyn pictures of the fall season.

Goldwyn plans to begin production of "A Perfect Lady" within the next few weeks, and is delighted over having been successful in obtaining the work of these two successful playwrights.

As a play, "A Perfect Lady" was first presented by the Henry B. Harris estate, and in Miss Stahl's supporting cast were such well-known players as Ned Sparks, Harry C. Browne and Beatrice Noyes. Miss Kennedy's role will differ greatly from any she has had since her entry into motion pictures, a year ago, Goldwyn says.

Good Press Story Back of "Inside the Lines"

Exhibitors who are planning to play the World Pictures production of "Inside the Lines" will find unusually interesting information for their patrons in the career of Earl Derr Biggers, author of that Broadway success. Concerning the author and the photoplay, which will be released August 26 with Marguerite Clayton and Lewis Stone in the principal roles, World Pictures says:

"As a youth at Warren, Ohio, Mr. Biggers staged a little play of his own composition which was so ridiculed by his playmates that he then and there determined to be a playwright, declaring that if he couldn't make good as an amateur he'd show them that he could make good as a professional. Bearing this determination in mind, Mr. Biggers, after completing his high school course, entered Harvard University and became a member of "Baker's Dozen," a group of students under Professor Baker's direction, who wrote plays. After graduating from Harvard, to gain further knowledge of the theatre he became dramatic critic on the Boston Traveller. While connected with this paper he wrote his first play, "Are You Human?" produced by John Craig. On the strength of this he and George M. Cohan dramatized the former's novel, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." In 1915 "Inside the Lines" was produced as a play and scored an emphatic hit. As a stock production it is acknowledged the best money getter of all recent Broadway successes released for stock presentation."

Bennett Makes First Trip to Coast

H. Whitman Bennett, assistant to Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of productions, left New York last week for the West Coast studios of the company. Although Mr. Bennett has been connected with the Lasky film organization since before its affiliation with the Famous Players Company, he has never visited the Western studios of that concern. His initial trip, therefore, will give him a more intimate knowledge of the Western organization, which has grown to a tremendous size during the past few years.

Mr. Bennett will remain at the California studios for three or four weeks and will consult with Cecil B. De Mille and other Western executives on the future production plans, which are being revised considerably, in accordance with the new policy recently announced by Mr. Lasky, affecting the work of all directors and players in the organization.

Carmel Myers Visits Cantonments

Carmel Meyers, whose work in such Blue bird productions as "My Unmarried Wife," "The Wife He Bought," "The Marriage Lie," has brought her to the front so rapidly during the last year, has obtained a short leave of absence from Universal City and will devote the time in making a tour of the various cantonments of the South.

Start Work Soon on New Tom Ince Plant

IT is announced that construction work will start in the very near future on the new $250,000 producing plant which will house the Thomas H. Ince forces as first announced in MOTION PICTURE NEWS several weeks ago.

Construction will be under the direction of the Milwaukee Building Company (Meyer and Holler) of Los Angeles. The large size of the plant, covering eleven acres, will enable Ince to practically double the space he is now giving the Paramount productions.

From an architectural point of view, the new Ince studio will be very unique, it is said. There is a complete departure in the design from even a semblance of a commercial institution. There will be the usual stages and work buildings, but these will be hidden from the view of the passerby along Washington boulevard. All the travelers going through Culver City will see will be a great colonial mansion set back 150 feet or more from the boulevard in a tree-studded lawn. This stately building, with its spreading wings, will have a frontage of more than 250 feet, leaving only a twenty-foot strip lawn on either side. The structure will stand on a slight rise. The work buildings will all be behind and out of sight.

The "mansion" will house the offices and administration department of the Ince Company. There will be fifteen or more other buildings, including two huge glass stages, dressing-rooms, scene docks, shops, property-rooms and wardrobe buildings. Each of these structures is being so planned that it may be doubled in size when occasion demands, the ground layout having been studied out with this end in view.

Fox Tries New Policy on Mutt and Jeff

A DEPARTURE in the policy of selling the Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons has just been put into effect by the Fox Film Corporation. Hereafter all Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons that are eighteen weeks old will be sold on an open-booking, non-contract basis.

The first Mutt and Jeff cartoon to come under this ruling, it is announced, is "The Decoy," which was released March 24. This film will be eighteen weeks old July 28 and will be open to non-contract bookings. After August 4 "Back to the Balkans" will be in the same category, and, of course, every week thereafter will see a Mutt and Jeff cartoon put on a non-contract basis.

This policy has been adopted as a result of a reported demand from exhibitors all over the country, who do not seem to get enough of the Mutt and Jeff cartoons. At Proctor's Vaudeville and Motion Picture theatre, Mount Vernon, N. Y., last week the "act" that obtained the biggest volume of applause of the entire bill, it is said, was Mutt and Jeff in "Hospital Orderlies." It was even the topic of conversation in nearby restaurants after the show.

There also has been a change in the nature of the cartoons. They are becoming more topic in their subjects; in fact, the most recent titles are as up-to-the-minute as an afternoon newspaper. As examples of this timeliness these subjects are pointed out: "The Seventy-five Mile Gun," "Meeting Theda Bara," "Hunting the U-Boats," "Joining the Tanks," "Helping McAdoo" and "My Four Years in Matrimony."

General's War Subjects in Big Demand

All the prints available on the "The Italian Battlefront" war pictures and "The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-22," two feature releases on the General Film program, have been taxed to capacity, according to a report on the booking of these two subjects, coming from the New York office of General. The report reads that all of the war subjects, including the short ones, "Venice in War," in one reel; "Italy on the Firing Line, in two reels; "Our Boys at Camp Devans"; "Our Boys at Camp Dix" and "Why the Bolsheviki?" are having unexpected success.

Mabel Normand Goes "Back to the Woods" in Her Latest Goldwyn and Madge Kennedy Takes Up Marksmanship in "Friend Husband"

Points About Goldwyn Policy

Statement Points Out That Farrar and Beach Productions on Coming List Make Radical Step —More Titles Given

ON the heels of Goldwyn's announcement that the productions of the coming year would be booked on the "Star Series" plan, and definite details of the release schedule, comes a statement pointing out the unusual features of the coming season's policy.

The announcement of six Geraldine Farrar pictures and six Rex Beach pictures is pointed out as a radical production and distribution step. The maximum number of pictures made during a year by Miss Farrar hitherto in her screen career has been two, while Rex Beach has never given exhibitors more than one feature in a year.

The announcement of the titles of six Rex Beach productions in advance is a step never before taken. The sextette, named by Goldwyn are, "Laughing Bill Hyde," "The Crimson Gardenia," "The Net," "Going Some," "The Iron Trail" and "The Silver Horde."

The "Star Series" policy means a uniform rental for each of the six productions where heretofore each Beach picture was sold separately and almost under the system of competitive bidding between exhibitors.

Madge Kennedy opens the fall season with "The Kingdom of Youth," by Charles A. Logue, the author of "The Service Star." Following "The Kingdom of Youth" in the new season, Miss Kennedy will be starred in "A Perfect Lady," from the Rose Stahl play by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf.

The Goldwyn statement concludes "Goldwyn frankly announces Tom Moore as one of the 'star surprises' of the coming year. Moore has been made Goldwyn's first man star in direct response to exhibitor demand from every section of the United States. He has not been cultivated or especially promoted by Goldwyn, but has enjoyed half a dozen excellent roles as leading man for Madge Kennedy, Mabel Normand and Mae Marsh in their first year Goldwyn productions. The first Tom Moore production under the Star Series plan will be 'Just for To-night,' a story by Charles A. Logue and directed by Charles Giblyn. This picture is completed and soon will be shown in the various Goldwyn offices.

"Mabel Norman is well under way in 'Peck's Bad Girl,' by Tex Charwate. Miss Normand is being directed by Charles Giblyn.

"Mae Marsh is more than half way through with 'Hidden Fire,' under the direction of Hobart Henley. In it she has been given a role of great emotional and romantic interest. This will be her first release under 'Star Series' for the fall season.

"Pauline Frederick will begin work soon on her first Goldwyn production."

Marne Veteran Directs for Vitagraph

Coincident with the release of Vitagraph's "Love Watches," with Corinne Griffith in the principal role, and its subcaption, "Directed by Henri-Houry," comes the news that a veteran of the Marne is now directing in the Flatbush studio.

After fighting under Joffre in all the early campaigns of the war and being wounded at the Marne, Henri-Houry joined Vitagraph six months ago as technical and artistic adviser, in addition to which he played roles in several productions, notably in "Find the Woman," with Alice Joyce.

The new Vitagraph producer was well known on the French stage before entering pictures, where he won fame throughout Europe as "The Man of Iron" in a series of detective plays. In these he introduced many Parisian stage favorites to the screen, then only beginning to be recognized.

Praise for Universal's Cooperation

Two of the recent words of appreciation for Universal's cooperation with the Government officials have come from H. E. Blakesly, manager of the U. S. Public Service Reserve, Emergency Farm Labor Section, and Chaplain Edmund P. Estabrook, of Fort Flagler, Puget Sound, Wash.

Chaplain Estabrook's letter thanks the Seattle exchange for its aid in making up the recent shows for the men at the Fort. In this connection, he says, "We have come to regard the 'movies' as a necessity to our efficiency. They play an important part in the contentment and discipline of the command."

The other letter was regarding the use of trailers of coming releases urging cooperation with farmers in an effort to produce and harvest a maximum food crop.

Theda Bara Works on Thirty-second Film

Counting "The She-Devil," upon which she has begun work at the William Fox Studios at Hollywood, Cal., Theda Bara has done thirty-two pictures for William Fox. This is a record which is looked upon with pride by both Miss Bara and Fox Film Corporation.

"Cleopatra," "Salome," "A Fool There Was," "The Clemenceau Case" and "The Two Orphans" are considered by William Fox as having set a standard in the film art which it will take a long, long time to surpass.

Miss Baras record under the management of William Fox, it is stated in an announcement by the Fox Film Corporation, is one of the consistent excellence, tireless industry, and constant study for betterment. Under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, who has directed practically all of Miss Bara's productions, this star has grown in brilliancy. "The Message of the Lilies" has just been completed on the Pacific Coast, and after a vacation of two weeks Miss Bara began work on "The She-Devil."

Pathe Co-operation Helps "The First Law"

Among publicity helps for exhibitors on "The First Law," the Pathe play in which Irene Castle stars, and is supported by Antonio Moreno, will be the publication of the play in short-story form in Picture Play Magazine which has a circulation throughout the United States of 200,000 copies. The story appears in the September number of Picture Play, which is on sale August 1 on all stands.

Name Casts in Coming Metros

King Baggot to Support Emily Stevens—"Shadow and Substance" the Title of Edith Storey's Next Vehicle

MANY names well known to screen followers are included in the two casts announced this week by Metro to support Edith Storey and Emily Stevens in their next screen appearances. "Shadow and Substance" is named as the title for the former's vehicle, while Miss Stevens will be seen in "Kildare of the Storm."

King Baggot probably gains the lion's share of the interest. This well known screen star will be seen in the role opposite Miss Stevens. Others in the cast of this production are Crauford Kent, Mrs. Maggie Breyer, Helen Lindroth and Edward Davis.

Harry L. Franklin has been named by Production Manager Karger to produce this subject.

The Edith Storey production is being staged by Herbert Blache. The cast of players seen includes Baby Ivy Ward, Frank Mills, Lilie Leslie, Joseph Kilgour, George Stevens, Augusta Perry, Harry Linson, Ben Walker, John Cohill and Tomanoto, the Japanese actor.

Anna Nilsson Conceals Her Blonde Locks With a Black Wig—All for the Metro Picture, "In Judgment Of," In Which She Is Co-Starred With Franklyn Farnum

Announcement is also expected from Metro soon regarding the new series of screen comedies in which Olive Tell will be featured. Miss Tell, who is now scoring in "To Hell with the Kaiser," has been placed under contract by Metro for this series.

Pathe Gives "Hands Up" Big Ad Campaign

CONTRACTS just signed by Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., assures to "Hands Up" the new Pathe serial in which Ruth Roland stars, and which will be released on August 18, the most pretentious direct-to-the-public advertising campaign which has ever been conducted on a Pathe serial, it was announced this week.

Practically every city and town of any size in the entire United States will be extensively posted with what competent critics declare to be a model 24-sheet, printed in six colors from a masterful sketch by Burton Rice, the well-known artist. The poster shows the Phantom Rider, the imagination captivating mystery character of the serial, with Ruth Roland in his arms, escaping from pursuing Indians, his big black horse coming at top speed almost directly at the observer. To illustrate the care used to make this poster the best of its kind it is only necessary to state that 100 printings were necessary to bring out the proper shadings of color.

As the posters will all be on the boards by the 5th of August this will assure a sufficient amount of time prior to the release to arouse public interest in the serial. Present indications are that many exhibitors will take advantage of the campaign to tie it up to their own theatres through advertising in local newspapers and bill posting of their own, thus following the example of successful merchandisers in other lines who make use of national advertising on goods they stock to direct buyers to their establishments.

The list of advertising material embraces one, three and six-sheet posters on each episode; the usual photographic lobby display; a general herald in two colors, following the same general layout as the herald which was so successful on "The House of Hate"; one-column newspaper cuts of Ruth Roland and George Chesebro, and also mats; a two-column cut of Miss Roland with mat; scene cuts and mats; Black and white photos of Ruth Roland, George Chesebro, Easter Walters and the Phanton Rider; a 22 x 28 photo of Miss Roland and four slides.

Director Howe Almost in the Films

Montgomery, Rock and Howe are not the names of three stars, but two stars and one director. But Director Jay A. Howe, who works with Montgomery and Rock on Vitagraph Big V comedies, would almost be suspected of being an acting member of the trio. Perhaps that comes from the fact that he formerly was before the camera in L-Ko comedies.

This comedy troupe runs to such titles as "Sneakers and Snoozers," "Skippers and Schemers," "Wounded Hearts and Wedding Rings," "Shines and Monkeyshines," "Flirts and Fakirs," and so on. They make one a week; they provide their own stories; they suggest their own wardrobe, and altogether it is one of the best working teams which Studio Manager W. S. Smith, of the Vitagraph Hollywood studio, claims ever to have had under his management.

Director Howe has been connected with the picture industry for seven years, first with the Imp Company, then Nestor, from there to the L-Ko and thence to the direction of Montgomery and Rock two years ago with the Vitagraph Company.

Dorothy Gish, New But Well-Known Paramount Star

De Mille Begins New Artcraft Picture

Cecil B. De Mille has started on his next Artcraft special picture, which has no name at present but looms up as one of the most ambitious pictures yet undertaken by the famous director. It is an original by Jeanie MacPherson, and deals with Belgium and the great war but not from the battle angle. Further facts concerning the film will be shortly announced. Meantime a great cast has been brought together for the production with Bryant Washburn as the leading masculine actor, and Florence Vidor playing the feminine lead. This will be the first production in which Washburn works on the Famous Players-Lasky roster. He is delighted with the opportunity of beginning his career with this organization under the direction of Mr. De Mille.

Gorgeous sets are going up for the production, and the costuming will be on a splendid scale, it is said.

Cast Completed for Talmadge Feature

Director Sydney A. Franklin has completed the cast of principals for Norma Talmadge's forthcoming Select picture, to follow "The Safety Curtain." Miss Talmadge has been at work on this production during the past two weeks, the first week having been spent in studio work and the second partly upon location.

Supporting Miss Talmadge in her role of Lucille Westbrook, a small-town girl of gentle birth and breeding, will be Eugene O'Brien; as leading man, Ramsey Wallace, in the heavy role; E. A. Warren, in a character part, and Jobyna Howland, in the role of a smart society vamp.

Henaberry Gets Credit

In the recent extensive advertising of the coming year's productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to be released under the Paramount and Artcraft trademarks, which was placed in all the trade papers, the authorship of "The Man from Painted Post," an Artcraft picture in which Douglas Fairbanks appeared, was credited to John Emerson and Anita Loos. This was an error. The story was written and produced by Joseph Henaberry, who has furnished Fairbanks with several of his most successful stories.

About New Pictures

In his next Triangle picture, written by Kenneth B. Clark, Roy Stewart will use his sorrel thoroughbred for the first time. He has issued a sweeping challenge to race any horse in pictures for a quarter, half or mile.

A beautiful Japanese garden was completed this week at the Hayakawa studios and will be utilized in future Hayakawa productions by Directors Worthington and Young.

Bobby Vernon and Dorothy Dane are featured players in the Christie comedy, "Does Your Sweetheart Flirt?" As far as Bobby is concerned, he does not care one way or another.

George Kleine has decided upon the title of his new Alaskan picture that was taken up in that marvelous country. He will call it "The Girl, Alaska." The picture was made by Albert I. Smith and directed by his wife.

William S. Hart has completed "Riddle Gawne," his very latest contribution to the Artcraft schedule, and which finishes his first year's contract. He starts upon the new series in about two weeks and the first picture thereof will, it is asserted, present "Bill" in a new type of film, something entirely apropos to the present moment.

Darrell Foss has been engaged to play opposite May Allison, Metro star, in "The Finding of Mary," the first picture she will do at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood. Mr. Foss began work at the studios before the arrival of Miss Allison from the East.

"In Judgment Of," the Metro production co-featuring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum, supported by Herbert Standing and an all-star cast, has been completed at Metro's west coast studios in Hollywood.

Pathe will issue a special sales reel on the new serial, "Hands Up," next week, it is announced. This sales reel will be shown to exhibitors throughout the United States the latter part of July.

An aeroplane chase after an eloping couple is one of the big scenes in a Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedy which has just been completed by Henry Lehrman at the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal.

A new series of Wolfville Tales is being prepared for General Film Company release, in the west coast studios of the Broadway Star Features Company. The first subject will be "Wooing ot Riley." It is being filmed under the direction of Robert N. Bradbury.

Enid Bennett is progressing rapidly upon her Hawaiian story, as yet nameless, and which promises to be decidedly pleasing because of the tropical atmosphere and the beauty of the settings.

Depicting the temptation, the fall and the disillusionment of a girl who preferred luxury to honor, "The Fallen Angel," with Jewel Carmen as the star, is announced as the latest of the William Fox Special Feature releases.

"Young America," the George K. Spoor feature, which now is in the course of production at the Essanay studios, is said to be a particularly timely play, inasmuch as it strikes the patriotic keynote of the American youth.

The Marion Davies company, which is making "The Burden of Proof," under the direction of Julius Steger, has returned from Washington, where the first week's filming was done, and established itself in the Norma Talmadge studio on East Forty-eighth street, New York.

Director Charles J. Brabin has taken Miss Wehlen and her entire company now supporting her in "The Bonded Wife," her current starring vehicle selected for her by Metro's manager of productions, Maxwell Karger, down to Atlantic City to film several scenes depicting life at one of our American seacoast vacation resorts.

J. Warren Kerrigan, under the direction of Ernest Warde, is making his newest Paralta Plays' offering, "A Burglar for a Night." Kerrigan has the support of such players as Charles French, William Elmer, Robert Brower, Herbert Prior, Lois Wilson, Lydia Yeamans Titus, and Norma Roamero.

Gladys Brockwell Is Starred In the New William Fox Production, "The Scarlet Road"

Author Approves Fox Selection of Star

On learning that William Fox intended to star Gladys Brockwell in "The Strange Woman," stage play, the picture rights to which Mr. Fox has bought, William J. Hurlbut, the author, wrote a letter to the Fox Film Corporation stating that he could think of no screen actress whom he would rather have interpret his play than Miss Brockwell. Work on "The Strange Woman," for which, it is understood, Mr. Fox paid many thousands of dollars, will begin soon at the William Fox studios at Hollywood, Cal.

When "The Strange Woman" was produced on the stage three years ago it ran a full season on Broadway. Then it went on the road.

In his letter Mr. Hurlbut said he had seen Miss Brockwell in nearly all of her pictures and had beeen struck with her ability to portray her roles in such a manner that every side of the character was made to stand out vividly.

"Miss Brockwell, in my opinion," wrote Mr. Hurlbut, "has shown more definite progress in motion picture work in the last year than any screen actress that I can recall, and is peculiarly fitted to duplicate on the screen the splendid production given 'The Strange Woman' on the stage."

General's Cinema Doll Comedies Popular

"The Handy Man," second of the Emerald Film Company Cinema Doll productions, is released this week by General Film Company. The novelty of doll comedians in this new series is one of the most popular comedy releases on its program, says General Film. "The Burglar Man," a parody on the Chaplin style of comedy, released last month, is booking heavily, General reports.

Torres Goes West

Ramirez Torres, chief of the scenario department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., left New York July 8 for Los Angeles, where he will be associated with the studios on the West Coast that are producing new pictures for Pathe. It is expected that Mr. Ramirez will return to New York in September.

Universal New Serial Comes August 5

"A Flying Start," the first episode of Universal's newest serial, "The Brass Bullet," heads the list of Universal subjects scheduled for release during the week of August 5. The cast assembled for "The Brass Bullet" is said to be easily the strongest that has yet appeared in a Universal serial. Players appearing in the stellar roles include Juanita Hansen, Jack Mulhall, Joseph Gerard, Ashton Dearholt, Hal Cooley and others of equal reputation.

Among the comedies which are programmed for the week are "It Can't Be Done," a Nestor featuring Lee Kolmar; "Fools and Fires," and L-Ko which gives Billy Armstrong and Rube Miller an opportunity to display their talents, and "Don't Shoot!" a Lyons-Moran star comedy.

Another of the two-reel Western productions scheduled for release during the week of August 5, is "The Trail of No Return." This short subject features Neal Hart and Eileen Sedgewick.

Coming Program Offerings

Strand Comedy for Week of July 22d Has That Purpose—Margarita Fisher Heads List

An appeal for the American Red Cross that is at the same time a screen comedy is included in the Mutual Film Company offerings for the week of July 22.

The medium for the appeal is "On Her Account," a Strand comedy which deals with the troubles of an unbusinesslike bride whose bank balance is constantly overdrawn. Her husband lets her go to jail to teach her a lesson but he gets a $100 fine from the court for himself when it is found that the offending check was drawn in favor of the American Red Cross. July 23 is the release date for "On Her Account."

Margarita Fisher heads the Mutual list this week, appearing in "Irrepressible Susan," described as "a typical five-reel Fisher comedy drama." Miss Fisher is seen as an unsophisticated country girl, the victim of complications with a rich young bachelor who believes that "clothes" make the woman and uses her to prove his theory.

Two releases of the Outing-Chester series are among the coming Mutual productions. "Zuni Kicking Races" is announced for July 21, and "A White Wilderness" for July 28. The former tells of a custom of the Zuni Indians of New Mexico, while the latter carries the cameraman to the ice fields of British Columbia.

Screen Telegram, Mutual's twice a week news reel, is to be released hereafter by exchanges upon receipt. It carries the latest events up to the hour of closing in New York, where the editorial offices of the news weekly are now located.

Comedy Prevails in Paramount New List

Five feature productions, in nearly all of which comedy is the dominant element, are embodied in the Paramount release schedule for the month of August. Three of them are Thomas H. Ince productions starring Charles Ray, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett, while Pauline Frederick and Billie Burke will be seen as the respective stars of the other two. In the order of release they are: August 5, Charles Ray in "A Nine O'Clock Town"; August 12, Pauline Frederick in "Fedora"; August 19, Billie Burke in "In Pursuit of Polly"; August 26, Dorothy Dalton in "Green Eyes" and Enid Bennett in "Coals of Fire."

"A Nine O'Clock Town," in which Thomas H. Ince presents Charles Ray, was both written and directed by Victor L. Schertzinger. Jane Novak again appears as Mr. Ray's leading woman, and the supporting cast includes Otto Hoffman, Gertrude Claire, Catherine Young and Dorcas Mathews.

Billie Burke's starring vehicle, "In Pursuit of Polly," is said to have one of the cleverest plots seen on the screen in many a day. Izola Forrester and Mann Page wrote the story from which Eve Unsell prepared the scenario. Thomas Meighan appears as Miss Burke's leading man, and the cast includes Alfred Hickman, Frank Losee, A. J. Herbert, William David and Ben Deely. Chester Withey directed.

Vitagraph's New Serial Booked Heavy

VITAGRAPH'S new serial, "A Fight for Millions," featuring William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, the first episode of which was released last week, has been booked by more than one-fifth of all the theatres in the United States, according to a statement issued this week from the executive offices by Walter W. Irwin, general manager.

Included in this statement by Mr. Irwin is the announcement that the Lincoln theatre, Milwaukee, has taken advantage of the year-round booking policy inaugurated by Vitagraph recently, and contracted for two years' service on serials, which means that the Lincoln theatre is signed for eight Vitagraph serials.

At the Park theatre, Boston, the beginning of the serial, "A Fight for Millions," is said to have brought record-breaking business to the theatre, while M. Glynne, of Glynne & Ward, owners of the Alhambra theatre in Brooklyn, wrote that "it is the best serial Vitagraph has made." Mr. Glynne is one of the leading exhibitors in the East.

Exhibitors who have seen the first eight episodes of "A Fight for Millions" declare that it has everything that is required for a serial. William Duncan, who directed and is featured in the serial, is regarded as a leading male serial star and Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan are popular supporting stars. The story is by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady.

Vitagraph is one of the foremost serial producers and the inauguration of a definite policy such as their four-serials-a-year plan has proved a big success, it is reported.

Earle Williams and Grace Darmond, During the Making of Scenes for "The Man from Brodney's," Vitagraph Feature

The Vitagraph plan provides for four serials, beginning with "A Fight for Millions." This was released on July 15th and will run for fifteen weeks. It will be followed by a serial featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, to be released on October 21st, and this in turn will be followed by another serial featuring William Duncan, with Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, to start on January 27, 1919. The fourth will feature Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway and will start on May 5, 1919.

Harry Carey Heads "U" List for August 12th

TWO comedies and a comic cartoon give the much needed war time laughs to the Universal program for the week of August 12 that is headed by a Harry Carey special feature and a Bluebird as yet unnamed. The second episode of "The Brass Bullet" is also found on the "U" list for this week.

"A Woman's Fool" is the title of the Carey offering, which is taken from the Owen Wister story "Lin McLean." The story finds Carey in the role of a cowboy whose misguided sympathy for a lunch room "bisquit shooter" leads him into a peck of trouble before real love solves his problems.

The Pat Sullivan cartoon for the week is a full reel in length telling "How Charlie Captured the Kaiser."

"Give Her Some Gas," the Lyons and Moran Star Comedy revolves about the misfortunes of a young couple who invest in a second-hand "flivver." The other comedy of the week is the Nestor, "Don't Flirt," with Ernie Shields, Ed. Sedgewick, Ed. Baker and Jane Bernoudy in the cast.

The title for the Bluebird feature of the week has not been announced yet. "The Muffled Man" is the title given the second episode of "The Brass Bullet" serial. The Universal Animated Weekly, Screen Magazine and Current Events the release schedule.

Simone in New Haven

General Film Company announces this week the appointment of Charles Simone, of Bayonne, as manager of its New Haven branch to succeed Irving C. Jaycocks, who enlisted in the navy recently. Mr. Simone was formerly production or studio manager for the Nestor, Centaur, Venus Features, Universal and other film companies, and has had considerable experience in executive capacities in the film business in New York City and neighborhood.

Program Glances

For the first time since he became a Thomas H. Ince star, Charles Ray, in his newest Paramount picture, "A Nine O'Clock Town," released August 5, will go through five reels of film without indulging in a fistic encounter.

Constance Talmadge's recent Select picture, "Up the Road with Sallie," has proved one of the most popular productions that this young star has made to date.

John Barrymore has completed "On the Quiet," the picturization of the famous play by Augustus Thomas, which will mark his reappearance in the field of motion pictures as a star of Paramount productions. Under the supervision of Chester Withey, who directed the picture, the film is now in the course of final preparation for the screen.

It is definitely announced that the screen play, "Inside the Lines," written by Monte M. Katterjohn and starring Lewis S. Stone, will be released as a part of the World program. This was bought by the World as a special feature, and there has been some doubt as to how it would be released.

C. Gardner Sullivan, the scenarioist, is said to have again scored in his new Paramount photoplay, "The Vamp," released July 22, and in which Enid Bennett is presented as star by Thomas H. Ince.

The immediate release of Samuel H. London's "Her Moment," the seven-part dramatic production with Anna Luther starred, is promised this week by General Film Company. Prints for the feature have already been supplied the thirty exchanges in the United States and Canada, and pre-release showings are now being held for the benefit of exhibitors.

July 15 has been set as the release date of "The City of Dim Faces," Sessue Hayakawa's newest Paramount picture. This picture is said to be not only the best vehicle the Oriental star has had in a long time but also to be the first faithful story of Chinese life in this country ever done on the screen.

"The Last Raid of Zeppelin L-21" continues to set the fast pace it established some weeks ago, as the most timely and popular short length war feature on the market today, says General Film Company. It pictures the aerial raids on London and the sensational manner in which the Hun monsters were eliminated as a vital factor in the war, by a daring British aviator.

The Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy release for July 15, is "Ladies First," and features Chester Conklin, Mary Thurman and Harry Gribbon. Its theme lies in the truism that it would be all right for anyone to have a beautiful wife if all the other men in the world were blind.

The fourth and fifth episodes of "Hands Up," the new Pathe serial, are completed. Pathe plans to release the first chapter in about six weeks.

An interesting character in the Marguerite Clark photoplay of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," recently produced by J. Searle Dawley for Paramount release, is Captain Douglas S. Hertz, who plays the part of the owner of the dogs which tracked the runaway slaves.

"The First Law" will be released by Pathe as the big feature of the program for Sunday, July 28. Irene Castle is starred and Antonio Moreno featured in "The First Law," which is a screen version of the novel.

"The Vanity Pool," a magazine novelette by Nalbro Bartley, which appeared recently in "Young's," has been chosen by Universal as Mary MacLaren's next starring vehicle. Ida May Park will direct.

By permission of the superintendent of schools of Amesbury, Mass., the afternoon session of June 21 was vacated and the teachers and pupils of all the public schools of the city went to the Crown theatre to see the Artcraft production of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird."

The fore part of the coming week will see the completion of the filming of "Boston Blackie's Little Pal," Bert Lytell's third starring vehicle under the metro banner, at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

"The Shadow of the Rope," the Pauline Frederick picture to follow "A Daughter of the Old South," is in the final stage of production at the Fifty-sixth street studio, under the direction of Emile Chautard.

Imitations fall flat

Knowing the overwhelming financial success of the original JEWEL Production, "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," producers are rushing madly to the front with all sorts of junk imitations of "The KAISER" in their wild scramble to steal some of the money and glory of the original picture. Some of these producers are publishing criticisms (the direct result of paid advertising) while carefully hiding the ridicule of recognized authorities, trade press and newspapers. It's an attempt to "put over" rank imitations by means of frenzied advertising misstatement. JEWEL warns all Exhibitors to beware of these spurious imitations. JEWEL advises all Exhibitors to see "The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin," and make their own comparisons. The result will instantly expose the imitator.

"THE KAISER, the Beast of Berlin" is still cleaning up for Exhibitors. It has played as high as FOUR return dates and has each time packed them in. Beware of imitators. Take our tip——

Frank Powell in New Company

Well Known Screen Producer Identified with "Sunset Pictures," a San Antonio Organization That Plans Big Specials

SEPTEMBER 1 is set for the release date for a new independent producing organization that has been formed in San Antonio, Texas, with Frank Powell, well-known as a screen producer, as vice-president and director general. The new company, known as Sunset Pictures, plans big specials with the natural locale of the Southwest offered by San Antonio. The plans for release have not been decided upon. Six or eight productions a year are planned, with no definite time limit being set on the production of each one.

The initial production will be the picturization of Ridgwell Cullum's book, "The Forfeit," with House Peters as the star, suported by Jane Miller, Hector V. Sarno and a strong cast.

The inception of this new organization dates back to the fall and winter of 1917 when Frank Powell was producing "The Heart of the Sunset" for Rex Beach in and around San Antonio. San Antonio business interests have long had their eyes on the motion picture industry as an asset and an attraction for their city and it was the coming of Mr. Powell and his Rex Beach company that opened the way for negotiations which were finally closed about the first of May of this year.

According to Mr. Powell San Antonio has many things to attract motion picture producers. The light the year round has wonderful actinic value and the absence of the dreaded static and fogs and prolonged rainy spells all tend to reduce materially the cost of production. The city water, which comes from artesian wells, needs no filtering for laboratory purposes. Every kind of exterior scene desired is close at hand; the sea, mountains, improved and old-time ranches, modern homes and business buildings, and the wonderful historic missions and buildings. Being just about midway between Los Angeles and New York, it has two established centers to draw from for talent. Besides the quality of light, the length of time the light holds good each day is said to practically add a month of producing time in the year.

A long-time lease has been taken on the Harlandale Hot Sulphur Wells property and the bath house, which was formerly owned by Charles Gates. This property comprises about four acres of ground and is located just outside of the city limits. The $35,000 bath house will be used for dressing rooms, offices, laboratory, etc. An outdoor stage 100 x 80 feet has been built and if steel can be obtained by fall a steel and glass structure will be constructed.

The Sunset corporation has also bought the world's motion picture rights for the book, "Good Indian," by B. M. Bower; this will be the second production of the new company.

Maurice Tourneur Rises in Protest

DIRECTOR TOURNEUR who has completed recently his first independent production, "Sporting Life," adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama of the same title, protests against the promiscuous use of the word "photoplay" as descriptive of all varieties of the silent drama.

"The word photoplay was coined, as I understand it, in a prize contest conducted by a Western newspaper some six or seven years ago," says Mr. Tourneur. "The abbreviation, 'movies' was in disrepute and people interested in the development of the silent drama wanted a more dignified word.

"So 'photoplay' came into being. Now we see the word used in various ways, as 'photoplay comedy,' 'photoplay farce,' 'photoplay tragedy' and so on.

"Again, the use of photoplay to cover all forms of silent drama, from that written originally for the screen to the adapted drama and novel, is not correct. Personally I don't think photoplay is the word we have been awaiting to describe the motion picture drama. Why not try to get a better one? The movies have brought many words and new uses to old words to the language, as fade-out, switchback, cut-back, iris, register, shoot, scenario, script and continuity and we need a bigger word to describe our output.

"Movies, is of course, hardly a word to be used professionally. It only indicates something that moves. Not that I dislike the Americanism of the word, for it is rather a term of endearment, indicating the hold of the motion picture play upon the heart of the masses."

Lillian Walker Starts First Independent Feature

Lillian Walker, formerly with Vitagraph and more recently featured in Ogden Pictures Corporation's "A Grain of Dust," has started work on her first independent production of the Lillian Walker Productions, "The Embarrassment of Riches," at the Thanhouser studio, New Rochelle. The story is the work of Louis K. Anspacher, author of "The Unchastened Woman." Roy Somerville made the screen adaptation and wrote the continuity. Edward Dillon, formerly with Goldwyn, is directing. The supporting cast has not been announced. The production will be distributed by the Affiliated Distributors Corporation.

Robards Film on Open Market

Willis Robards, producer of the subject "Mothers of Men," has recently completed a re-editing of this film, and has now completed negotiations with Ernest Shipman for the sale of the same through state rights men. Mr. Shipman is still in Los Angeles, and probably will remain here for several days to complete the work he has laid out. While in Los Angeles he opened offices on South Olive street, which to the West Coast man is known as Film Row.

"Out of the Night" Third Sherry Release

Announcement comes from the offices of Frank Keeney that his next production, scheduled as the third of the releases of the William L. Sherry Service, will be "Out of the Night," from the pen of E. Lloyd Sheldon.

Catherine Calvert will again be the star in this Keeney offering, with the strong support headed by Herbert Rawlinson.

The story of "Out of the Night" finds Catherine Calvert in the role of a mill girl, whom oppression drives to the streets. Later she falls in love with the son of the man responsible for her wrongs, thus bringing out the complications responsible for the story.

Ruppert Makes Further Announcement

A further statement in regard to the plans of the Film Clearing House, Inc., sponsored by Colonel Jacob Ruppert, was made by Colonel Ruppert this week.

"One shipment a day or bi-weekly or once a week, according to the exhibitor's schedule of changes, will be made," he said. "When you cut out wastage and the duplication of effort you are earning profits that quickly become self-evident. This holds true of the shipping work on the side of the shipper. Exchange systems are compelled to ask high rates today, for they must maintain expensive organizations and premises in every American shipping center, whereas one huge shipping depot, catering to all, could easily do the work.

"Much as the exchange systems have wanted to eliminate their great 'overhead,' a way out could not be found. After a careful study of all angles of the business, I proposed the Film Clearing House to take over all present-day distribution effort excepting that of sales promotion.

"The delivery to exhibitors of service aids is today a secondary matter at most branch offices.

"The sort of distributing service that a concern like ours can create and maintain would be quite beyond the power of any single exchange system. That indicates emphatically that we can improve exchange efficiency, while reducing exchange operating costs."

Marion Davies Working on Second Production

Marion Davies' second independent production, under the banner of her own company, the Marion Davies Film Corporation, is in its second week of production at the Norma Talmadge studio, under the direction of Julius Steger. "The Burden of Proof" is the title of Miss Davies' second production. Its theme is based upon patriotic episodes.

Christie Returns Optimistic

Back at Los Angeles Studio Reports Theatres All Over Country Giving Increased Attention to Comedies — New Exchanges

AFTER a trip which took him to all parts of the country, Charles Christie, general manager of the Christie Film Company, has returned to Los Angeles and is more than optimistic in his views concerning the future of the motion picture industry. In practically every city where Mr. Christie stopped, he found the exhibitors optimistic concerning summer business, as well as the general outlook for the patronage of their theatres.

"A diversified program is being used universally," Mr. Christie said, "and particular attention is being given to the musical program by all theatre managers. I found also that comedy is coming in for its measure in advertising, in the newspapers, and also in the lobby displays. In fact, comedy now is receiving far more attention than it has at any time in the past two or three years. The Madison theatre, Detroit; Park and Boston theatres, at Boston; the Central Park theatre, in Chicago, and a number of others are featuring comedy in their newspaper advertising."

While on this trip Mr. Christie consummated contracts with exchanges which mean that every state in the Union has been sold for the next year, and practically every one of the allied and neutral countries.

The E. & H. Film Distributing Company, founded by Paul Engler at Atlanta, will in the future distribute Christie Comedies for the six south eastern states of North and South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Tennessee and Alabama.

Another new distributor for the Christie firm is Harry Landee's Quality Film Service of Pittsburg, who recently took over the franchise for the western Pennsylvania territory.

"In every territory I found that clean comedy, devoid of slap-stick, is in demand," Mr. Christie said, "and the product from our plant is receiving consideration and patronage from the greatest theatres in the country."

Hammons Leaves to Supervise Production

E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, is in Charleston, W. Va., this week to supervise arrangements for Educational's feature now in production, "When the Giant Wakes." The scenes of this production will include pictures of the State Council of Defense, the prominent figures in the coal industry and the scenes that illustrate the cause of coal shortage. Work on the picture has been in progress since July 8. The company is receiving the cooperation of the officials and people of the Allegheny district, next to the Pennsylvania coal fields, the largest coal area in the United States. John Sunderland is leading man, and Ethel Grey Terry leading woman. The exteriors will be made in West Virginia, after which the company will return to New York to do the studio scenes.

Among releases announced by Educational for fall are a series of short reel Indian pictures and a series of motion picture interviews with celebrities. The Indian pictures are the product of the Northwestern Film Corporation of Sheridan, Wyoming, of which J. E. Maple is the directing head.

The interviews with celebrities present an extension of motion picture work in the field of the daily and Sunday newspapers. They will be real living interviews. Topics of the day will be taken up and the ideas of prominent men and women upon them will be forcefully picturized.

Greater New York Exhibitors Book Direct

Educational announces for the benefit of the exhibitors of Greater New York that they are invited to contract direct with the Educational Film Corporation for bookings on "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play," its patriotic feature to be released this month. Outside of New York, exhibitors will obtain bookings on this feature through the independent buyers operating in their respective territory.

Exhibitors Report Most Favorably

Reports from different sections of the country, where Graphic Film Corporation's late production, "When Men Betray," directed by Ivan Abramson, with Anne Luther, John Mason, Leah Baird and Stuart Holmes in the leading roles, indicate that this feature is showing to capacity houses.

Educational Scenic and Cartoon

The natural wonders of "The Rainbow Bridge" and the imaginary marvels of "Pep," a new "elixir" of life, constitute the themes of the Educational's releases for the week of July 22. Gregory La Cava in the International cartoon comedy introduces the spectator to "Pep."

"The Rainbow Bridge" is an Educational scenic. It was made by E. M. Newman in Southeastern Utah and picturizes the greatest natural bridge in the world, 309 feet high, 277 wide and 30 thick, which derives its name of Rainbow Bridge from the fact that the so-called painted rocks of the desert formation give all the variegated colors of the rainbow.

Billie Rhodes Featured in Five-Reelers

The National Film Corporation of America which produced "Tarzan of the Apes," announces that "Smiling Bill" Parsons has completed arrangements for the production of a series of eight five-reel feature comedies, featuring Billie Rhodes. It is also announced that Mr. Parsons has closed with the Australasian Films, Ltd., represented by Millard Johnson, for the handling of these comedies in the foreign territory covered by the Australasian company.

Stoermer Buys Estate in Westchester

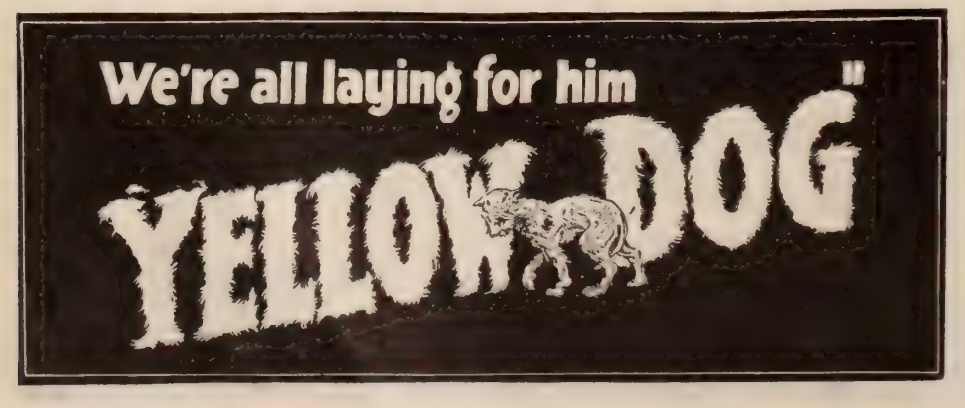
William Steormer, general sales manager of the American Standard Motion Picture Corporation, has recently bought an estate in Cortland City, Westchester County, New York, and is erecting his permanent residence there. He has named his estate Stormcrest. It consists of many acres of forest on the slopes of a mountain, from the summit of which are romantic views of the Hudson towards Storm King; the valley of the Croton and other picturesque parts of New York State.

It is Mr. Stoermer's intention to have the American Standard directors use his estate and its vicinity as locations for the company's productions. In course of time it is probable that a great modern hotel will crown Stormcrest and dominate the valley; meanwhile building operations are being expedited in Mr. Stoermer's new home.

Dustin Farnum at San Jose Rodeo

Dustin Farnum, whose next screen appearance will be made in "The Light of Western Stars," from the Zane Grey novel, was a prominent participant in the recent San Jose Rodeo.

Zane Grey, Harry Sherman and Dustin Farnum were in the party that made a four hundred and fifty mile automobile trip over night in order that the star might take part in the rodeo.



United Pictures Announce Developments

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., makes a detailed statement this week of the results of its campaign to date. "The showing is the more remarkable," said President J. A. Berst in his statement.

"No offices have been opened on the Pacific Coast, nor have the Far Western States been visited by our traveling representatives, and no theatres in that important territory are as yet listed on our rolls. Nor are there offices in operation in Philadelphia, Cleveland, Detroit, Indianapolis, Atlanta or Butte, and an examination of our list of member-theatres will show that we have as yet no representation in these important centres or their immediate environs. As our campaign is extended to these places we may confidently expect an immediate increase in membership, many of them houses of the very first importance.

"At the inception of our campaign we were well satisfied if each of our representatives brought us in a few additional contracts each week. Now that the aims of the movement are more generally understood we are disappointed if any territory in which we are actively represented fails to bring us a dozen new members weekly. The co-operation of the exhibitors who have already joined has been a great factor in increasing the momentum with which the movement is sweeping to victory."

Washington Critics Praise "Stolen Orders"

William A. Brady's special production, "Stolen Orders," which opened to capacity business and ran for a week at Poli's theatre, Washington, D. C., last week, received the following notices from the Washington papers. Carlyle Blackwell, Kitty Gordon, Montagu Love and June Elvidge have the principal roles.

The Washington Post—"A film play which piles a Pelion of sensations upon an Ossa of thrills." . . . The spectacular episodes of the screen play are staged with much effectiveness—no film magnate could imagine more."

The Herald—"A genuine masterwork of the films . . . is the most pretentious production . . . ever put out."

The Times—"William A. Brady, the producer, has put into the eight reels of this picture more sensational scenes than are possible on the legitimate stage."

The Star declared that "flashes thrill like chain lightning throughout eight reels of exciting complications."

Metro Exchange Releases "The Warrior"

Herbert Lubin and Arthur H. Sawyer, General Enterprises, Inc., have completed arrangements with the Metro Exchange of New York for the distributing rights in Greater New York and New York State to "The Warrior." The release of this feature, starring Maciste, by the New York Metro Exchange will mark its initial public showing in New York excepting the special run at the Criterion theatre about a year ago. The picture will open on the Marcus Loew Circuit the week of July 22nd. Special music has been arranged. Outside of New York and through Canada this picture has been received by crowded houses.

Critics Praise Gaumont Serial

First Five Episodes Shown for Review—On Independent Market—Gaumont News Weeklies Timely

THE first five episodes of Gaumont's twenty-reel serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," were given a private showing this week at Joe Miles' projection rooms, and if the critics are not "all wrong" in their opinions, it's going over with a bang.

The new Gaumont serial tells a real, red-blooded story. It will appeal to all the family. There are no repulsive criminal actions, no sex situations and no offensive details of any kind. It tells the story of a man who befriends the oppressed.

In a recent statement Edward L. Hyman, who is doing patriotic work with the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, and who manages a theatre at Camp Gordon, Ga., and has charge of the bookings for many other training camp theatres, tells what kind of photo-stories the soldiers and their wives and families want. Mr. Hyman says the soldier boys are "the harshest critics that God ever made," and that they will not look at "wishy-washy, artificial stuff," but insist on clean, "real He-Man stories. The Gaumont Company says it has this kind of story in "The Hand of Vengeance."

No. 15 of the Gaumont Graphic, which was shipped to all exhibitors on July 5, shows what is the greatest splash in the world's history—America's answer to the Prussian's ruthless submarine warfare. More than one hundred vessels of all types were launched on July 4, from the submarine chasing "Eagles" to the larger war vessels and big transport carriers.

The operation of the new anti-loafing law is also described in this issue of the Graphic.

No. 16 of the Gaumont News, released July 9, shows an intimate photograph of Major John Purroy Mitchel, who fell to his death at Gerstner Aviation Field. This number of the Gaumont News contains among other subjects the wreck of the excursion steamer "Columbia," near Peoria, Illinois; the successful test of a giant bombing airplane, equipped with 400 horsepower Liberty motors; the visit of the Mexican cabinet to Southern California; the entertainment by the soldier boys of Camp Devens of thousands of navy lads and the shattering of swimming records by fair California mermaids.

Among the Official War Pictures in this issue is one which shows how the dreaded trench fever, contracted from the bite of the "cootie," has been overcome by inoculation.

Johnson's Cannibal Pictures at Rivoli

MARTIN JOHNSON, Martin Johnson Film Company, traveler and lecturer, has assembled more than 6,000 feet of negative film showing the life and customs of the cannibals inhabiting the South Sea Isles. These pictures were taken by Mr. Johnson and together they comprise a series, which he calls, "Among the Cannibal Isles of the South Pacific." The first of the series will be shown at S. L. Rothapfel's Rivoli theatre next week for the first time in America. During his travels in getting these pictures, Mr. Johnson traveled more than 18,000 miles, visiting Honolulu, Samoa, Australia and all of the important islands of the South Sea Isles.

The animated picture record of this journey which Mr. Rothapfel will present for the first time on any screen was made entirely by Mr. Johnson without the help of any other white man. "The negatives," he says, "were often developed within a stone's throw of a cannibal village, within the smoke-covered walls of native grass huts, and at times on board little schooners. The scenes of island life and customs here depicted will be of special interest to students of ethnology, since the series embraces many extraordinary types of humanity, ranging from the beauty of the Hawaiian to the repulsive ugliness of the cannibals of the Solomon and New Hebrides groups."

Educators Discuss Pictures

The use of motion pictures by educators and social agencies was given a decided impetus at the joint conference of the National Education Association and the Community Center Association in Pittsburgh at the convention held July 2 to July 5, inclusive. For probably the first time, motion pictures were discussed by this body in a dignified and adequate fashion as valuable for instructional entertainment, Americanization and patriotic purposes. An entire morning session was devoted to the subject.

Quarterdeck Drill and Inspection Aboard An American Dreadnaught in the Educational Number, "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play"

Educational's Navy Picture for Soldiers

Educational Film Corporation, through President Skinner and Vice-President E. W. Hammons, is completing arrangements with officials of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, the official distributing medium for the "soldier pictures" for the Y. M. C. A., for the showing of Educational's "Your Fighting Navy at Work and at Play" on the transports carrying our troops to France and behind the firing lines in France and Italy. The picture was edited by Lieutenant Henry Reuterdahl, U. S. N. R. F., and shows the activities of our naval forces. Educational announces that the picture will open at a Broadway theatre for a special run within the next few weeks.

Marcus Loew Books General's "Her Moment"

"Her Moment," written by Samuel London, starring Anne Luther and distributed on the General Film program, will have its first public showing the first week in August, when it opens on the Loew Circuit of theatres. J. A. Hammell, manager of General Film's New York Exchange, closed the contract this week.

It will appear at the following Loew houses: Loew's New York, Broadway and 43rd street; Loew's New 42nd Street, Lexington avenue and 42nd street; Loew's 116th Street, Seventh avenue and 116th street; Loew's 86th Street, Third avenue and 86th street; Loew's West End, 155th street and St. Nicholas avenue, and Loew's Broadway, Brooklyn.

Keen Interest Noted in United Booklet

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., reports that the demand for the booklet, containing particulars of the co-operative project of this distributing organization, by the exhibitors throughout the country, is evidence that the United plan has taken root and produced results. The booklet contains the United plan in all its details and explains the why and wherefore of this organization.

Booking Syndicate Has Ince Production

Exhibitors Booking Syndicate, Inc., are sending out a circular letter to the exhibitors of New York, announcing that the Syndicate has "The Eleventh Commandment," starring Lucille Lee Stewart and produced by Shubert-Hammerstein Enterprises, under the direction of Ralph Ince, for release to its members. Sydney S. Cohen is president of the Syndicate.

"In the Name of Humanity" Webster's Next

Harry McRae Webster's second independent production has been titled, "In the Name of Humanity." Mr. Webster and Richard Field Carroll, author of Mr. Webster's first production, "Reclaimed," collaborated on the script. The cast has not been announced.

"Inn of the Blue Moon," Doris Kenyon's Next

Doris Kenyon, who inaugurated the Sherry Service with the first De Luxe release, "The Street of Seven Stars," will make her next appearance in "The Inn of the Blue Moon," listed as the fourth release of the new exchange organization.

Louis Joseph Vance is the author of "The Inn of the Blue Moon." The story was written especially for Miss Kenyon and gives her a part which admirably fits her winsome personality.

Mr. Sherry is distributing all of the pictures of Miss Kenyon's company, as well as of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. Reports from the exchanges he has established in fifteen of the principal cities of the country are said to be encouraging.

"Don't listen to the croakers," says Mr. Sherry. "The moving picture business is coming back to its own. There is every indication of a lively demand for first-class productions as soon as the summer period of comparative lassitude has passed."

Petrova Nearing Quarter Million Mark for U. S.

According to a wire recently received at Washington by E. H. Benedict, chairman of the War Saving Committee, Madame Petrova has already sold $224,000 worth of War Saving Stamps.

To the State of Texas goes the distinction of having contributed the largest amount to the cause thus far. At the Liberty and Queen theatres in Houston, her efforts resulted in the sale of $52.000 worth of Thrift and War stamps. During her stay in Dallas she sold $23,000 worth more of stamps at E. H. Halsey's Old Mill theatre for Uncle Sam. At A. E. Levy's Hippodrome in Fort Worth the total reached $20.000 in addition to $1.000 of subscriptions offered for autographed photographs of Madame Petrova.

Mr. Levy also turned over the entire receipts, both the matinee and evening performances, to the Government during the appearance of Madame Petrova.

I. A. T. S. E. Statement

WE print below a statement from the headquarters of the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada. This statement is in answer to the rumors and reports which have been circulated to the effect that the draft is drawing to an alarming extent on the supply of available operators in the country.

The Editor,
The Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

For some weeks prior to July 1, 1918, the motion picture operators affiliated with this organization were uneasy owing to the conflicting rumors circulated in reference to the status of operators as to whether they were in what the Provost Marshal-General's office would consider an essential occupation. Numerous local draft boards had notified individual operators that they were engaged in a non-productive industry and would have to seek other employment before July 1st or be subject to having their draft classification revised and being inducted into immediate military service. These rulings had the effect of causing considerable consternation, not only to the operators but also the exhibitors, and in several cities the employers raised considerable sums of money for the purpose of teaching projection to women and those over the draft age.

We presume that in the majority of instances the exhibitors were actuated by the desire to be assured of a sufficient number of operators to fill all positions, but in many cases we have positive knowledge that these schools were promulgated for no other purpose than to destroy our local unions in those localities. We wish to say that such action is both premature and ill-advised. The idea of training women as projectionists is, to say the very least, simple folly. Anyone having any knowledge of the inflammable nature of film stock would know that a woman is not temperamentally fitted to be entrusted with the handling of a product of that nature, with its attendant responsibilities. Surely no exhibitor who holds the safety of his patrons paramount would care to employ an operator of little experience if by so doing he faced the slightest possibility of being a party to serious consequences.

But to those exhibitors who had in view the combating of our local organizations by such means, we can only say that they are out of step with the spirit of the times, and appear to display gross ignorance of the fact that the Government of the United States has recognized the rights of the workers to organize and consider inviolable the privilege of organized labor to bargain collectively. If these gentlemen who are bent upon antagonizing our organization would spend the same amount of energy on the uplifting of the industry we should all be the gainers; but since we must have a few men of such calibre we must say that it is men like these that compel us to organize in order to offset their activities.

International President Shay, of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., recently had an interview with the officials of the Provost Marshal-General's office, and was surprised to learn that a delegation of exhibitors from Pittsburgh had preceded him to Washington and had declared to General Crowder that they considered operators as non-essential and that persons could be taught the business of projection in a few days time. The statements of these exhibitors were not only silly, but were fraught with danger to the legitimate exhibitors of the balance of the country. Our representative also learned that a party named Mr. Carpenter, who alleged that he represented the California producers of motion pictures, had had an interview with the Provost Marshal-General and had advised General Crowder that all persons engaged in the manufacture of films were as essential as the legitimate actor, but he added that in his opinion the operators were not essential. The kindest thing we can say of Mr. Carpenter is that he knows not whereof he speaks, and as suggestions and opinions appear to be in order we would suggest to the producers that in future they employ a representative who is competent to handle their affairs without making statements detrimental to their best interests.

However, in spite of the efforts of these gentlemen the Provost Marshal-General's order has been amended, and all state draft executives have been notified that operators are skilled workmen, and therefore are exempt from the provisions of the "Work or Fight" order.

Those who have had experience in other lines of endeavor feel impelled to remark that there is in the motion picture industry an entire lack of co-operation, and until a spirit of co-ordination manifests itself we can expect the industry to remain the political football of aspiring politicians.

In closing, may we be permitted to say that while a number of our members have gone into the military service through enlistment and through the ordinary process of the draft, and while others have been attracted to other occupations on account of temporary higher wages to be obained there, we can still assure the exhibitors of enough operators to fill every position in the country, if only the exhibitors will extend to us their sincere co-operation in the interests of the whole industry.

Assistant President, International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators of U. S. and C.

This statement speaks for itself—it is clear and concise and should leave no wrong impression as to the position of the I. A. T. S. E. in the controversy. Westinghouse Motor-Generator Sets, Their Installation and Operation

[Editor's Note.—Through the courtesy of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. we are enabled to reprint the following portions of their valuable instruction book on motor-generators. Many suggestions contained herein may find application in the successful operation of similar apparatus of any make, and the instructions, on the whole, form a useful treatise on motor-generator operation.]

WHEN the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co. decided, some years ago, to produce a line of motor-generator sets for motion picture service, the characteristics and capabilities of all known motor-generator combinations were considered, and it was finally decided that the best results at the projector arc would be secured from a constant current machine. Accordingly the Westinghouse Company chose their S K type generator to form the current producing unit of all their motor-generator sets, this being a compound-wound machine, flat compounded, and capable of supplying very steady voltage, a characteristic for which the Westinghouse sets are noted. The voltage adopted for the motion picture sets is 75, which is reduced to the required arc-voltage of 50-52 by the use of a compact, separately mounted rheostat or ballast resistor. With this arrangement it is possible to warm up the carbons of the second machine while the first is in operation without affecting the brilliancy of the first arc, which permits of perfect change-overs being accomplished.

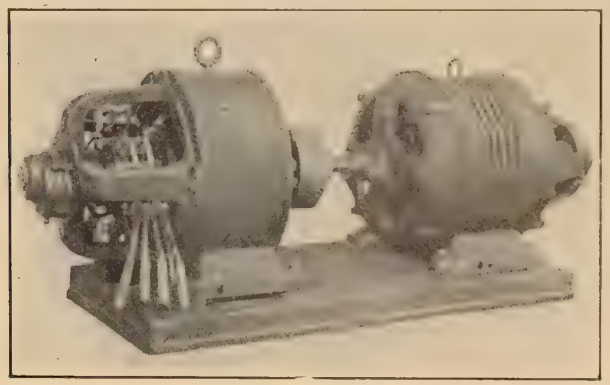

Fig. 1—Motor-generator with Single-phase A. C. Motor

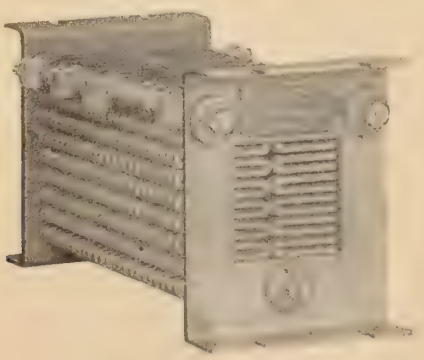

Fig. 2—Ballast Resistor

A wide variety of motors are regularly supplied with the Westinghouse generator sets, thus permitting their use on any standard power circuit, such as 25 or 60 cycle polyphase A. C., 60 cycle single-phase A. C. or 230 volt D. C. Polyphase motors can also be furnished for operation on 110, 220, or 440 volt A. C., and single-phase motors to operate on 110 or 220 volts. The successful operation of all types of Westinghouse motor-generator sets for motion picture projection is comprehended in the following instructions:

General Information

A foundation should be provided for the motor-generator so that the bottom of the bedplate will be approximately two feet above the level of the surrounding floor. To prevent the magnetic hum and vibration of the set being transmitted to the surrounding supports such as floor and walls of the building, it is desirable to build a vibration and sound-absorbing base.

Fig. 3—Star Delta Switch Starting Position

Such a base may be constructed readily with solid planking two inches thick and layers of solid cork, each layer two inches thick. Anchor bolts should be placed in the foundation so that they will extend a sufficient distance above the sound-absorbing base to permit the placing of nuts. The supporting foundation should preferably be made of hollow concrete. The cork should be placed in two layers on the concrete foundation. On top of the cork should be placed the plank frame constructed of two layers of two-inch plank. The planks of one layer should be laid at right angles with the planks in the other, both layers to be bolted or nailed together securely. The anchor bolts must be located so that they will not touch any portion of the motor-generator bedplate. After the plank frame is in place the anchor-bolt nuts should be drawn up tight. The motor-generator may then be mounted on the plank frame and, if desirable, the bedplate may be bolted down to the plank frame as holes are provided for this purpose. If so desired, heavy felt may be substituted for the cork but cork is much more resilient and will remain elactic indefinitely, whereas felt will not.

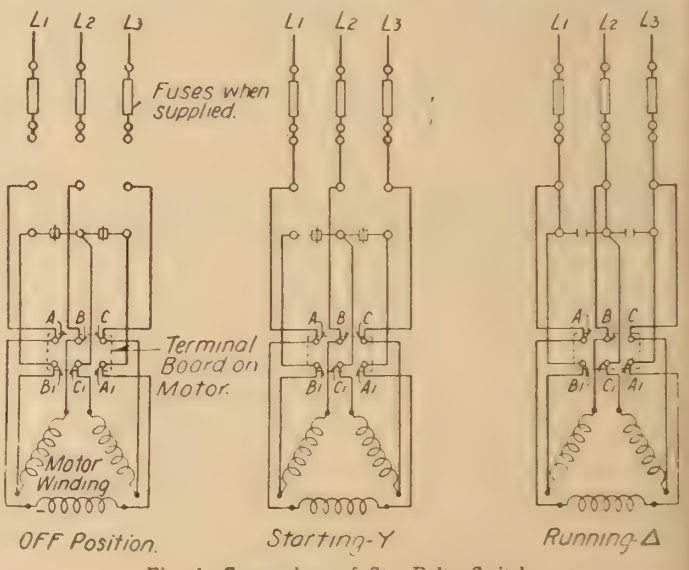

Fig. 4—Connections of Star-Delta Switch

When constructing the foundation and sound-absorbing base it is essential that the top of the plank platform be made level so that the oiling system of the motor-generator will not fail after the set is installed.

Nomenclature

Throughout these instructions, equipments for two typical types of installations will be considered under the captions of single-light and two-light equipments or installations. The single-light equipment is required for each installation wherein only one motion picture machine is to be used. The two-light equipment is required for each installation, wherein two motion picture machines are to be operated alternately, for "change-over" or "continuous picture service." For this latter service one lamp is "warmed up" for a period of approximately one minute when another motion picture machine is in operation. For each single-light installation a motor-generator and one-ballast resistor are required, the control switch being optional; whereas, for each two-light installation, a motor-generator, two ballast resistors and two control switches are required.

Installation

Install the motor-generator either in the operating booth, or as near the booth as possible, and the field rheostat for the generator in the booth if permissible, or as near the booth as possible. Install the motor control equipment for the motor-generator in the booth if permissible, or as near the booth as possible, and the ballast resistors either in or near the operating booth. Each ballast resistor frame should be mounted so that the three tie rods, passing through and supporting the grids, are horizontal. This places the grids in an upright position, which permits a free circulation of air vertically between the grids. (See Fig. 2.) The control switch for each ballast resistor should preferably be mounted on the frame of the motion picture machine, with which the ballast resistor is to be used, beside the cut-out switch connected to the arc lamp terminals. (See Figs. 7, 8, 9, 10.) A suitable direct-current ammeter and voltmeter should be used and connected in the generator circuit as indicated by Figs. 7, 8, 9, 10. These meters should be installed in the operating booth, in a position where they can be easily seen by an operator when he is projecting pictures. A panel should preferably be used on which are mounted the meters, switches and fuses, or circuit-breakers connected in the various circuits, and if so desired, the generator field rheostat, as indicated in Figs. 7, 8, 9 and 10. Each control switch may also be mounted on the panel, but we recommend the location specified above.

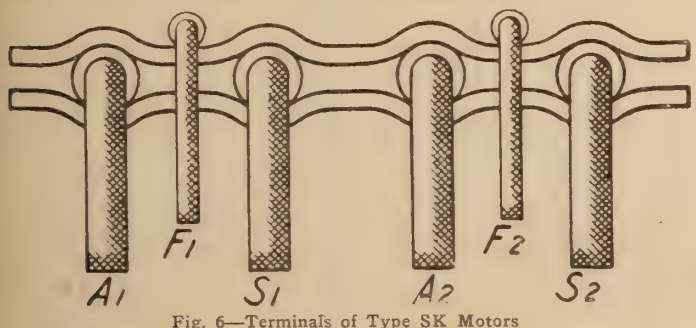

Fig. 6—Terminals of Type SK Motors

Wiring and Connecting

Type CS Polyphase Motor

Connect the motor and auto-starter by referring to the diagram furnished with the auto-starter. If the circuit is 2-phase, 4-wire, connect leads from one phase to motor terminals A1 and A2 and leads from other phase to terminals B1 and B2. If circuit is 2-phase, 3-wire, connect outside leads to terminals A1 and B1 and middle lead to A2 and B2. If the circuit is 3-phase connect any lead to any terminal. To obtain proper direction of rotation see instructions below. If fuses are used in the running circuit they should carry current in excess of current indicated in nameplate as follows:

2-phase, 4-wire circuit, all leads, 25 per cent.
2-phase, 3-wire circuit, outside leads, 25 per cent. middle lead, 75 per cent.
3-phase, 3-wire circuit, all leads, 25 per cent.

If circuit-breakers are used in the running circuit they should be adjusted to open the circuit with the above overload capacities. Fuses in the starting circuit should carry four to five times the rated current. If a star-delta starting switch (Fig. 3) is supplied for the motor it should be connected as indicated by Fig. 4. This switch is constructed so that the movement of the handle is progressive from the "off" position to "star" for starting, thence to "delta" for running.

Type AR Single-Phase Motor

This motor can be connected for operation on either 110 or 220-volt circuits. The diagrams (Fig. 5) show the connections. The motor is connected directly to the line through a circuit-breaker or a line switch and fuses.

Type SK Direct-Current Motor

Refer to the diagram (Fig. 6) and make the following connections for counter-clockwise rotation looking at the commutator end:

Connect A2 to starting resistors, thence to + line.
Connect A1 to S1.
Connect S2 and F2 to — line.
Connect F1 to + line.

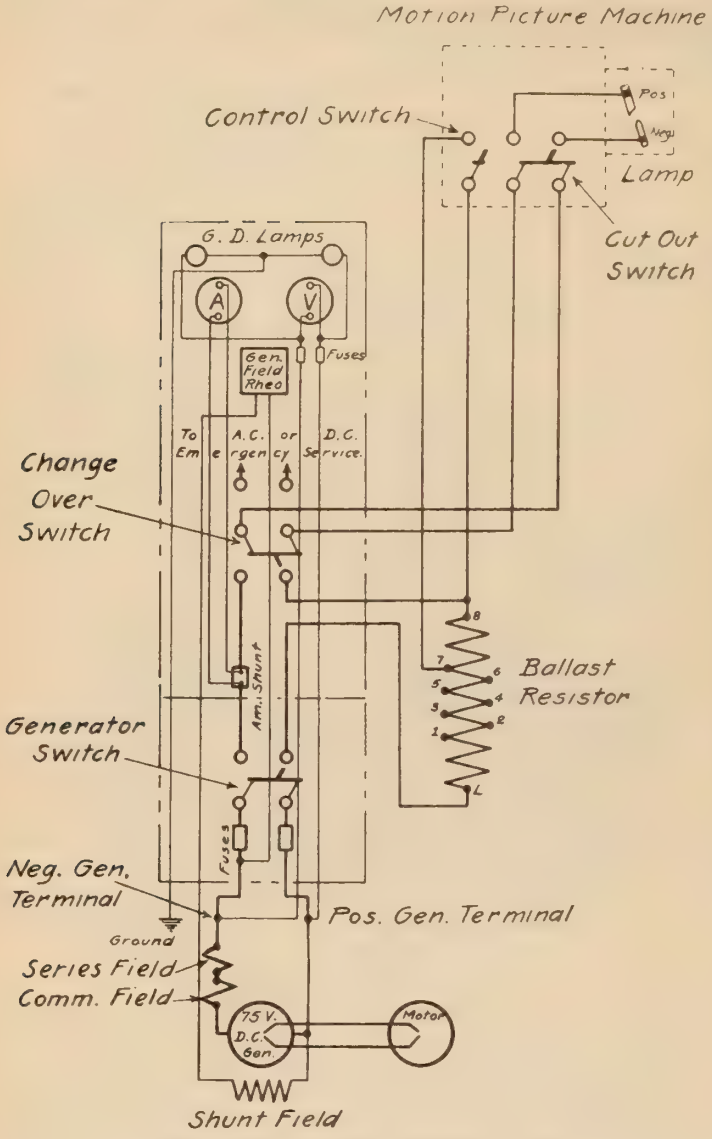

Fig. 8—Single Arc, with Emergency Panel

Single-light equipments should be wired and connected as indicated by Fig. 7, or Fig. 8 if a control switch is used. If a control switch is not used, then the wiring for Fig. 7 should be modified by omitting the leads to the control switch and by connecting a lead from the lower left-hand stud of the cut-out switch to terminal 7 on the ballast resistor, instead of to terminal 8. Likewise, the wiring of Fig. 8 should be modified by omitting the leads to the control switch and by connecting the lead from the lower right-hand stud of the change-over switch, to terminal 7 on the ballast resistor. Two-light equipments should be wired and connected as indicated by Fig. 9 or Fig. 10.

Type SK Generator.

The diagram (Fig. 6) and directions below show the connections for clockwise rotation looking at the commutator end:

Connect A1 to + line.
Connect A2 and F2 to S2.
Connect S1 to — line.
Connect F1 to field rheostat, thence to + line.

Minimum Size of Wire for Installation

For each single-light installation, wherein the distance from the generator terminals to the cut-out switch on the motion picture machine, measured along the route of the wiring or conduit, is 300 feet or less, the size of the wire is determined by the current to be carried. (See the "National Electric Code.") If the distance is over 300 feet, the exact distance should be referred to the company for recommendations as to the proper size of wire to be used. The minimum size of wire to be used for the circuit, which must carry current for both lamps of a two-light installation is determined by measuring the distance from the generator terminals to the generator switch, or to the point where the circuit, which must carry current for both lamps, branches or divides into separate circuits, one for each lamp. The distance must be measured along the route of the wiring or conduit. If this distance is greater than 300 feet, the exact distance should be referred to the company for recommendations as to the proper size of wire to be used. The size of all wires which carry current for one lamp only, will be governed by the above consideration, but the distance is measured along the route of the wiring or conduit from the cut-out switch on each motion picture machine, to the generator switch or to the point where the branch circuit for each lamp joins the main generator circuit.

For each two-light installation, wherein the length of the main circuit, which must carry current for both lamps, or wherein the length of the branch circuit to either lamp, is greater than 300 feet, a diagram should be prepared which represents the wiring, and the length of each wire should be accurately indicated thereon. This diagram should be referred to the company for recommendations as to the proper size of wire to be used for each circuit. For each installation, wherein alternating current is to be used for emergency service, we strongly recommend that all wiring and switches, which will be used for carrying this current to each lamp, be made of sufficient capacity to carry the alternating current, bearing in mind the fact that, in order to produce the same volume, or candle-power, of light, the alternating current (measured in amperes) must be approximately three times as great as the direct current ordinarily used. The wiring for the circuit of each direct-current or alternating-current motor should be of a capacity such that the speed of the motor will not be appreciably affected by a line voltage drop at any load up to and including 30 per cent overload for a few minutes or 100 per cent overload momentarily.

Lubrication

Before starting, fill the oil reservoirs with the best quality of clear dynamo oil; overflow plugs must always be kept open. The old oil should be withdrawn occasionally and fresh oil substituted. The old oil can be filtered and used again.

Starting the Motor-Generator

After the apparatus is properly installed and all wiring is correctly connected, open all of the switches in the generator and lamp circuits; turn the contact arm, on the generator field rheostat to the contact marked "in," and then start the motor as explained below.

Type CS Polyphase Motor

See that the auto-starter handle is in the off position. Close the circuit-breaker, if one is used, then close the main switch. Move the auto-starter handle from the off to the starting position. When the motor attains practically full speed, move handle of auto-starter to running position. Do not leave the auto-starter handle in starting position. If an auto-starter is not required, the starting switch must be thrown to the starting position until the set operates at almost full speed and then the switch may be thrown to the running position.

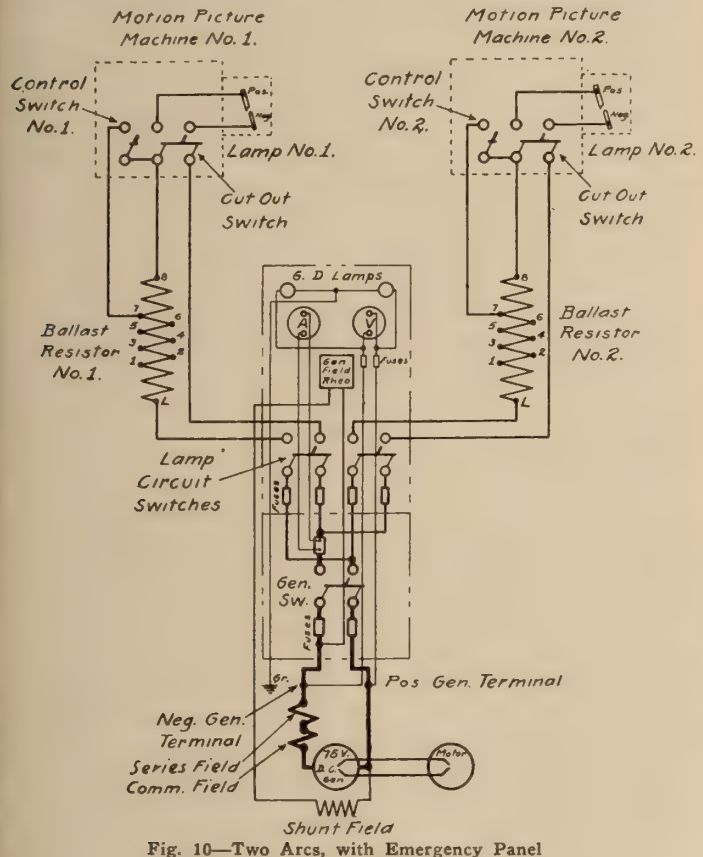

Fig. 10—Two Arcs, with Emergency Panel

Type AR Single-Phase Motor

Close the line switch. The motor starts as a repulsion motor with current flowing through the brushes and commutator. At nearly full speed, a centrifugal governor inside the armature automatically short-circuits the armature windings, thus causing the motor to run as a squirrel-cage induction motor. The brushes are thrown off by the end thrust of the armature. If the motor does not come to full speed, which is shown by continued sparking at the brushes, the motor is overloaded and will overheat. Apparently there is a load on the generator. Look over the generator circuit and make sure that all load is removed by opening all cut-out switches.

Type SK Direct-Current Motor

See that all instructions for connecting and installing the motor have been complied with and that the handle of the starter or controller is in the "off" position. Close the line switch or circuit-breaker and move the starter or controller handle step by step to the running position. Motors of less than 10 horsepower can usually be brought to full speed in 15 seconds, and the larger motors in about 30 seconds; the time, however, varies with the torque required. If the motor does not start when the third step it reached, first open the line switch of circuit-breaker, then move the handle of the controller to the "off" position, and look for overload or faulty connections.

"Simplex" Porter in New Quarters

FOLLOWING his recent removal from 1482 Broadway, New York City, to the eleventh floor of the Godfrey Building, 729 Seventh avenue, B. F. Porter, the exclusive distributor for Simplex projectors in New York City, Long Island and northern New Jersey, instituted a mode of advertising used by no other accessory supply house in the country. This has been made possible by the recent installation on the roof of the Godfrey Building of a large electric display known as the "Talking Sign."

Quick to seize upon the advantages afforded by this latest development of illuminated advertising signs, he arranged upon settlement in his new quarters for a series of messages to be flashed every night from the roof of the Godfrey Building. The first announced his change of address and was followed by others, which left little doubt in the minds of the pedestrians at Broadway and Forty-second street, seven blocks away, of his progressive methods.

The ingenuity of this device enables him to arrange for the flashing of new messages without leaving his office, and by his terms with the company controlling it, no other firm in the same line of business can use the sign during the life of the contract.

As a part of his quick service idea Mr. Porter has installed a large show case for a complete display of all Simplex parts. In this silent salesman are seventy compartments where the exhibitor can see at a glance the six hundred machine parts. The customer who does not know their names can thus easily point out what is needed for replacement in his machine.

On the floor of the new sales-room are three Simplex machines, two enamelled and one in gold-leaf, while in the wall cases there is a complete supply of lenses and reels. He now has in stock 30,000 carbons, part of which are in a store-room in the rear of the sales-room, which faces Seventh avenue.

In his present location Mr. Porter, now in the heart of the film district, will be able to serve customers to much better advantage than formerly.

Camera Laboratory — Picture Making — Studio Technique

The Kodak Research Laboratory

A GLANCE through recent volumes of MOTION PICTURE NEWS will show that in the last three years the production of motion pictures in natural colors has engaged the attention of numerous inventors, and in this interesting field of experimental endeavor the Kodak Research Laboratory has also taken an active part. Systems of color photography are divided into two classes as regards the reproduction of colored positives, these being known as additive and subtractive processes, respectively, the one reproducing the original by the additive synthesis of colored lights, while the other achieves this end by the subtractive combination of colored pigments or opacities. The scientific man will contend that a faithful color reproduction can only be attained with spectral lights, but in the case of color cinematography the practical man will contend that the commercial solution of the problem resides in the subtractive processes, where each picture on the film is a completely colored reproduction of the subject photographed, and the film can therefore be projected in the usual manner. At the Research Laboratory both the additive and the subtractive color processes have been experimented upon, but with the practical end constantly in view, following the established Kodak principle, an extensive amount of work has been done on the subtractive method of color cinematography, and the next stage of our trip through the laboratory brings us to a specially equipped room where this work is carried out.

In 1914 the Kodak Company introduced, in a limited way, a two-color method of photography, which was christened Kodachrome and was recommended for portraiture only. In the Kodachrome process[5], which is a subtractive method, two negatives are taken simultaneously, or in quick succession, on color-sensitive plates, through a red filter and a green filter, respectively. From these color-selection negatives positive transparencies are next made, and these transparencies are used in preparing the resultant color pictures, which are also in the form of transparencies on glass or film. The prints made from these master-positives (as they are termed) have the appearance of negatives, but they are converted into dye positives of great clarity and richness of color by the method described in the process patent. Briefly stated the black and white transparencies are converted into transparent dye images by first bleaching them in a bath which removes the opaque silver image-deposits, and, in addition, tans the gelatine film wherever it was acted upon by the printing light, thus rendering it impenetrable by the dye solution which is subsequently applied. After washing and drying, the bleached transparencies are dyed up in baths complementary in color to the spectral regions which the respective transparencies represent, i. e., the red-sensation transparency is dyed green, and the green-sensation transparency is dyed red. Now, since the two transparencies, before bleaching, resembled negative images, and since these images were rendered incapable of taking up dye by the bleaching process, it is apparent that the dye solutions will be taken up by the two transparencies in such a manner that positive images in clear transparent dye colors will be secured. When, therefore, the two dyed transparencies are placed together in register, a multi-colored reproduction of the subject photographed will result, and for certain classes of subject this completed color transparency will be an almost perfect "natural color" reproduction. As the fundamental-color blue is almost completely ignored in the Kodachrome process, landscapes and other subjects in which blue figures abundantly, are not pleasingly reproduced by the method, but in portraiture the hues and tints are encountered which permit its capabilities to be exhibited to excellent advantage.

This two-color Kodachrome method forms the basis of the work which has been done at the Laboratory on subtractive color cinematography, and some highly accurate apparatus has been designed and constructed for use in printing the corresponding pairs of red- and green-sensation images on the two sides of double-coated positive cine strips. After a color-selection motion picture negative (bearing red- and green-sensation images) has been produced in the camera by known methods, a positive is printed from this in the usual manner, this print being the master-positive from which all subsequent color films are made. To print from this master-positive in such a way that each of its successive pairs of color-sensation images are brought into superimposition on the positive film strip, thus producing a series of images on each side of the film, and both in exact register, would seem to be a most difficult task, but this has been very satisfactorily accomplished at the Laboratory through the use of an optical printer of special design[6]. This optical printer is capable of registering the pairs of complementary images (on opposite sides of the film) very exactly, as we can affirm after having studied various specimens of its work. The printed films are next developed and then bleached by the special bath used in this method, after which they are to be dyed up in two colors. As will readily be inferred, one side of these double-emulsion positive films must be colored red, while the opposite side of the same strip must be colored green, and this must be accomplished without permitting either of the colors to invade the opposite side of the film strip. Early experiments on the best manipulation, when dyeing the double coated films, resulted in the use of an air-tight drum covered with flexible rubber[7], which could be inflated after the film was wound thereon, thus preventing the dye solution from reaching the side of the film which was in contact with the drum. After the outer surface of the film had been appropriately dyed and then dried, it was again wound upon the drum with the undyed side outwards, and again submitted to a dye bath of the requisite (complementary) color. This method of coloring the double-emulsion positive films was, according to Dr. Mees, quite successful, but has been replaced by the much more direct method of running the film positives in contact with rollers saturated with the requisite dye solutions, which is similar to the practice of the Pathé concern in the preparation of their stencil colored cinefilms. In the room where these two-color motion pictures are prepared, all the necessary appliances are installed for the treatment of the films, but the arrangements do not differ essentially from those of the conventional film laboratory, with the exception that the racks, etc., upon which the double-coated films are wound, are so fashioned that they do not come into contact with the center, or picture area, of the film strip.

The two-color subtractive process is not the only method of color cinematography which has been experimented with at the Laboratory, for in 1913 the Kodak Company acquired the American rights to the Gaumont "Chrono-chrome" system of three-color additive cinematography, and equipment for the taking and projecting of colored motion pictures by this method is maintained at the Research Laboratory. In the projection room of the laboratory, which we visit next, a Chrono-chrome projector is installed, along with other interesting apparatus subsequently to be mentioned. As the Gaumont three-color process of cinematography has been often referred to, but seldom described, a brief description of the Chrono-chrome projector may be of interest to optical projectionists.

In the Chrono-chrome system of color cinematography[8], which is an actual three-color system, the pictures are photographed in sets of three, simultaneously, by the use of a triple objective composed of three narrow sections mounted close together. Each of these sections constitutes a complete objective, and the result of mounting them close together is to reduce the stereo-parallax which is always apparent in composite photographic reproductions whose components have been photographed from slightly different viewpoints. A further result of this arrangement is a difference in the size and proportions of the film images from the customary (¾" x 1") dimensions of a cine image. On the Chrono-chrome film there are three pictures within the space (1½") occupied by two images on the conventional cinefilm, although standard sized stock is used, therefore the images have the usual width, 1 inch. The three images, taken simultaneously, comprising each set or cycle in the Chrono-chrome process are, of course, materially different from each other in appearance, since they have been photographed through a tricolor filter set, the selective characteristics of which are well known.

The Chrono-chrome projector, with which these special films are projected, resembles closely the conventional projecting machine, and is essentially a Gaumont "Chrono" projector to which are added the necessary attachments and alterations required by the Gaumont color process. The fundamental differences between the Chrono-chrome projector and an ordinary black-and-white machine are: (1) a triple objective (similar in principle to that used on the camera) and (2) an intermittent movement which draws down 1½ inches of film (corresponding to a set of 3 Chrono-chrome images) at each shift. Although the images on the Chrono-chrome positive are substituted behind the objective in sets of three at each shift of the intermittent, the rate of projection is the same as in ordinary (black-and-white) projection, i. e., sixteen sets of images are projected per second, twice the usual length of film being required to depict a scene of given duration.

Returning now to the optical system of the Chrono-chrome projector, this is provided with a single condenser system, which projects a spot of light upon the projection aperture in the usual manner. Since the spot must cover a space in excess of the height of two ordinary film images, it is of course larger than the spot used in ordinary projection, and the beams from the three pictures before the aperture are sent on to the objectives as parallel beams, by the interposition of three lenses in the path of the condenser beam. These collimating lenses are attached to the tension-gate of the projector, and are in close proximity to the film before the projection aperture. As in the case of the Chrono-chrome camera, the projector used in this process is provided with a triple objective, composed of three separate objectives which have been cut down from a circular to a rectangular form and mounted close together, so that their axial separations are only about two-thirds that which would be the case if the objectives were of full size. This, as has previously been mentioned, reduces the stero-parallax, a certain amount of which is inevitably present in the results by this process, although Dr. Mees assures us that a study of many Chrono-chrome performances serves to show that the amount of parallax in Chrono-chrome exhibitions has been considerably overrated. We quite concur in this, as we saw splendid results by the process, when it was exhibited in New York in 1913.

The special feature of the Chrono-chrome projecting objective[9], resides not in its triple construction, but rather in its mounting, which is provided with means for adjusting the top and bottom components upwards, downwards and sideways with respect to the center component, so that the registration of the separate images upon the screen can be quickly and accurately effected, thus yielding a screen image in full natural colors, even when the film is stationary before the projection aperture. The projecting-filters, which are of well known type, i. e., having narrower transmission-bands than tricolor taking-filters, are attached to the front of the triple objective, each component of which is covered by its appropriate filter. By mounting the projecting-filters in front of the objective they are protected to some extent from the heat of the intense condenser beam, but still the filters deteriorate in time to an appreciable extent.

Besides the Chrono-chrome apparatus, the projection room of the Research Laboratory is also equipped with numerous other important projection devices. There are, for instance, stereopticons and opaque projectors, as well as apparatus for the projection of spectra, color syntheses, and high power micro-photographs. Here is also located the apparatus for the observation and photography of "ultramicroscopic" particles, the study of which goes hand in hand with colloid chemistry. As is generally known, ultramicroscopic particles are particles which are too small to be observed by the ordinary methods of microscopy, but they can be made luminous by their reflection of a highly concentrated beam of light falling upon them, and can thus be discerned as shining specks against a dark ground. The combination of this method of illuminating the fine colloidal particles (by a beam of light at right angles to the axis of collimation) with the ordinary microscope is technically known as the "ultra-microscope." By the use of a special instrument, also installed in the Laboratory's projection room, the absorption curves of small particles can be accurately measured. This device consists of a combined projection microscope and spectrophotometer.

A most interesting and important piece of apparatus, likewise to be found in the projection room, is a precision lens testing bench for the testing of photographic and telescope objectives and other optical systems of small or medium size. This precision lens testing bench is constructed after designs by Dr. P. G. Nutting, who was for some three years on the scientific staff of the Kodak Research Laboratory, and the principle on which testing is done with this apparatus is worthy of more than passing notice. The design of these lens testing benches has long been a subject of study with Dr. Nutting, who had the first one constructed some years ago while at the U. S. Bureau of Standards. The bench at the Research Laboratory is, however, an improvement over his initial design, and was constructed at considerable cost.

Roughly described the Nutting lens bench consists of a three-legged stand having at the top two accurate slotted tracks placed at right angles to one another, thus forming a letter T. Mounted so as to slide in the track forming the top of the T is a post, or pillar, terminating at its upper end in a clamp which holds the objective to be tested. Traveling in the other track (at right angles to the top of the T) is a carriage supporting a microscope tube containing objective, ocular and focussing arrangements, the optical axis of the microscope being horizontal. The principle of the Nutting apparatus is the examination of the aerial image of the minute diffraction pattern, or "antipoint," which represents the image of a luminous and infinitely distant point of light as formed by the objective being tested. The light from an illuminated pin-hole, which is at a distance away equal to twenty-five or thirty-five times the focal length of the objective being tested, may be considered as an infinitely distant source, and the lens testing bench is located in the projection room of the Laboratory in order that the test object (illuminated pin-hole) may be placed at a sufficient distance from the apparatus. The point-source used with the Nutting apparatus is itself an expensive device, which may be roughly described as a constant-deviation spectroscope with a pin-hole ocular, which latter is directed toward the testing bench. In modern lens testing, the residual chromatism (scondary spectrum) of an objective is always measured, as are also the differences between the oblique corrections and the central corrections for several colors. It is, accordingly, an advantage to be able to use a testing light of any required spectral color, which is readily effected by this arrangement. As the luminous point used for testing is derived from a spectroscope, the light is always of some pure and definite spectral hue, i. e., monochromatic, and by rotating the C.D. prism any desired band (or color) of the spectrum can be made to issue from the pin-point source.

Returning now to the actual testing of objectives with the Nutting apparatus, it will be readily apparent that if an objective is in position for testing, and focussed upon the distant point of light, the actual image of that point of light, formed at the focus of the objective, will be so small as to be practically if not entirely imperceptible to the unaided eye. Moreover, physical optics shows that the image of the distant luminous point as formed by the objective, will not be a geometrical point, but will be a diffraction-disc, or antipoint, comprising a bright central portion surrounded by alternating bright and dark rings of rapidly diminishing intensity. Here then is where the microscope comes into play, for it is moved close up to the focal-plane of the objective under test, and focused upon the diffraction pattern which the objective has produced as a representation of the bright point test-object. No ground-glass or other screen is used to receive the image formed by the objective, this being unnecessary as it is a real image and can be picked up in the air by the objective of the observing microscope. A well-known formula demonstrates that the resolving power of an objective is a function of angular aperture, and that decreasing the angular aperture also reduces the resolving power of an objective, i. e., reduces its ability to separate fine details which are exceedingly close to one another. The effect, upon resolving power, of decreasing the angular aperture can be beautifully shown on the Nutting bench, where, if one starts with the sharply focused diffraction-disc formed by a small telescope objective and then gradually decrease the aperture of this objective, the sharply delineated diffraction disc (and its surrounding rings) becomes more and more indistinct and commences to spread out in the form of a blur-circle, or disc of confusion, showing that the resolution would be totally destroyed at the reduced apertures, owing to the overlapping of adjacent discs in the image.

Judging M. P. Exposures

WHAT is it that makes the photographic impression on a motion picture negative film? It is not the light in the sky, but it is the portion of the light that is reflected back from the object into the camera, and this varies to far greater extent than most people realize.

The light reflected back from an open sea scene is about two hundred times stronger than that reflected from pictures in the woods. Experts after years of practice realize these differences and will change their stops accordingly to take care of this condition. This is the most difficult matter to master.

A picture of a white building, for instance, without heavy shadows, would require a certain exposure, while if the building were partly in the shade it would require a longer exposure. If you took the north wall of the same building it would require a still greater exposure; and so on with the varying subjects.

When there is snow on the ground most people are at a loss to know just what exposure to give, and many under expose such pictures, allowing in some indifferent way for the reflected light from the snow, the result being the lack of details in the darker or shadowed portions of the picture.

The second cause of error is: many assume that each larger stop cuts the time required for the exposure in half. While this is true from stops f 8 to f 32, it is not true for the larger stops.

Third: Men often become quite proficient in their work in a certain locality, like New York or Chicago, but if they travel south to Florida or Texas they often find it takes some little time to know just how to handle the increased light; or if they go up into the northern part of the United States or Canada, they fall down again in their work, until they become accustomed to the weaker light.

An exposure meter is a great aid to most any photographer if used correctly. Some meters are more difficult of operation than others, and some meters do not seem to give the desired or necessary information for taking the usual subjects. The Harvey Motion Picture Exposure Meter covers all these varying points, is easily read, and even allows for differences in cranking speeds and different shutter settings, and for all stops. While this meter has only been put on the market in the last few weeks, it has had the endorsement of some of the best workers in the country, and it will be found a great aid to those interested in the taking of motion pictures of exterior subjects.

The Motion Picture Organist

AS a result of the sudden demand for theatre organs, a new profession has been created, that of the "Motion Picture Organist." Opportunities in this field are numerous; the requirements are sufficient to tax the abilities of the most accomplished musicians, and while the demand upon one's time and labor is rigorous, those who are engaged in this work find it extremely fascinating if they take it at all seriously.

The successful organist must, first of all, understand his instrument thoroughly that he may have an intelligent conception of its tonal resources; a practical knowledge of its mechanism is indeed a "present help in time of trouble" and is well worth taking pains to acquire. The theatre organ must be in working condition at all times, and the organist who is helpless to remedy little mishaps in cases of emergency will find himself often in an unhappy position. He must have a technique equal to an acceptable performance of the many different forms and varied styles of music that should constitute the library of every motion picture musician. The ability to improvise is an asset and can often be employed with good effect; in fact, it is frequently the only logical course to follow when one theme must be adapted to a series of short scenes that differ in intensity of action, or perhaps to support a dramatic climax. To do this in a manner that will carry conviction, one must be possessed of a vivid imagination, a keen sense of fitness and a sympathetic insight into the spirit of the subject on the screen.

The subject matter of motion picture productions is so varied and the development often so complex that it is sometimes exceedingly difficult to adapt a program that will fit. When the numbers to be played for a picture have been selected, it will be found that each piece will have to be timed to the action and arranged in consecutive order with cues for each entrance noted, or better memorized. The "timing" of a piece may require an alteration of its tempo or its form, or both; but here we have a grave question of expedience and one which challenges serious consideration; suffice it for the present to say that no liberties should be taken with any music that is not in accordance with good taste. What we mean by good taste and expedience in this connection will have to be reserved for discussion in a separate article.

The motion picture organist should have an extensive repertoire, collected from many sources, and ought to be able to play from memory many folk tunes, hymn tunes, national airs, dances and characteristic pieces. The opera furnishes a great wealth of good, useful material from which to draw, and selections from the popular musical comedies will be found peculiarly fitting to a certain type of the lighter pictures.

There is much among the classics of piano literature that can be played on the organ and many classic and modern songs arranged effectively. The slow movements of Beethoven's sonatas are excellent for serious pictures, and when pure and lofty sentiment is to be expressed; they have a touch of the heroic that is an ideal support to a noble character. There is abundant opportunity for the conscientious organist to play good music with the pictures, and there are many sources from which to obtain it; standard overtures, ballets, operas, cantatas and oratorios, songs sacred and folk songs of all nations, and organ music in all forms except that of severe contrapuntal character. The writer has used organ sonatas and suites, also various incidental compositions such as by Gaston Borch, Sol. P. Levy, M. L. Lake, Minot, Kiefert, etc., with good effect. As to the popular music of the most trivial and raggy sort, it should be avoided, except, perhaps for silly, slapstick comedy where nothing of any musical worth would be appropriate. However, the less of it the better. The requirements of the picture will have to decide.

There is no doubt that the calling of the motion picture organist will take its place among the most respected professions, for it offers splendid exercise for the best of talents, and musicians who have a lively imagination and a capacity for hard work will find "playing the movies" a most interesting and most remunerative vocation.

Musical Review of Latest Compositions

1—The Carl Fischer Mammoth Orchestra Collection, compiled and arranged by M. L. Lake. This is the book which enables you to play any college or home song, hymn, patriotic air or favorite melody of any country, race or creed on earth. No matter what they may ask, no matter from what country, if you have this great collection you have the melodies.

2—"The Dansant," Tone Poem by Al Moquin. A catchy, semi-popular number, which never fails to stir an audience. Excellently suited for practically any programme and its fine arrangement makes it doubly attractive for small-sized organizations. Very easy. (Carl Fischer edition.)

3—"The Miracle of Love," a ballad composed by Frank W. McKee. (Published by G. Schirmer.)

4—"Amerinda," Intermezzo by Lee Orcan Smith. A beautiful 2/4 Allegretto Grazioso Movement. (Leo Feist edition.)

5—"When Shadows Fall." Adapted from the famous song arranged for orchestra by Theo Bendix and published by the McKinley Music Co. Most appropriate for a love theme.

6—"Colonia Overture," by Wm. C. O'Hare. This number has all the characteristics of an operatic overture, but is easy with the 1st violin part in the first position. It presents much variety and great brilliancy. (Oliver Ditson edition.)

7—"May Dreams," another of the melodious Gaston Borch numbers in a very attractive arrangement. (Published by Belwin, Inc., 701 Seventh Ave., New York City.)

8—"Sinister Theme," one of the best Mysteriosos ever published. It is composed by Sol. P. Levy and published by Belwin, Inc.

9—Patriotic Songs of all nations. A collection published by G. Schirmer of 87 national hymns and patriotic airs representing 104 countries, compiled and arranged by Gustav Hinrichs. Aside from its value as a novelty and as a handy and useful adjunct to the library of every orchestra leader, this collection makes a particularly strong appeal at this time when the patriotic hymns of the world are not only symbols of loyalty and devotion but also a source of keen inspiration. Be prepared to play the National Hymn of any country on request.

10—Russian Dance, by M. Glinka. This is a characteristic and very lively composition in 3/4 time, introducing sleigh bells. (Oliver Ditson edition.)

Splendid New Orleans Theatre Is Opened

LIBERTY theatre, New Orleans, laying claim to being the finest motion picture theatre in the South, and representing, under present prices an expenditure of $350,000, was formally opened on July 2 with a pretentious program. "Over the Top," Guy Empey's war picture, was the chief screen feature, the showing of which was preceded by instrumental and vocal selections and a series of magnificent tableaux, indicative of the spirit of the photodrama. The first day's receipts were given entirely to the Red Cross and several of the loge seats were sold for $25, which is believed to be the highest price ever paid for a motion picture entertainment.

Liberty theatre has been built with deliberation and great care by the Boehringer Amusement Company, under the watchful eye of Manager Ernst Boehringer, whose hobby has been to erect a motion picture theatre that is as nearly as possible perfect in all of its appointments. He has succeeded admirably to judge by the commendation of the public after visiting the new playhouse. The theatre is constructed of steel and concrete and is absolutely fire-proof. It is finished in pressed brick and terra cotta, the front being surmounted by a heroic figure of Liberty.

The distinctive features of the theatre are the straight throw from the projection booth to the screen from a fire-proof and completely isolated operators' room beneath the balcony. This room is much more than a mere projection booth. It is fitted as a complete work room and is supplied with every appliance that may be necessary for use during a show. This room is cooled by an independent fan system and remarkable for its comfort for the operator. The screen is the largest in use in the South, and it has been so accurately fitted that the picture is given an added value on that account.

The lobby of the Liberty is finished in white marble and the broad stairway leading to the balcony and the foyer is of the same material. The foyer is sumptuously furnished and is flanked by ladies' rest room and men's lounging room. Especial attention has been paid to the furnishings of these rooms and they are notable for their simple and refined elegance. A broad sweep of stairs rises from the foyer to the balcony where the seats are arranged with especial attention to roominess and comfort as they are on the ground floor. The lifts are lighted by subdued lights eliminating the danger of stumbling. The theatre seats 1,500, and could easily have been made to seat 200 more had the ordinary space between seats in the best theatres been considered adequate and the aisle spaces sufficient.

Manager Boehinger has arranged the aisles so that no more than three persons are required to arise to allow passage to the seats in the middle of the longest rows, and in most cases even this will not be necessary. There is an abundance of room between the rows of seats so that it is impossible for careless patrons to use the seats in front of them for a knee rest.

The theatre is cooled by the most elaborate system of Typhoon fans yet installed in any public building in the South. No restrictions whatever were placed on the contracts but instead it was stipulated that every portion of the theatre should be made cool and comfortable under any and all conditions. This has been accomplished, and the fans have been so arranged that the currents counter thus dispensing with strong drafts of wind and the excessive noise that is sometimes an objection to too strong a ventilation. The acoustics of the theatre are perfect.

The interior decorations are beautiful and distinctive. There is a richness and softness of color that is most attractive without in any sense being cheap or gaudy. The mural decorations and allegorical paintings were executed by Signor Rosai, an eminent Italian artist, and they are the subject of favorable comment. The theatre is lighted by elaborate chandeliers and hidden banks of lights. It is liberally provided with fire escapes, and if there is anything lacking that would contribute to the attractiveness of the house or the pleasure of its patrons, Manager Boehringer has not yet discovered it.

Springfield Five-Cent Houses to Raise

IT IS understood that all theatres now operating at five cents admission in Springfield will raise to ten cents on or about the first week in August. It has been customary to charge this price at state fair time, and as the big event comes early this year and lasts twice as long as usual, the managers think the public will be educated to pay the increased admission by the time it is all over.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Vitagraph News Bits

Antonio Moreno, who recently arrived on the West Coast to make pictures for the Vitagraph Company, began work at the Western studios this week on a subject, the title of which has not been announced. Carol Halloway is to play opposite Mr. Moreno and James Hore will direct.

David Smith is directing Hedda Nova and Frank Glendon in a five-reel O. Henry story known as "A Matter of Mean Elevation."

The Earl Williams company, under the direction of Thomas Mills, and with Grace Darmond playing the lead opposite Williams, expects to have their present subject, "The Man from Brodney's," completed by the first of the coming week. This is said to be the most expensive and elaborate picture produced by the Vitagraph company in some time, and a feature of the photoplay will be massive sets and scenes showing hundreds of extra people.

The Bill Duncan "A Fight for a Million" serial company is now completing the thirteenth chapter, and the first episode of the serial was released in Los Angeles this week. The serial will be shown at the Pantages theatres in the California territory.

Robert Bradbury and company, including Patricia Palmer, are at work on a Wolfville story, title of which has not been made known; and the two comedy companies are at work, Montgomery and Rock, under the direction of J. A. Howe, just completing a beach picture, and Larry Semon is creating thrills on house tops and buildings for his present laugh provoker.

At the Ince Plant

Henry B. Walthall has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to play the feature part in the screen adaptation of the novel by Louis Joseph Vance titled, "False Faces," which is to be a special attraction for the Paramount or Artcraft program. The story depicts another episode in the life of "Lone Wolf," the character made famous by this author. The screen version was prepared by J. G. Hawks. The supporting cast has not been decided upon, but Mr Ince means to make it the most notable ever assembled for one picture.

Dorothy Dalton has returned from New York and has begun work on her next Ince-Paramount subject, which is from the pen of H. H. Van Loan, picturized for the screen by C. Gardner Sullivan. R. William Neill will direct, and Bert Seibel, formerly with Goldwyn, has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince to assist Director Neill in the filming of future Dalton subjects.

Simultaneously with the release of the Thomas H. Ince-Paramount subject starring Charles Ray, titled "The Claws of the Hun," Mr. Ince and Victor Schertzinger, Ray's director, have completed a musical composition apropos with the story which is being called "I'm Giving You to Uncle Sam." Mr. Ince is responsible for the lyrics. The song was rendered on the organ by Jesse Crawford at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre in Los Angeles, where the photoplay was shown this week.

Universal Newsettes

Tod Browning has begun the filming of "The Magnificent Jacala," a Universal photoplay in which Priscilla Dean will be starred. The screen version is from a novelette by Louis Winter, and was prepared for the screen by William E. Wing. The story is that of a rich girl who, after being told she is too homely to gain much in life, overcomes all by her will power and personality. The supporting cast has not been made known.

Within a few days Carmel Myers will begin work in "The Duchess of Dark Entry," under the direction of Paul Powell. Miss Myers will have the role of a girl brought up in a small fishing village, who believes she is descended from the nobility. A woman seeking for an entrance into society, adopts the girl, thinking her a real duchess, and the complications that arise after it is learned who the girl really is, are said to create some very entertaining situations for this comedy-drama. The entire cast has not been selected. The story is from the pen of Perley Poore Sheehan, and Hope Loring prepared the continuity.

Ruth Clifford will next be seen in a Universal photoplay which is to be titled "The Bargain True," a story by Nalbro Bartley, which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post. Elsie Jane Wilson will be in charge of the direction.

Mary MacLaren is at work on "The Vanity Pool," under the direction of Ida May Park, while Director Dillon will soon complete "The Doings of Diana," which will have Edith Roberts as the star.

"The Man Who Wouldn't Shoot" will be the next Harry Carey-Universal Western. Jack Ford will be in charge of the direction. It is the story of a man who is called a coward because he will not shoot, when in reality he is only waiting until the proper time arrives.

After having completed half of the filming of the next G. M. Anderson five-reel Western photoplay, it was found the work completed did not come up to the standard set by this company, so the film is being remade entirely. The subject is titled "Son-of-a-Gun." Besides Mr. Anderson's supporting cast, which includes such well known players as Joy Lewis, who is playing opposite the star; Fred Church, in the heavy role; Harry Todd and Paul Wilkinson, between fifty and seventy-five extra people have been working during the week, among them being forty mounted cowboys.

Fox Studio Doings

William Farnum and company of Fox players, under the direction of Frank Lloyd, returned to the studio this week from the Grand Canyon where they went to make scenes for "The Rainbow Trail," adapted for the screen from the Zane Grey novel. In the party who went to the canyon besides Director Lloyd and the star, were Ann Forrest, William Burress, Mary Mersh, Billy Nye, Bill Harrison, players; Scotty Dunlap, assistant director, and Billy Foster, cameraman. Although July 4 was Mr. Farnum's birthday, the company worked all day, but in the evening the company had a big celebration, with birthday cake and all the trimmings. Members of the company presented the star with a vibrator and all its different parts.

Theda Bara and her company, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, are still busy with the filming of "The Little She Devil," and Jewel Carmen and Gladys Brockwell have completed their subjects under the direction of Robert Thornby and Edward J. LeSant, respectively, are now enjoying vacations.

The Tom Mix-Fox Western subject known under the title of "Mysterious Logan," has been changed to "Mr. Logan, U. S. A." This company will start work on a new subject within a few days.

The F. P.-Lasky Studio

This is a very quiet week at the Famous Players-Lasky Studio in Hollywood, owing to the fact that all companies working at the present time are away on location.

Cecil B. De Mille has started work on his next picture, which is from an original story by Jeanie MacPherson and is described as a photoplay based on the psychology of war, and not a battle picture. Bryant Washburn and Florence Vidor have the leading roles.

Fred Stone, under the direction of Donald Crisp, is well in the filming of "Johnnie Get Your Gun," adapted from the stage play of the same name. In this picture Mr. Stone plays the same part for the screen as that taken by the stage star, Louis Dennison, which is referred to as Mr. Dennison's greatest stage success. Ella Hall is playing the feminine lead.

Ethel Clayton, who recently arrived on the coast, is nearly the completion of her first Western-made Paramount subject, which is an Americanized version of the stage play, "Leah Klescha." Beulah Marie Dix prepared the screen adaptation and the photoplay has been titled "The Girl Who Came Back." Elliot Dexter has the lead opposite Miss Clayton, and Robert Vignolia is in charge of the direction.

Lila Lee, having completed her first screen subject, is having a ten-days' vacation, and the same is true of the Wallace Reid company. Stories are now in preparation for these stars. Vivian Martin, who has been vacationing at Lake Louise, in the Canadian mountains, is expected back at the studio very shortly, and will immediately resume work on her arrival.

H. Whitman Bennett, assistant to Vice-President Jesse L. Lasky at the New York office, arrived in Los Angeles Sunday for a stay of a week, which he will spend at the Hollywood studios. This is Mr. Bennett's first trip to the coast since taking up the duties of assistant to Mr. Lasky.

May Allison, under the direction of Wilfred Lucas, is progressing very rapidly in the filming of "The Return of Mary," adapted by George D. Baker, from the stage play of the same name. Darrell Foss is playing the lead opposite Miss Allison.

Tom Buckingham, well known in the West Coast film colony and who has been playing before the camera for the past two years, has been engaged by the Triangle to play juvenile roles.

Gus Peterson, cameraman for the Triangle, has been accepted by the government, and will attend the U. S. School of Cinematography at Columbia University. Mr. Peterson will leave for New York on July 17.

The two subjects completed this week are titled "The Price of Applause," featuring Jack Livingstone, supported by Claire Anderson and Joe King, and "Cactus Crandall," written by and starring Roy Stewart.

Director Christy Cabanne and company have completed all interior scenes for "The Mayor of Filbert," and it is expected the end of the week will see the completion of this film. Director Cabanne has already begun preparations for his next super-production, which is now known under the title, "When Bearcat Went Dry," adapted from the novel of the same name.

Albert Parker is still busy with the filming of "Shifting Sands," which features Gloria Swanson, supported by Joe King and Harvey Clark in prominent roles. The company is this week working on a large set which covers thhe entire space of one of the big glass studios, and represents a fashionable modiste shop.

S. J. Warshawsky, who has been connected with the advertising and publicity department of Triangle Distributing Corporation at their New York office, has arrived on the coast and is now working in the publicity department at the Culver City studios.

Here and There

But two companies are working at the Brunton studios in Hollywood this week, they being the Louise Glaum and Bessie Barriscale units who are producing subjects for Paralta.

Louise Glaum is nearing the completion of her present subject, known under the working title of "A Law Unto Herself," which is being directed by Wallace Worsley. Francis Paget, author of the story, has arrived from Roundup, Montana, and is spending his time at the studio watching the filming. This is the first screen story by this author. Jack Cunningham prepared the continuity, and Sam de Grasse and Ed Coxen have the other principal roles in the subject. As soon as this photoplay is completed Miss Glaum will begin work on one of four subjects which are now under consideration.

"The Heart of Rachel," adapted from the novel of the same name, is the new Paralta subject for Bessie Barriscale. Howard Hickman is in charge of the direction, but the entire supporting cast has not been selected. Jack Cunningham prepared the continuity.

At the Metro studios in Hollywood, Bert Lytell has completed half of the work of filming his next subject titled, "Unexpected Places," under the direction of E. Mason Hopper. In this photoplay Lytell takes the role of a newspaper reporter, who, after witnessing an attack on an English lord in America who carries secret government dispatches by a gang of German spies, takes the injured man to a hospital, secures the valuable documents and from then on impersonates the Englishman. His adventures in carrying out orders and delivering the dispatches lead him to many unexpected places. This screen play is from a story by Frank R. Adams and adapted by Albert Le Vino. Rhea Mitchell plays the lead opposite the star, and Rosemary Theby plays the role of a French adventuress.

Hollywood Hookum

JULY 27, 1918 NEWS MORE NEWS

"HOLLYWOOD HOOKUM" JUST TO PROVE THE SURFACE HAS NOT BEEN SCRATCHED

One of the exhibitors in a small town near Hollywood, only has one projecting machine, but nevertheless he is enterprising and carries advertising slides to entertain the patrons while his operator changes reels. Recently he ran "Joan the Woman," the first reel of which ended with the sub-title: "Joan Is Not Dead. Her Memory Still Lives in the Hearts of Her Countrymen." Then on to the screen came the slides, "If you don't believe it, take a bite into one of Murphy's Juicy Steaks."

Tempee, Arizona, has a theatre that is used part of the time as a roller skating rink, and that the place may be quickly transformed from an auditorium into a rink, the manager has the projecting room on casters. Everybody who passes the projecting booth, touches it and moves it a little different. In the middle of every reel, it is necessary to shut off the light and roll the projecting booth back into position, so that it will shoot straight at the screen.

"The machine that I purchased of you for my movin' picture house is doing excellent work," writes an exhibitor to a Los Angeles equipment and supply house. "The projector runs so cool now I have found it unnecessary to keep the fan on the front, so I have taken it off."

One of the prints of "The Kaiser" used in Hollywood was badly worn, and several of the sprocket holes were torn. This was true in a scene showing the Kaiser sitting in a chair registering nervousness. Just prior to this scene was a sub-title which read: "William of Hohenzollern surrounded by the mightiest army in the world was afraid." When the bad piece of film came into the machine it stuck, and jiggled the entire frame up and down which added to the nervous registration given by the Kaiser, whereupon a little boy in the center of the house yelled out:

"What's the matter, Bill, you losing your nerve?"

Summer weather.

Clara Williams is seeing Broadway back East.

Jimmie Quirk, of "Photoplay Magazine," is still in town.

At this writing Mary Pickford is still looking for work.

Nell Shipman has moved to the beach where she will teach the fish to swim.

Margery Wilson is the French teacher for the Hollywood training camp boys.

Just for a change of scenery Roy Stewart began work on a western subject.

Bill Hart is back at work after spending a two weeks' vacation reading scripts.

Ben Turpin is trying to invent a lens that will photograph his eyes on the square.

Pretty warm for the Fourth.

H. O. Davis is in our town.

Fred C. Quimby was in our midst.

Kathleen Connors' name was formerly "O'Connor."

Director Jack Conway has got it too—Kleig Eyes.

Ferdinand Zecca is sojourning amid the sunshine and flowers.

Harry McCoy is vamping with Bell Andhowell at Mack Sennett's place.

Charley Murray, fearing the public would not consider him Irish, went to the trouble the other day of putting on a crepe hair beard of a reddish hue.

Roy H. McCray, Vitagraph technical manager, advices us he is still with Vitagraph, and spells his name as given above. Roy is not a publicity hound.

Mary Anderson has built a dog house, and it is now the home of her two pups. It is, to use the film term, a "replica" of the original, being a miniature of her own bungalow.

Theda's bear has arrived, from Camp Lewis. To the uninitiated HOOKUM readers an explanation note is necessary. The boys of Company I, 364th Infantry, gave Miss Bara this bear.

When it is recalled that Charley Chaplin is of the draft age, the title selected for his next subject—"Shoulder Arms"—may be said to be suggestive of Charley's future intentions.

There is a bandit in our midst, and his first picture is titled "The Woman in the Dugout." The bandit's name is Al Jennings, so we may expect a little of the old train robbery stuff shortly.

Charley Ray was seen going out to plow the other day, and inasmuch as his next release has been titled "String Beans," it is safe to predict that Charley anticipates breaking into the war garden game.

Bryant Washburn received a letter from an Iowa faness, breaking the news to him gently that he had the most perfect dimple in the world, all of which has caused him to begin the cultivation of said dimple.

It thundered this week, so we are now living in the expectation of receiving a number of stories of native daughters in the films being badly frightened. (Fair warning to P. A.'s: We have just emptied our waste basket.)

Polly Moran threatens to attend an exhibitors' luncheon in Los Angeles and sing. (To those unfamiliar with Polly's past career, it may be said that Mack Sennett discovered her doing a single warbling act on Orpheum time.)

Claire DuBrey being interviewed by HOOKUM states, "the time of the made-overnight star has about vanished, and the day of the artist with real ability has arrived," from which we glean that the industry is not still in its infancy.

Margarita Fisher broke into the dare deviltry list when she slid down a pipe from the third story of a building and alighted on the top of a passing taxicab. Ed. Sloman is responsible for the taxi passing just at the right time. He was the director.

Al Selig comes through with this one. Jewel Carmen played her ukulele on a mountain road after dark, and three mountain lions came into the glare of the headlights and just lolled about and listened all the time that she played. Then when the engine was fixed and the ukuling stopped, the three mountain lions slunk away, and now it is generally known that Selig is developing an imagination that he may become a scenario writer. Stranger things have happened.

Ben Turpin attempted to look straight the other day, and strained his colored glasses, whereupon he was accused of having Kleig Eyes, but his attending physician insisted this should not be the case, inasmuch as rays of light travel only in straight lines, and consequently could not have effected both of Ben's eyes or glasses in the same manner the same day. The injury to Ben's glasses did not prevent him from his continuous vaudeville performance at the Sennett lot for a single moment.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

May Allison, In Metro's "A Successful Adventure"

The Edith Day picture, "L'Air," will be produced by Carl Carlton at the Wharton's studio in Ithaca, N. Y. Harry Revier will direct.

George Le Guere, now playing the lead in "The Birth of a Race," has only one camera side for the time being after a swim at Long Beach a few Sundays ago. He was washed up against one of the posts and had an ear ripped so that ten stitches had to be taken.

Jane Grey, who took Marjorie Rambeau's place in "Eyes of Youth" for a time this winter, is now playing the feminine lead in Jack Noble's picture, "The Birth of a Race."

Tom Cushing, well-known scenario writer, has joined the Y. M. C. A. overseas service and will have charge of various committees for entertaining the soldiers. At the present moment he is recovering from his various inoculations.

Peggy Shaner just received a ring from an officer in France made from a piece of aluminum taken from a captured German plane and set with a piece of exquisite stained glass picked up near a shelled cathedral.

In a bouffant gown of brocaded satin, hair powdered and piled in curls high on her head, Elsie Ferguson is a bewitching sight at the Louis Sixteenth garden party in "The Danger Mark." The whole scene is most effective with its glimpses of a stately minuet, of cavaliers and ladies strolling in the soft summer darkness, of gay groups around little tables.

Frederick Truesdell, last seen on the screen with Emily Stevens in "A Man's World," is planning to return to the legitimate stage next month in a Faversham production, "Allegiance."

One of many interesting facts about Mme. Nazimova is that she learned to speak English in exactly four months. When she was appearing in America for the first time in a little theatre on the East Side every one flocked there to see her. Nazimova heard that her audiences were saying, "If she could only speak English." "I shall learn," was her reply, and four months later she was appearing on Broadway in "Hedda Gabler." Mme. Nazimova is now filming "L'Occident" at the Metro studio under the direction of Albert Capellani.

In "The Prussian Cur," Fox's latest war picture, Capt. Horst von der Goltz plays an important part. He not only appears in the picture but furnished most of the material on which the picture is based and assisted in the supervising of the picture. His career as a secret agent of the Kaiser for ten years finally ended in his exposure of the secret methods of Berlin to the United States Government.

Virginia Pearson was selected by popular vote to speak at the recent dedication of the Israel Orphanage Asylum in New York City. She completely won the hearts of her thousands of admirers, men, women and children, by the eloquence, the pathos and the humor of what she said. Ambassador Gerard, who was present, complimented her upon her speech, as did Nathan Straus. Miss Pearson is one of the screen stars who finds time to attend personally to her charitable affairs and amply deserves the place she has won in the hearts of the American people.

Frank Reicher is to be Louise Huff's second director for World pictures. He has recently arrived from the West Coast where he directed Viola Dana last in "The Only Road." Mr. Reicher's own career on the legitimate stage is worth more than a passing glance as he has played leading parts in many of the most popular Broadway productions, opposite such stars as Mrs. Fiske, Grace George, Annie Russell, Julia Marlowe, etc.

Last week a mob was needed for a scene in the World picture, "The Road to France," and the casting director found no trouble in securing it. The work or fight law had just gone into effect, and crowds of the lounge lizard idlers were ferrying across to see what the studios had to offer since they had heard that motion pictures were considered essential.

Dorothy Green is playing opposite Montagu Love in "Pirate's Gold." She is said to have been born in Russia, and to have come to the United States at an early ago, where her first stage appearance was as a child in the Metropolitan ballet.

Pearl White is writing her "life story," with the avowed intention of getting away from the press agent stuff. It will probably be published in book form first, then as a serial in one of the fan magazines, and finally as a newspaper serial co-incidental with the release of "The Lightning Raider."

Yeoman Marguerite Clark played hostess to two sailors, survivors of the torpedoed "President Lincoln" at the Famous Players Fort Lee Studio not long ago. She allowed them to watch a few scenes being made for "Out of the Clear Sky," and then showed them the inner workings of the studio.

Alice Brady, whose will power in saving a very gorgeous bathing suit for a picture instead of wearing while swimming with a party of friends at Long Beach, has been extolled by many of the press, has received her reward. When the scene requiring the bathing suit was actually being filmed just off Babylon, L. I., several aviators attracted by the crowd circled about just over head to watch proceedings. How much more satisfactory it must have been to give them the privilege of seeing this costly marvel of beach raiment than to give that same privilege to a mere Long Beach crowd.

A little Pomeranian dog, Mrs. Hashimura Togo by name, presented to Bessie Barriscale by her husband, Howard Hickman, as an anniversary present, has been immediately given a job in Miss Barriscale's new picture, "A Wife's Conscience." In it he is the property of Baby Mary Jane Irving, and ranks with two dolls, "Ignatz Mouse" and "Krazy Kat" by name.

David Kirby has the honor of having appeared in every Barriscale production since "Within the Cup." His previous life was quite Jack Londonish. He came of actor stock, started out selling newspapers, educated himself without ever actually going to school, became editor on various newspapers in San Francisco, got into politics, did exhibition flying, diving and parachute jumping on the side, wrote a few essays and a volume of maxims, and finally landed in the pictures.

Sundays are big days for Jane and Katherine Lee. They dash from one camp to another doing clever little stunts for the amusement of the men who consider them among their best entertainers. Last Sunday, for example, they were at Camp Upton in the morning, and in town in the afternoon helping Adele Rowland stage her benefit at the Astor theatre.

..Lawrence Grant, Kaiser of Kaisers, has started on the Orpheum Circuit in his vaudeville sketch, "Efficiency." He will travel from coast to coast, going first to New Orleans, and then working out and up to Winnepeg.

An illuminating proof of David Wark Griffith's greatness of soul is revealed in a recent copy of the New York "Tribune," under the Advisor column. Some time ago an irate individual who considered himself mistreated by the management of the theatre, at which "Hearts of the World" is being shown, wrote to the "Tribune" airing his grievances. The matter was brought to Mr. Griffith's attention, and he immediately wrote an apology to the man for the carelessness of the management, and inclosed his personal check for two dollars, the price of the ticket in question. As the "Tribune" commented, "Only a big man could speak with such humility of his duty to the public upon whom we depend for a living."

John Sunderland, aviator hero of "To Hell With the Kaiser," left last week for West Virginia, where he will play leading man in a big coal picture for Educational Films, titled "When the Giant Wakes."

Edith Day has been particularly appreciated by the many aviators who have seen her in "Going Up," that really funny musical comedy featuring Frank Craven. Many more than the few who have been passing through New York City will soon have a chance to see her as she will have a leading part in a picture to be called "L'Air" produced by a new film company.

Katherine Kavanugh is writing the continuity for "Five Thousand an Hour," the George Randolph Chester story, soon to be produced by Metro, with Hale Hamilton in the leading role. In discussing it Miss Kavanaugh said that her aim would be to follow the original just as closely as possible, even using bits of the conversation for titles.

June Mathis, of Metro scenario fame, is ensconced in a new office boasting two full-size windows, wicker furniture, cretonne hangings, and all sorts of esthetic aids to inspiration.

Babbie Fenington, casting director for Metro, received a hurry call the other day from Ralph Ince for two Jewish youngsters, both exaggerated types, for "Our Mrs. McChesney." So Babbie hied herself to the East Side, and out of the motley swarms of humanity corraled two of the Jewiest little Jews imaginable. She raced them up to the studio in a taxi to their great delight, and found that they could act their parts as well as look them.

Twede Dan, the Jester comedy man, gave every one a good time at Brighton Beach while there on location by swimming out to a schooner anchored a mile off the shore, and doing all sorts of diving stunts from the masts, until Bill Steiner, the director, put a stop to this risk of life and limb on the part of his star comedian.

Corrine Griffith, last seen in "Love Watches," is introducing Nenette and Rintintin, the two most popular little people in Paris to-day, to America. They are twin amulets credited with protecting from harm all people who possess them. They were sent to Miss Griffith by a French soldier, who saw her in "Who Goes There." It is quite appropriate that Miss Griffith was working on "Love Watches" when she received this present, as it is from the famous French play, directed by Henri Houry, a French actor-producer veteran of the Somme, who is directing for Vitagraph while waiting to get back to the battle line.

Constance Talmadge in Popular Stage Success, "A Pair of Silk Stockings"

(Select Five-Reel Production)

Do you remember the success "A Pair of Silk Stockings" had on the stage a few seasons ago. It went over with a bang. Because of its popularity on the stage and because it contains excellent material for the silent drama, the Select Pictures Corporation has had a screen version adapted by Edith M. Kennedy and produced it with Constance Talmadge, the talented little sister of Norma, in the leading role. The production was made under the direction of Walter Edwards and has interpreting the supporting roles Harrison Ford, Wanda Hawley, who has been seen in some of Douglas Fairbanks's best pictures; Vera Doria, Florence Carpenter, Thomas Persee, Louis Willoughby, Helen Haskell, L. W. Steers and Robert Gordon. Sam and Mollie Thornhill, husband and wife, are young, very much in love with one another until a decision is to be reached regarding the make of car which they are to purchase. Mollie wants one brand and hubby the other. It's a trifling matter to have a marital quarrel about, but this is just what Mollie and Sam does. And it leads to all sorts of funny situations, as the screen version of this popular stage success will testify when it is shown at the ——— theatre ——— of ——— week. Mollie is obdurate concerning her decision, and Sam, in order to spite her, takes a young woman of questionable character to dine with him, buys her rich gowns and other finery, and leaves the bills in a conspicuous place about the house so that Mollie will discover them. Meantime Mollie purchases the car against Sam's wishes. But you will ask—where does the silk stockings come in? We can't tell you, but will show you at the ——— theatre next ——— night.

Corinne Griffith and Denton Vane in Billie Burke's Success, "Love Watches"

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

A long list of Vitagraph talent is seen in this company's screen version of Billie Burke's former stage success, "Love Watches," a French comedy drama written by R. de Flers and G. Gaillavet. Corinne Griffith and Denton Vane have the featured parts and in support you will see such Vitagraph favorites as Julia Swayne Gordon, Alice Terry, Edward Burns, Florence Deshon, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Charles A. Stevenson, and the twins, Alice and Edna Nash, newcomers to the screen drama, who will be heard from again if they continue the good work which they have turned out in this Vitagraph offering. "Love Watches" was produced under the direction of Henri Houry. If you remember Billie Burke's stage successes, too numerous to mention here, you will recall that "Love Watches" was one of her biggest and it enjoyed a long run on Broadway, which fact is the best testimony of its success. The screen version is equal to the Broadway production in every respect. The scene of the action is laid in and around Paris and deals with society. Jacqueline Cartaret, the part interpreted by Miss Griffith, is pretty and as the Marquise de Juvigny believes, a promising wife for her friend, Ernest Augarde, a rather stupid young fellow who devotes much of his time to writing very unreadable novels. Jacqueline has her own ideas about a husband and in the end marries a dashing young Frenchman and member of the nobility. The comedy situations that arise when Ernest becomes really in earnest in his attempts to win the young wife, even though she be married, are many and brimful of entertainment.

William Desmond and Josie Sedgwick in "Hell's End"—Story of Underworld

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

William Desmond and Josie Sedgwick have the starring roles in a Triangle late production, "Hell's End," written by A. Steve Richardson, scenariorized by Charles J. Wilson, Jr., and produced for the Triangle program under the direction of J. W. McLaughlin. In the supporting cast are Louis Durham, Dorothy Hagar and Charles Dorian. "Hell's End" is the toughest and most notorious den of confidence men and gangsters that one would find in his travels from coast to coast. To this place Mary Flynn, daughter of a millionaire, goes on a slumming expedition with society friends. There she meets Jack Donovan (William Desmond), leader of the gang of gangsters who make this their headquarters. Donovan and Mary had known each other since childhood, but when Jack had drifted into the life of the gangster Mary had lost track of him and he of her until their meeting years later in the "Hell's Den." Their meeting in "Hell's End" arouses in both a certain admiration—hers for nerve and strength of body and his for the polish and refinement of the girl he had not seen since childhood. Louise Glaum in Her Latest Paralta Play, "Wedlock," with All-Star Cast

(Paralta Five-Reel Production)

Louise Glaum, Paralta's popular star, is to appear ——— week on the screen of the ——— theatre in "Wedlock," written by Denison Clift and produced for the Paralta program under the direction of Wallace Worsley. In support of Miss Glaum appear Jack Gilbert, Herschel Mayall, Charles Gunn, Joseph J. Dowling, Beverly Randolph, Leatrice Joy, Harry Archer, Ida Lewis, Clifford Alexander and Aggie Herring. "Wedlock" is one of the most absorbing stories in which Miss Glaum has ever appeared. It is unlike anything she has ever done before because she is not called upon to portray the characteristics of the screen vampire. Through most of the reelage Miss Glaum portrays a straight role, opening in the role of a telephone girl in a large hotel. In this capacity she meets Granger Hollister, son of an aristocratic father and mother whose social aspirations are centered in their efforts to marry their only son to a society bud and their daughter to a member of the nobility. The son has his own ideas on marriage and before the announcement of his wedding to the society bud he persuades Margery, the telephone girl, to marry him. When his mother learns of this, in the language of the street, "there is he— to pay" and after much persuasion, he tells his girl wife that they must part. Years later finds Granger an outcast and escaped convict. The girl wife has been made rich through an interest in a mine. She saves him from the hands of the law after many adventures and they are reunited.

Theda Bara in 1918 Version of "The Two Orphans"—One of Fox's "Big Six"

(Fox Big Six Re-Issue in Five Reels)

William Fox's 1918 version of "The Two Orphans," starring Theda Bara, will be the chief attraction on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. Adolph D'Ennery's famous novel which has been read by the millions in all languages, presents one of the most absorbing stories ever adapted for exhibition on the screen. "The Two Orphans" is one of Miss Bara's best works—one in which she was seen when she made her first bid for the public's favor as a screen actress and one in which she won over the millions of admirers who now pronounce her the greatest exponent of dramatic art as interpreted by the so-called vampire. Jean Southern, who, since her appearance in the role of one of the two orphans in this production, has won the right to star in her own right before the camera, is seen in the part of Louise, the blind orphan. Others in the cast are Herbert Brenon, William E. Shay, Frank Goldsmith, Gertrude Berkeley, E. L. Fernandez, John Daly Murphy, Sheridan Block and Mrs. Cecil Raleigh. "The Two Orphans" was directed by Herbert Brenon, who was responsible for William Fox's production of "The Daughter of the Gods," starring Annette Kellerman, and his own independent production of "The Fall of the Romanoffs." You all know the story of "The Two Orphans" which recounts the adventures of two orphaned girls, one blind, the other a beautiful Parisian type, who are cast in different environments and re-united under unusual circumstances.

"The Hand of Vengeance," Gaumont Serial, of Sherlock Holmes Type—First Episode

(Gaumont Serial—Two Reels)

Are you in the mood for real thrills—the kind that run up the spine when one is reading an account of the adventures of a Sherlock Holmes? If you are, there is one place in town where you can satisfy that craving for thrills. It is the ——— theatre. And the subject that is going to supply the thrills is the new Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," in ten episodes of two reels each. It is wholly unlike any serial you have ever seen. There is something new every minute that the action is being flashed on the screen—new characters, new surroundings, new stunts, new thrills, new everything. There hasn't been anything like it ever shown on the screen before. The story opens with two prospectors who have discovered a rich diamond mine in Africa. They start on their way back to England to finance the proposition and during their travels over the African desert they are lost. One of the men who is the stronger of the two, plans to get rid of the other man so that he may be the sole person interested in the new discovery. The weaker man of the two faints on the desert for the want of water and the other, thinking him dead, attempts to take from him the bag containing specimens of diamonds which they had taken from the mine. The man wakes, and during a struggle which follows, the stronger man of the two, whips out his hunting knife and slashes his partner's hand, leaving him to die on the desert. Years later finds the man who had obtained the diamonds, in London with fortunes at his command, realized from the diamond mine. The partner whom he thought dead turns up and resolves to take back, bit by bit, the fortune that had been stolen from him. Then follows a series of exploits in which the man defrauded, shows the cunning of a Sherlock Holmes in his manipulations to get back the fortune.

TIME SAVERS

You Don't Have to Read Pages to Find What a Picture Is About

IF you use these Ad Talks, you will find that you are saved the trouble of reading through pages of press books on each picture to find what it is all about. Here is the gist of it, told as briefly as possible and at the same time giving you the main elements.

And if you want to tell the story to your patrons just as briefly, you cannot do better to use these as reading notices in your newspaper or program.

Edith Roberts in "The Deciding Kiss"—Miss Roberts' First Starring Vehicle

(Universal Five-Reel Production)

Do you remember the little comedienne who appeared opposite Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran in some of their best comedy sketches on the Universal program? Edith Roberts is the girl we have reference to. If you remember rightly she was "some" comedienne, too, wasn't she? Well, her work in the Lyons-Moran comedies was of such a finished quality that she has been selected by Universal to star in five-reel productions, the first of which is "The Deciding Kiss" to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. "The Deciding Kiss" was written by Ethel M. Kelly with the title, "Turn About, Eleanor." The story told is decidedly different from the comedy sotties in which Miss Roberts has been accustomed to appear on the screen, for she is called upon to furnish a portrayal of the serious and not the frivolous side of life. She is casted in the role of an orphan girl, living with her grandparents in a small Cape Cod village. Knowing that they cannot give their little charge all the advantages of life, the grandparents consent to her adoption by a wealthy New York woman. After a few years in a fashionable finishing school. Eleanor blossoms into a beautiful girl. But she longs for the little Cape Cod village, and there she goes, leaving her sweetheart behind.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons and Teddy Sampson in "Dad's Knockout"—Comedy

(Goldwyn Release in Two Reels)

"Smiling Bill" Parsons' latest contribution to the list of Capitol Comedies, is titled "Dad's Knockout," featuring "Smiling Bill," himself and Teddy Sampson. This sure is a "knockout," whether it be attributed to Dad or some one else. If the patrons of the ——— theatre do not get a laugh out of this one, the management has decided that it is hard to pick a winner. But see this one and verify the judgment of the ——— theatre in booking this one. It is a clean, wholesome sketch in two reels, telling the story of how the son of a wealthy manufacturer falls in love with a chorus girl, and insists upon marrying her irrespective of his father's wishes. The father will have no chorus girl as a daughter-in-law, so he decides to visit the theatre, where she appears as the lead in the chorus, and find out what matter of girl she is. He does so, and before the show has closed the performance Dad falls for the little girl, even harder than his son had fallen. Nor does he stop here. He invites Queenie, for that is the name of Teddy Sampson in this comedy, to the seashore and there is a dip in the surf and general love-making on the beach. But sonny takes a hand in the love-making, and, to the surprise of his dad, informs him that he has been married for a week or more. Dad welcomes his new daughter-in-law with open arms.

"Smiling Bill" Parsons' latest comedy in two reels, featuring himself and Teddy Sampson, is "Dad's Knockout." At the ——— theatre ——— week.

"Fatty and Mabel Adrift," Keystone Comedy Re-issue in Three Reels—Fatty's Best

(S. A. Lynch Enterprise Release)

Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand's best known comedy in which they co-star, "Fatty and Mabel Adrift," in three reels, has been re-edited and released by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., and is to be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. This is one of the old Keystone productions shown for the first time about three years ago. If there are any of you who remember this offering, the management of the ——— theatre has every reason to believe that you will not miss the opportunity of seeing this bunch of laughs the second time. Al St. John, who is seen in all of Fatty's late comedies, has an important role in this production. Fatty is a farmhand working on the farm owned by Mabel's father. Al St. John is the son of the neighboring farmer. He and Fatty are in love with Mabel. The three go for an outing on the beach, and all three decide to take a dip in the surf. Some of the comedy stunts that are shown while this trio of comedians are cavorting on the beach and in the sad sea waves, will call for a laugh-a-minute.

First Episode of Vitagraph's New Serial, "Fight for Millions"—Thrills Galore

(Vitagraph Serial—Two Reels)

"A Fight for Millions," the first episode of which will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, is, without a doubt, the most thrilling exposition of daredevil escapades ever enacted before a camera. You are all acquainted with Bill Duncan's work in the directorial line. Bill handled the megaphone for Vitagraph's "The Fighting Trail," and "Vengeance and the Woman" and Bill is the boy who knows how to put on a serial story for screen presentation and do it right. His latest work in serial form is "A Fight for Millions." It's a corker and there isn't a patron of the ——— theatre who will leave after a showing of one of the episodes who will not come back for the next and the next and so on until the final chapter. Mr. Duncan is the featured player in this as he was in "The Fighting Trail." In support he has Joe Ryan, whose work in "The Fighting Trail" was commended by all. Mr. Duncan's leading lady in "A Fight for Millions" is Edith Johnson, whom you will remember for her excellent work in many Universal productions. This trio of Vitagraph players turn some tricks in this serial that will call for praise from all who witness them. There is action from start to finish. Bill always has some new tricks and stunts up his sleeve and he sure does turn some of them loose in this serial. The story tells of a fight for the millions of a wealthy miner. His daughter, whom he deserted when she was a baby, because he was under the impression that his wife and her mother had been untrue to him, is cited in the miner's will as the principal beneficiary. His nephews are notified that the one who finds her gets a large share of the fortune. Then the fight starts.

The first episode of this stirring serial is titled "The Snare." It will be shown on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week.

Short Subjects in Review

WHY THE WEEKLY DIDN'T GET OVER

The last tragic scene of the feature faded. The fatal blow had been struck, the agent of outraged justice stood ready to make the supreme sacrifice. Whatever the artistic merit or lack of merit of the picture, it had been received with interest and a lack of demonstration that was in itself a tribute to its compelling power.

And then, merging with the last flicker of the final picture came a lively scene of soldiers in camp—the commencement of the News Weekly. They passed in silence—the pianist had not had time to catch up and play the appropriate music, and the audience was still under the spell of the drama. The appearance of the flag brought a few mild handclaps, so scattered over the big house that they could hardly be heard. The pianist made an effort and got out a few bars. And the reel proceeded. Sometimes there would be music, and sometimes dead silence. An especially spirited martial scene, or the flag, would cause a sporadic handclapping. But interest in the reel seemed half-hearted, and it was not till the close, when some remarkable pictures of flying planes were shown—either by good luck or good management without music, that the house seemed to wake up to the fact that they were looking at some of the most stirring events of the most stirring period of the world's history.

Can't you manage better than that, Mr. Exhibitor?

BEAUTY DISCLOSED BY SLOW CAMERA

The feature of the current Bray Pictograph are pictures made with a slow camera for the analysis of motion, a feat thus far performed, we believe, only by Pathe Freres. The subjects are three men gymnasts, who accomplish somersaults and "flip-flaps" in normal and sub-normal time with exceeding grace. This type of picture, because of its unique character and beauty, is always received with interest.

The splendid work being done by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company for the health and happiness of its employes is amply illustrated with scenes taken in the office building that is one of New York's most conspicuous landmarks.

Goodrich Dirt, in the "borrowed" garb of a policeman, gets into a mixup with a baby whom he deserts, after embarrassing experiences, for the baby's attendant. But Spot comes to the rescue and dries, in his own peculiar fashion, the infant's flowing tears.

HOOVERIZING THE ELEPHANTS

Curator Ditmars and the other friends and guardians of our animal friends at the Bronx Zoo are not going to let their charges suffer hunger by reason of "war shortage." But these once-pampered pets must now do their share toward increasing their own food supply. For example, in his present Educational release. Mr. Ditmars shows a pair of African elephants harnessed and hauling a load—the only two in this country to perform such labor.

Then, much of the Park's land that once lay idle is now under cultivation to feed the animals. The deer range is ploughed; hay and fodder are gathered from other parts of the grounds.

We are not told what variety of "substitute" is employed in the war bread served to the bears, but, whatever it is, it goes down!

WHERE "THE SMOKES" COME FROM

Having no personal interest in cigars, we are all the more qualified to attest to the excellent entertainment value of the Educational Films reel showing how fine Havana tobacco is raised and "millionaires' cigars" are made.

The plantation pictured is in the extreme southwest corner of Cuba, as is pointed out on the map, which starts the reel. One of the interesting features is the screening of entire fields by light cloth awnings to insure the lightness of tint desired in certain brands of wrappers. The ploughing of the fields by oxen, the setting out of seedings, the plant in its various stages of quick growth, cutting, and sorting are illustrated in well-taken photographs. For the benefit of the uninitiated, an expert points out the parts of the plant which are devoted to various purposes—the crown for filler, the finer and coarser leaves for grades of wrappers varying in price from $60 to $1,000 a bale.

The journey of the dried tobacco from plantation to the factories of Havana is indicated on the map, and we are then taken to the factories themselves and shown how strong, deft hands wrap and shape the leaves into the comely cigar. While the men work, a reader at a high desk entertains them with the news of the day and interesting books. This is an established custom in all Cuban cigar factories. The reel concludes with some wise illustrations as to how to test and to smoke a good cigar

DUKE VISITS BATTLEFIELDS

Charles Urban's ever-interesting scenes on the now historic battlefields of France continue in this number of the series, "Britain's Bulwarks," which is the eleventh. The Duke of Connaught is shown on a tour of inspection. He visits the battlefield of Vimy Ridge, that point at which the German forces were hurled back a year ago and which has been the scene of continuous furious fighting for many months. Miles upon miles of desolation greet the eye in the views caught by the official cameraman.

The Duke also witnesses various scenes of activity at the front, including the transportation of ammunition up to the lines. The reel is intelligently assembled and should prove a considerable addition to the program of the day.

"DER TWINS" WELCOME GLAD SUMMER

Director La Cava of the International Cartoon Studios is seeing to it that the Katzenjammers do not lack any of the joys of vacation. And the visits made by the family to seashore and country of course afford the Kids fresh opportunity for devilment.

"Crabs Is Crabs" is well-proved by the way these clawed creatures treat poor Katrinka and the gallant Professor when the latter endeavors to teach the lady of his heart the rudiments of swimming. The Professor had taken the precaution to don a life preserver, unaware of the fact that the Kids had previously inserted into it several lively crustaceans. Nor did the Captain escape from similar deception. The wild struggles of the "drowning person" simulated by a dress and bonnet of Katrinka's well stuffed with crabs and eels, utterly contound the poor gentleman and cause a crescendo of laughter in the spectator.

"A Picnic for Two" proves a circus for a car full when the dog and cat and the pig that the Twins had thoughtfully put into the lunch baskets along with the frankfurters begin a little sociable conversation en route to the picnic grounds. The dog bites the conductor who pulls the emergency cord which stops the car with a jerk that sends passengers and packages tumbling in hopeless confusion till the former extricate themselves from the latter and scatter wildly over the landscape. There is excellent animation, and many good laughs.

A NOVELTY OF GENUINE MERIT

The Italian genius which won the astonishment and admiration of the world with "Cabiria" shows itself in a lighter but equally characteristic Italian mood in a most cleverly executed mannikin drama a reel in length. Carlotta Murilla has written a story around the military adventures of two-jointed dolls representing opposing sides in the great conflict, and Signor Pastrone has produced it with an artistry and ingenuity that bespeak real imagination. There are individual combats, artillery duels from the trenches; there is a "Big Bertha" on a revolving base that vomits smoke and flame; there is a gas attack foiled by the invention of a "suckmobile" that absorbs the poisonous vapor and returns it in sacks to the enemy. And in conclusion there is an aerial attack with smoking Zeppelins and bombing planes raining destruction on a peaceful mountain village.

For the most part, films such as this lack the essential element of entertainment, but the genuine artistic merit of this, the mechanical perfection of the devices employed, and the dramatic sense that has enabled its producers to develop the little story to a real climax make it a novelty acceptable to any class of patrons and one well worth featuring and advertising.

THEDA BARA REGRETS—

The eyes had it, when Mutt and Jeff devised a new system of choosing a lady vamp for the production on which they were to squander their newly acquired fortune, till these gentlemen chanced to investigate more fully the other claims to beauty possessed by the candidates who, behind screens which concealed all but their flashing or languishing orbs, sought to prove their magnetic power.

So there was nothing to do but get the one and only Theda to appear in the new picture. And the beautiful Miss Bara would have been only too glad to oblige—but she had a contract. So she compromised by inviting Jeff to be the leading man in her new picture.

KING GEORGE VISITS HIS FLEET

The tenth number of Britain's Bulwarks is given over to pictures taken on the great battleships that have been guarding the North Sea, during a visit made by King George. Several notable men accompany the king, among whom are Lord Cromer and Admiral Beatty.

The pictures convey a splendid idea of the great ships, the quality of the men who command and serve them, and the democratic bearing of the little man who in his pleasant if undistinguished person represents the great Empire.

"The City of Dim Faces"
(Paramount—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

TO Frances Marion goes the credit of having prepared the best recent vehicle that Sessue Hayakawa has appeared in. Her "The City of Dim Faces" offers the star a powerful character study which he makes the most of with that rare skill that is his and no other's. But it is the story as a whole, not merely the individual characterization that gives the picture its force and compelling power. It is the story of Jang Lung's contemplated revenge on a white woman because of her rejection of him and his sudden change of heart upon the discovery that white blood flows in his veins, followed by his battle for her life. In its directness and dramatic force it is mindful of Burke's "Limehouse Nights," those stories of the Chinese quarter in London that are almost terrifying in their realism, although Miss Marion's story, unlike those of Burke, is endowed with a greater beauty of thought that deftly shades its more gruesome passages.

Simplicity is one of the dominating notes of the picture. In her scenario Miss Marion deals with the plot directly and builds steadily to the climax. George Melford, who has worked on many of the Hayakawa pictures, turned his hand to the production of "The City of Dim Faces" and has derived the utmost from the story. The settings fairly teem with atmosphere and there are some wonderful light effects that are to the credit of Paul Perry, the photographer.

Doris Pawn, pretty enough to please the most exacting fan, gives a characterization of Marcell Mathews, the white girl, that is sustained to the very last. Marin Sais as Jang Lung's mother does some remarkable character work and James Cruze shows himself as a Chinaman in another of those most realistic make-ups which he affects with apparent ease. Winter Hall, Togo Yama, James Wang and George King complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Wing Lung (James Cruze), a silk merchant in San Francisco's Chinatown, desires a son born of a white woman, that he may possess the cunning of the Oriental combined with the physical beauty of the Caucasian. Consequently he takes unto himself a white wife, Elizabeth (Marin Sais), who works in his store. A son is born to them. Elizabeth desires that he grow up a Christian, and for this Lung takes the babe from her arms. He keeps her captive in his cellar through the long years that follow.

Jang (Sessue Hayakawa), the son, is led to believe that his mother was a Chinese. He returns from college, and meets Marcell Mathews (Doris Pawn), an American girl. He makes ardent love to her, and Marcell accepts his attentions at first for the sport of it, but soon grows to really love him. Her cousin, however, changes her attitude by showing her through the worst parts of Chinatown. As a result she becomes disgusted with the race in general. She refuses to have anything more to do with Jang, and breaks his heart. For revenge he lures her to his tea house, and makes her captive. He sells her to a marriage broker, and she is placed on the auction block before a leering crowd of Chinamen. But then the white blood in Jang stirs. He cannot see her meet a horrible fate, and he rescues her. In so doing he is mortally wounded. Returning to his home he discovers the prison cell of his mother, makes known his relationship to her and dies.

"Neighbors"
(World Film—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

AS pictures featuring children go, "Neighbors" ranks pretty high, for Madge Evans, the cleverest of her class, is given a thoroughly congenial role and puts her comedy over nicely. Mrs. Maravene Thompson prepared the story and her Clarissa, the part carried by Madge, is a most human little girl, at the same time ingenious enough in her every act to be interesting. That some of the other characters, notably the Mrs. William Harding, mother of Madge's playmate, are rather impossible, can be excused. After all, it is rather hard to run a plot featuring a child, through the whole of five reels, without once in a while becoming impossible.

Clarissa goes about her play seriously and when her efforts result in comedy, it is real comedy because of this attitude. Little Madge is still perfectly natural, despite her career as a star, which has been lengthy for one of her years. She never turns to the audience for appreciation but goes about the business of being natural before the camera in a manner which leaves no room for criticism. The pride which she displays in the weird costume made of vegetables with which she wins a prize, is a case in point concerning the absolute sincerity with which she plays.

John Hines, less formally known as Johnny, co-stars with Madge and manages to get in a lot of good comedy. He has the ability to make other people laugh when he smiles. Mr. Hines should, however, pay more attention to his feet. He walks out of one set wearing spats and sails into the next without them and vice versa. Violet Palmer's work as the ingenue is pleasing and Mathilde Brundage is sufficiently haughty as Mrs. William Harding. The young lady with the two-thirds impressive name, Maxine Elliot Hicks who first rose to some prominence when she pulled Mary Pickford's hair in a picture she made some time ago, manages well with the other child role, that of Effie Harding, while others in the cast are J. A. Furey, Herbert Pattee, Kitty Johnson and Charles Hartley.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The Leighs and the Hardings are neighbors in a small village. Clarissa Leigh (Madge Evans) and Effie Harding (Maxine Elliot Hicks) are playmates; that is, when they aren't fighting or when Mrs. Harding (Mathilde Brundage) isn't dragging Effie away from the influence of "that naughty child." Clarissa is human, therefore naughty before Mrs. Harding. And then, too, the Hardings are rich, while the Leighs haven't a bank account. Ruth Leigh (Violet Palmer), school teacher in the village, is in love with Paul Harding (John Hines) and her affections are warmly returned. However, Mrs. Harding doesn't like this idea either, having it in her mind to marry Paul to Edith Norris (Kitty Johnson), a member of "one of the best families." But, of course, Paul marries the girl of his heart, the foolish animosity of Mrs. Harding being banished forever when Clarissa saves Effie from going over the waterfalls in a canoe.

"The First Law"
(Pathe Play—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

THERE is much mystery in this latest of Irene Castle's Pathe Plays. Very much. Too much, in fact. So much that it is mystifying instead of mysterious, dramatically and intensely mysterious, as the good mystery picture should be. The producers have again followed the serial pattern in shaping and producing "The First Law." With the first few scenes we are deep in the middle of the story. Then the usual practice of working, first, forwards, then backwards is put in order and along about the end of the fourth reel, we begin to see a light. But this is too long a wait. Even in a mystery story we expect something precise and definite. It is not good to leave every character unintroduced to the audience.

Mrs. Castle does well with the role of Norma Webb, keeps in the spirit of the story from start to finish and is attractively attired. Antonio Moreno is her leading man again, and his rendition of the part of Hugh Godwin is satisfactory. J. H. Gilmour and Marguerite Snow complete the cast.

"The First Law" was written by Gilson Willets, scenarioized by Roy Somerville and produced under the direction of Lawrence McGill.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Norma (Irene Castle), daughter of Dr. Webb (J. H. Gilmour), advertises for a boarder, against her father's wishes. He was once a famous physician but reverses have severely damaged his finances. A boarder appears in the person of Hugh Godwin (Antonio Moreno), millionaire philanthropist, who immediately shows interest in Norma. He finally proposes and she is obliged to tell him she can not accept because she is already married. Her husband had swindled her father immediately after the marriage and they had never lived together. One night the husband breaks into Norma's room and she shoots him. Believing him dead, she makes to escape but falls into the hands of an unscrupulous detective who, threatening her with exposure, forces her to return to her home. He removes the body. Norma then marries Hugh. His work necessitates the construction of a number of buildings, and the detective, evidently also a contractor, is tipped off by the unwilling Norma on what figure to bid. He always lands the contracts. Finally, Norma can stand it no longer and makes a clean breast of the affair to Hugh. She then hurries away, intending to kill the detective. She follows him to a distant house. There she discovers her husband still alive. In a fight, the husband is killed, this time in reality.

"Winner Takes All"
(Bluebird—Five Reels)

FOR Monroe Salisbury's current feature, "Winner Takes All," the producers selected a novel by G. W. Ogden, entitled "The Rustler of Wind River," which as adapted by V. H. Porter and directed by Elmer Clifton, stands as the best feature he has done for this brand of pictures. Mr. Salisbury's characterization is not permitted to completely subordinate the story as has regrettably been the case with other releases of his. His great magnetism, however, is felt throughout the picture's length. This seems to prove that if a star really be a star, his presence is felt and appreciated even though he doesn't monopolize a great percentage of the closeups. The good handling that Mr. Salisbury has received of late is, in all probability, due to the careful direction of Mr. Clifton, a young director, but one possessed of an extensive knowledge of his business.

This fact is more than once in evidence in "Winner Takes All"; in fact, it is in evidence all the time. There are some of the most beautiful shots in this Western that the writer has ever seen. Supported by photography of a distinctly high order they stand as a very pleasure to watch in themselves. Mr. Ogden's story is one of good suspense, fine humor and many thrills, and with the ideal treatment accorded it, stands in the front ranks of the vast horde of Westerns that have been produced lately.

Mr. Salisbury receives excellent support from Helen Jerome Eddy as the girl, Alfred Allen and Sam De Grasse as heavies, Jack Nelson in a character role of considerable and genuine humor, and Betty Schade in a smaller part.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Saul Chadron (Alfred Allen), cattle baron, constantly persecutes the homesteaders, shooting them, driving them away and burning their homes. Alan MacDonald (Monroe Salisbury), their leader, is marked by Chadron to be killed and he commissions one Thorne (Sam De Grasse), a thoroughly disreputable character, to kill him along with several others. MacDonald meets Frances (Helen Eddy), the guest of Chadron's daughter (Betty Schade), and falls in love with her. At the peril of his life he attends the masquerade given in her honor. He is discovered, but escapes safely. In the meantime, Thorne has shot a homesteader's little daughter and this causes a general uprising. Thorne visits Chadron and demands his pay, claiming that he has killed MacDonald. MacDonald, however, takes the trouble to disprove this himself, by entering and taking Thorne away at the point of a gun. After a fight between the cattlemen and homesteaders, the latter decide to lynch Chadron. It is Alan who saves the wretch's life, but Thorne, in revenge, shoots him. The father of the dead girl then disposes of Thorne, and as for Frances, she discovers that her host was really very black and accepts MacDonald for his true worth.

"A Pair of Silk Stockings"

THOSE extremely clever situations in Cyril Harcourt's play, "A Pair of Silk Stockings," which set New York audiences rocking with mirth, have been intelligently transferred to the screen with equally brilliant results, and one is inclined to risk superlatives again and state with all the assurance in the world that it is the best picture Constance Talmadge has appeared in. Or, more than that, it is the best comedy that the writer can remember, at least with reference to the last six months. Mr. Harcourt's play contained just the right type of situations for Miss Talmadge. They are of that deliciously invigorating, delightfully intimate "boudoir" type, into which Miss Talmadge fits so well. And they have been conceived and executed by one whose sense of comedy seems without limit. A comedy situation before Mr. Harcourt is first to be developed for its own benefit and then made the source of others. "A Pair of Silk Stockings" is built like a family tree. It commences with a single situation and spreads to greater proportions with every turn.

Edith M. Kennedy is to be congratulated on the exceedingly fertile adaptation she made. So much of the play's success depended on the spoken lines that many were of the opinion that the adaptation would prove uninteresting. The brisk, genuine and clear strokes of her scenario have, however, put all such fears completely to route. And she has also employed subtitles skillfully and with results that add greatly to the comedy value of the situations. It is evident that Walter Edwards seized on the work of production with a full realization of the excellent possibilities in his script. He has over-looked no opportunity for comedy and has successfully kept the plot in evidence from first to last. There are no interruptions to achieve comedy. Every laugh rises naturally from the further development of the plot itself. The few settings are unusually pretty while the lighting is excellent.

Miss Talmadge enters into the spirit of the picture with appreciation and makes Mrs. Mollie Thornhill a thoroughly charming young woman. Harrison Ford's Sam Thornhill is entirely suitable. Louis Willoughby is a fine Captain Bagnal, and Wanda Hawley as his tearful fiancee is an irresistible delight. Sylvia Ashton as Lady Gower, the hostess, with a "bar maid past," does some excelllent comedy work, while Vera Doria, Florence Carpenter, Thomas Persee, Helen Haskell, L. W. Seers and Robert Gordon appear to advantage in smaller parts. James C. Van Trees was at the camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

The Thornhills don't agree on things. Mollie (Constance Talmadge) wants a roadster. Sam (Harrison Ford) wants a touring car. Mollie won't even kiss Sam, and Sam is very much peeved. Planning to arouse her jealousy, he makes it appear that he has an affair with a chorus lady, but instead of arousing her jealousy he arouses her ire and divorce proceedings are duly instituted and carried through. Sam is thereupon despondent. At a house party given by Lady Gower (Sylvia Ashton), Sam is the kill-joy. There is a rehearsal for amateur theatricals, Sam playing the part of a drunken tramp with whiskers and dirty clothes. Enter Mollie, who asserts that her car has broken down and that she simply has to stay all night. She is given the room of Captain Jack Bagnal (Louis Willoughby), who leaves to catch a train. He misses it and returns through the window. Sam, who has concealed himself in the closet in order to gain a quiet moment with his ex-wife, sneezes. He is set upon, bound (with Mollie's silk stockings) and thrown into the bathroom. The house is roused. Captain Jack's fiancee, Parmela (Wanda Hawley), is in a torrent of tears because of the situation. Jack and Mollie think to make it all right by producing the burglar, but he has escaped, stockings and all. Great commotion reigns all night and through the next morning. Unless the burglar is caught the honor of Mollie and Jack is forever besmirched. And finally Sam reveals himself as the burglar and sets everything right, also explaining to Mollie that his supposed affair with the chorus lady was, in truth, supposed.

"Hell's End"
(Triangle—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

"HELL'S END," the latest vehicle provided for William Desmond from the pen of A. Steve Richardson, is an artificial number that is hardly worthy of extended comment, inasmuch as it appears to have been hastily written, hastily produced and possessed of an appeal only to those before whom a fight constitutes a good picture.

There are numerous inconsistencies in the plot, while the central idea, that of a society girl pairing off with a tough gangster can hardly be taken seriously even though the gangster has the decency to reform.

Desmond tries his level best to lift his role to something realistic, and Josie Sedgwick tries to appear natural as the society girl. Louis Durham, otherwise known as "Bull," is entirely adequate as another gangster, while Dorothy Hagar and Charles Dorian round out the cast.

Charles J. Wilson, Jr., prepared the scenario, and J. W. McLaughlin directed. S. S. Norton was at the camera.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mary Flynn (Josie Sedgwick), on a sight-seeing expedition to "Hell's End," the underworld quarter of the city in which she used to live when her father was only a day laborer, meets Jack Donovan (William Desmond), her childhood playmate, now the leader of the gangsters. He is set upon by Hank Dillon (Louis Durham), an aspirant to his seat of honor, and in the fight is fouled by a well-directed bottle. Recovering in the hospital, Jack begins to realize the difference between Mary and the girls of Hell's End. He is given employment by Mary's father and regains his strength so that in time he is able to go back and beat up his successor in Hell's End. But he refuses the affections of Belle Burns (Dorothy Hagar), who is now willing to come back to him because he is again the undisputed ruler, so he and Mary find happiness and love in working together for the uplift of the unfortunates in the district.

"Marked Cards"
(Triangle—Five Reels)
Reviewed by Peter Milne

"MARKED CARDS," which has the interesting Margery Wilson in the role of chief importance, is a picture that works to that climax wherein the heroine sacrifices all thought of self and reputation in order to free the man she loves from being convicted for murder. It is described by Triangle as a "human interest story with terrific emotional situations," which is partly correct. It does rightfully come under the human interest heading because little Ellen Shannon, daughter of a political boss (but an honest one), once a hod-carrier, is constantly snubbed by the "aristocracy" of the city. Hence the human interest. The court room scenes can well be described as emotional, but we see no good reason for describing them as terrific. The terrific part of the picture is the idea of one D'Elba, the director, concerning the manner of high society. These people that perceptibly uplift their noses when the daughter of an ex-hod carrier enters their midst. But society is subtle at least and it doesn't deliberately turn its back on sweet little climbers. And as D'Elba's society seems occupied with snubbing to the exclusion of all else, it creates a false, artificial and foolish impression.

The story of "Marked Cards" was written by Adela Rogers St. John and scenarioized by Lanier Bartlett. It presents well-tried material in fair form. It is the handling of the subject during production that prevents it from attaining a level of merit. Miss Wilson's opposite is Wallace MacDonald whose personality is not the kind that makes for a popular leading man. Jack Curtis, Harvey Clark, Lillian Langdon, Joe Bennett, Lee Phelps and Rae Godfrey complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Because Ellen (Margery Wilson) is the daughter of Pat Shannon (Jack Curtis), a one-time hod-carrier, Mrs. Breslin (Lillian Langdon) forbids her son Ted (Wallace MacDonald) to marry her. She continually snubs and insults Ellen so that the girl is forced to tell Ted that unless his mother apologizes she will break with him forever. Things go from bad to worse, particularly with Ted, who takes to drinking and gambling. Ellen is sent away to boarding school. One day she accepts an invitation to lunch with Cutting (Lee Phelps) and goes to the city with a chaperone. Endeavoring to rid herself of this incumbrance she jumps in one of the hotel elevators and is borne aloft. She skips out into a room and there is the witness of a tragedy in the room across the area-way. Later Ted is brought up on trial for killing Poker Lemoyne (Harvey Clark), a gambler. His accuser is Jackson (Joe Bennett), another gambler. Jackson has taken advantage of Ted's drunken condition on the evening of the murder and is insisting that Ted committed the act when Ellen enters and accuses him. She tells her story despite the fact that she is obliged to bring out in her evidence that she was in a man's room at the time of the murder. Ted is freed and goes to Ellen with his mother's blessing.

WHETHER or not C. Gardner Sullivan conceives a plot, in itself adequate for presentation in five reels, he is always sure to fill it with sufficient human touches to make it interesting. He has the happy knack of presenting commonplace incidents, immediately apparent as the reflection of every day life, in a vitally entertaining way. One of his contemporaries said of him that he above all others could glorify the commonplace and certainly in this faculty lies much of his success. "The Vamp" is one of his pictures into which he has injected these wholesome, pleasing, radiating touches and though exceedingly slim in plot its human interest and its fine comedy serve to make it a most pleasing piece of entertainment.

Jerome Storm, who has had charge of the production of Enid Bennett's recent Paramount pictures, also directed this one. Mr. Storm is one of the best directors for this style of picture that Mr. Ince has developed. He has made the most of the various opportunities offered in the script and has given the whole a production of great realism. John Stumar has achieved some good photographic effects.

Miss Bennett as the far from sophisticated little wardrobe girl, who wins a husband and saves a perilous situation by adopting (very prettily) the tactics of the naughty vamp is as refreshing and delightful as ever, while her support ranks exceptionally high, including Douglas MacLean, Charles K. French, Robert McKim, Melbourne MacDowell and John P. Lockney.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Nancy Lyons (Enid Bennett), a wardrobe girl at a musical show, takes the tip of one of the chorus girls and wins Robert Walsham (Douglas MacLean), a young settlement worker by "camping" him. Robert takes his young bride West to a mining town, where he is scheduled to take charge of the Community House. Nancy is not well received by Robert's uncle. James (Charles K. French), who wants his nephew to devote all his time to work and none to billing and cooing. It is the young couple's misfortune to be discovered by the uncle whenever they take time off to make love. But in time uncle's heart softens, specially as he sees the good they are accomplishing. And then enters Phil Weil (Robert McKim), a labor agitator, who spots Nancy. Nancy, knowing that ill is afoot, proceeds to wheedle all his secrets out of him by camping once again. And Mulligan (John P. Lockney), one of the miners, is a listener from his retreat under the bed in the next room. With Weil's downfall comes the arrest of Mr. Fleming (Melbourne MacDowell), a German spy who was using the agitator as a tool. And so Nancy proves to old Walsham that a young wife, with a skill for "vamping," can be of some use in a mining town after all.

MARGARITA FISHER as Susan Gaskell in "Impossible Susan" probably gets all possible out of the character which cannot by any stretch of the imagination be said to afford her many opportunities. The picture opens with a beautiful water scene—a small lake hidden among the trees in which half a dozen young girls are disporting themselves. Being chased away by a gang of boys they get revenge by tying knots in the boys' clothing. This, and other similar stunts characterize Susan's general behavior, and earn for her the sobriquet "Impossible."

On the death of her grandfather she is sent to a distant relative who is housekeeper for a rich young bachelor. And the whole story that follows simply shows her now beautifully gowned, fairly well tutored in the ways of the genteel, and eventually marrying the aforesaid bachelor. Margarita does plenty of sprinting —sometimes unnecessarily so—in every reel.

It's just an ordinary picture, with a remarkable, though absolutely unexpectel ending—a picture that will not thrill and but mildly entertain. The photography throughout is very good, and the supporting cast give good accounts of themselves.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Susan Gaskell (Margarita Fisher) is, on the death of her grandfather, sent to a distant relative, Martha Brown (Anne Schaefer). Her employer, Bernard Marshall (Jack Mower) decides to let Susan remain in his house, believing that through her, he might possibly save his younger brother, Ted (Lloyd Hughes), from the wiles of a vampire, one Eva Thornton (Beverly Travers). When gowned Susan makes a picture, and, apparently, wins Ted's affection, but on a dare he marries Eva, and Susan then is free to marry Bernard, with whom she has been in love from the first.

The central figure of this serial commands a certain amount of attention which will be given despite any and all other happenings recorded on the screen when this serial is shown. And the other happenings are fired point-blank, in rapid succession, with action running at top speed and new and ever-appealing interest cropping out as the man who has been betrayed by his partner in adversity and good fortune, reeks a vengeance as his reward, that is unrelenting in its perversity and determination to revenge.

serials. The producers have not relied solely upon stunt work or thrills to put the dramatic punch into their work, but have, first of all, started with the premise that "the story is the thing." It is, first of all, logical in its revelation of events. Careful observation will detect incidents, here and there, that are a bit far-fetched but judging the story as a whole, the work of the excellent cast, the suspense that is so carefully sustained and, back of all this, the underlying reason for its recital—the thought that the author wished to bring out—and you have one of the best and most finished bits of serial production that has ever been flashed on the screen of any theatre.

Gaumont has a serial worth while in "The Hand of Vengeance." It has a dramatic punch, a sense of justice, a certain twist to its ever-changing action, that will take hold of an audience. The manner in which the author and director have opened their work with all their big guns firing actionable pantomime, is to be recommended with all the superlatives common to the English language. There is no unnecessary detail, either in planting character or revealing action. There is the necessary amount of dramatic material and this has been reproduced with the sole object in view of telling frankly and straightforwardly what is what in the life of "the hand of vengeance." Regardless of the exhibitors' locality, regardless of his theatre's capacity or the personnel of his patronage, Gaumont's serial, "The Hand of Vengeance" will be accorded all the honors ever awarded a serial production or a dramatic narrative on the screen.

"The Sign of the Scar," "Scheming for Millions," "The Ambassador's Diamond," "The Grey Lady" and "The League of Silence" are the first five of the ten episodes which stand for the completed serial. We will not attempt to draw comparisons. The first is as good as the last, the second as the third and the odd one as good as any one of the other four. Each one is a link in the chain which the chief character, Ultus, is welding to draw his traitorous friend into the web that he so skillfully weaves. Any one of the episodes of this serial offers entertainment, irrespective of those that are to follow. The newness of each, the distinctiveness of each episode, stand out with all the prominence of an individual photodrama. The action is there, the interest is there and the quality of the work done by the cast of characters is superlative.

The story of the manner in which Ultus, who has been betrayed by his friend and fellow prospector, seeks vengeance. The story opens with two prospectors in Africa who have discovered a valuable diamond mine. They start across the desert for England. On the way, one of the men falls from exhaustion and want of water. The other sees a chance to rid the world of one of the only two who know of the existence of the mine. He attempts to steal the bag containing the specimens of diamonds, while the other is seemingly exhausted. The weaker of the two offers resistance and the other slashes the back of his hand holding the bag of diamonds with a hunting knife. He leaves him to die on the desert.

Years later the one who had proved himself the stronger is found the possessor of immense wealth, living in London. The other man whom he thought dead appears and then commences a series of adventures, in which he takes back, bit by bit, every possession that the wealthy man has.

"Her Price"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

VIRGINIA PEARSON gets back into the role of the vampire in her latest starring vehicle on the Fox program. This time she is the unwilling vampire but a "vamp" nevertheless. And, may it be said, Miss Pearson enters into the spirit of her role and gives "bang-up" good bit of dramatic impersonation and makes the character of Marcia Calhoun, an honest-to-goodness vampire lady. Credit is not given the author in the press matter. Whoever he or she may be, he or she is given all due credit for playing up the vamp stuff with unusual vim and enthusiasm with the result that Miss Pearson, after the run of the first reel, is an out-and-out vampire lady with opportunity to practice all the wiles known to the science of vamping on her catches.

Miss Pearson's work displays the only real high light of entertainment in this offering. The story isn't half-bad nor is it the best that was ever written. It is passable and at times during its revelation there are flashes of good, sound originality shown by the author. But these flashes come and go with a sporadic indifference that leaves no room for a lasting impression. The generalities of the work as a story are not the most impressive nor do they smack of brilliance along photodramatic lines. The title tells the story in two short words—what more could be expected.

Miss Pearson has a large following among picture patrons and her name and ability as an actress and the record of her past-performances will go a long way towards making this offering a success. There are thousands and many more who will enjoy every foot of the five reels telling the story of "Her Price." It will meet the every demand of the patron who goes to the theatre to see a dissection of the sex problem and the arguments, pro and con. It is distinctly a sex picture without any of the offensiveness usually associated with the term. It has been produced under the direction of Edmund Lawrence with a careful consideration for the view of the more conventional classes but it lacks a certain punch in the story, to place it with the best feature program offerings. Edward F. Rosen, Victor Sutherland, Henri Leone, Charles H. Martin, Paul Stanton and Mrs. Allen Walker are seen in the principal supporting roles.

"The Service Star"

(Goldwyn—Six Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

CHARLES MILLER'S first directorial work for Goldwyn, the direction of Madge Kennedy in "The Service Star," a patriotic drama of the lighter vein, written by Charles Logue, speaks pretty well for Charlie's ability in handling the megaphone. With nothing in the way of pretentious or spectacular story to reproduce for screen presentation, Director Miller first of all realized this fact and started the ball rolling and the camera clicking to the time of perfectly natural action, every-day surroundings, human incidents and straightforward recitals. He appreciated fully the fact that, because a little unsophisticated girl had her own ideas about patriotic love-making and insisted upon carrying her idea to a realistic end, there was not the inducement to make a big splash with the production he had undertaken to translate for review on the screen. And with this end in view he let our most accomplished Madge Kennedy tell the world in her own way just why she lied about her marital relations with the American "Ace," John Whitney Marshall.

Some one has said that "The Service Star" is the best picture that Goldwyn has yet produced. We would like to agree with him, but we can't, on the ground that the story isn't there in such proportions as to merit such a place among Goldwyn's releases. But we will place it pretty well up in front with the Goldwyn releases, and we'll wager that the box-office reports will show that our judgment is not far out of the way. We do object to the strength of enthusiastic statement which places this picture as "Goldwyn's best."

Charles Logue, the author, had a right good idea when he sat down to his typewriter and created this work, and he has carried his plot along with a new twist here and there that gives just the right sort of swing to the story as interpreted on the screen. But, because he has not created strength of action, there is little chance of the majority holding the opinion of the one who placed it as "Goldwyn's best." Madge Kennedy's personality and her name are going to do wonders in putting this production over. Miss Kennedy has made a name for herself as a star, and she's going to carry "The Service Flag" right over the top, even though she has little obstacles in the form of slight plot material obstructing her advance. These are trivial and will be brushed aside unnoticed and without having done a great deal of harm.

The supporting cast which Miss Kennedy has been given render good substantial support. Clarence Oliver, who has the leading man's part, which is not too prominent, does his work in a finished manner. Jules Cowles has one of his black-faced character roles, for which he is favorably known, and puts in over with all the unassuming humor of our colored brethren. Tammany Young has a good character bit. Mabel Ballin is seen in a fairly prominent role which she handles skillfully. Maude Turner Gordon, Victor Bateman, William Bechtel, and Zula Ellsworth are seen in minor roles. The photography, lighting and sets are well done.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marilyn March (Madge Kennedy) looks with envy on the girls she knows who have a sweetheart at the front. Marilyn has none, but sees no reason why she shouldn't. So she conceives the idea of representing herself as being the wife of John Whitney Marshall (Clarence Oliver), whose name graces the front pages of the daily papers as the first America "Ace." She leaves the little town where she has lived all her life, and obtains a position in one of the departments of the Government service at Washington. Once installed she spreads the information that she is the wife of the great American "Ace."

The American "Ace's" mother, Mrs. Marshall (Maude Turner Gordon), lives in Washington. The girls with whom Marilyn works, inform her of the fact that Marilyn is posing as her son's wife. To their astonishment Marilyn is taken into the home of Mrs. Marshall, which practically verifies her statement.

She meets a young man at Mrs. Marshall's home, who is experimenting in chemical work. They become close friends. Later she discovers that the young fellow whom she has met is none other than John Whitney Marshall himself, who is evading the draft under the guise of a chemist. He explains that a friend of his went in his place, and had taken his name. Marilyn's influence makes him reach the decision to enlist. They are married, and he leaves for the front.

"Wedlock"

(Paralta—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

LOUISE GLAUM forgets that she has ever "vamped" before the camera, in her portrayal of the featured role in Denison Clift's "Wedlock," produced by Paralta Plays, Inc., under the direction of Wallace Worsley. In the role of Margery Harding, Miss Glaum is the quiet, unpretentious telephone operator, the deserted wife of a young and aristocratic husband, the outcast and the possessor of millions. And none of these calls for the work of the vampire. But each and every one calls for the ability of an artist, in their interpretation, and the artist is found in the person of Miss Glaum.

The Paralta star could have had a more reasonably constructed story and scenario than the one that was given to her director, Mr. Worsley, by the author, Denison Clift. Mr. Clift sure did run the gamut of the screen drama when he did this one. All the old-time stuff is there. This would have been pardonable for the fact that a certain dramatic situation has been done before on the screen does not deprive its successor of any of the rewards due finished work, but when an old situation is used and thrown into such a mangled and confused state as Mr. Clift has thrown his into the plot of "Wedlock," there are bound to be harsh words said about his work. The story falls far below standard. Convenient co-incidents are thrown into the fray without regard for continuity or logical sequence. Miss Glaum is made to convey the impression that she loves the young man whom she loves and Jack Gilbert is made to convey the same impression but when it comes time to make a change in the lives of the two (for the convenience of the author) these two are mercilessly separated, both seemingly satisfied with the way things have turned out. The story is weak, illogical and carried alone by co-incidents happening once in a thousand years. The story then and not the cast, very capably headed by Miss Glaum, is the weak joint in "Wedlock," and the one which it is noticed without the approval of an intelligent audience.

Jack Gilbert has the leading male role and in the later part of the story he gives a fine exhibition of "heavy" acting. He does good work throughout. Jack makes as good a leading man as he does a leading juvenile. Beatrie Joy who deserted comedy for an ingenue role in "Wedlock" leaves a good impression even though she is not given prominence. Herschel Mayall, an old standby in the heavy character roles, gives a good performance here. Charles Gunn, Joseph J. Dowling, Beverly Randolph, Harry Archer, Ida Lewis, Clifford Alexander and Aggie Herring have minor roles. "Wedlock" has been given a worthy production and the photography has been done well.

"Her Moment"

(General Release—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

GENERAL has a mighty fine offering in Authors' Photo-Plays, Inc., production, "Her Moment," starring Anne Luther, and produced under the direction of Frank Beal. Samuel H. London is the author and he has furnished Director Beal with a script that contained exceptional opportunities for strong dramatic action and entertainment via screen. And Director Beal has brought all of this out in a most clever manner. The scenes of the action in the initial reels are laid in Roumania, and Mr. Beal has registered an European atmosphere which could not have been much improved upon. The script offered the opportunity of presenting a volcano in eruption, and this the director has recorded with striking realism with the use of miniature props.

The story is one of the strongest characteristics of this production. It has dramatic meat—the white meat of the drama. In places it verges onto and reaches over into the regions occupied by the melodramatic. It goes to the other extreme and presents the quiet home life of the natives of a small Roumanian village. It takes up the sex question, and this problem has been handled by the director without giving rise to the offensive and at the same time bringing out the point to be made in a straightforward manner. In places the director has carried the sex problem a bit too far, noticeably in the scene showing the girl who has been sold into slavery being whipped by her master. The sex problem which enters into this picturization to a marked degree is founded on the Oriental custom which is said to permit the father to sell his daughter or the daughter to sell herself as a menial to another for a certain period of time, so that it is not fiction but fact.

The picture is in excessive reelage. It could be cut to six reels and present a more finished production. The first three reels could be cut to two without interfering in any way with the action of the story or its continuity. This should be done. Some of the best character work that has come to the attention of the reviewer is seen in this production. There are excellent types and those portraying the characters are artists in their work. Anne Luther, who has the featured role, is a good type, enters into the spirit of her role, and portrays it with true appreciation. She is seen in her best work in this production. William Lowrey in a character role does one of the most finished bits of acting that has been seen on the screen. Bert Hadley, J. L. Franck, Anne Schaefer, Leon Kent, Murdock McQuarrie, and Alida Jones—all do excellent work. The action in the last reels takes place in a mining town in Arizona. This part of the story has been staged with true Western atmosphere and has been given a typical Bill Hart production, with Bill Hart characters. The photography is excellent, as is the lighting, the exteriors and the sets. In "Her Moment," General Film has a first-class offering for its program.

The Exhibitor who makes this request knows that this Company stands solidly behind its product. He is confident that his request will be given prompt and favorable attention.

Picture his chagrin when he receives our reply:

"These parts are not of our manufacture and consequently we cannot replace them."

Saginaw Managers Happy

SAGINAW motion picture theatres are experiencing good business, and the managers are well pleased with the present conditions and the future prospects. Despite the high and increasing costs of necessities and luxuries the public appears to be supplied with plenty of funds, and is willing to spend them on amusements. Certainly there has been no decline in patronage, and the people are flocking to the film entertainments as strongly as ever.

There are several reasons to which this happy situation may be ascribed. One of these is this same matter of finances. While all expenses are greater so people are earning more, and money is being distributed more generously to the masses. An aristocracy of labor is being created through the high wages paid, and this means that more people are enjoying the clink of coins in their pockets than ever before, even while they are complaining about prices. For example in Saginaw there is a big shipbuilding company which now employs 1,600 men, but a year ago it did not exist. The wages paid are on an uusually high scale, and even common labor is receiving more than those in professions. Now these men and their families are in most cases lovers of motion pictures, and they are in a position where they can attend and not worry about the cost. Such war industries also bring to the city many of the roving type who live in rented rooms or houses. They do not find their full contentment in staying home but seek their pleasures outside, and the best and practically only entertainment can be found at the motion picture houses.

Then the weather thus far has been favorable for attendance at theatres as there have been few hot days and the temperature has averaged low. Consequently there is less of a lure in the great outdoors and more inside where it is warm and comfy-like, inside where the beauties of nature, human and otherwise, can be viewed to advantage.

Also in times such as these people are anxious to forget the horrors of reality in amusement, and so look to the films and are not disappointed. The reign of prohibition also helps greatly.

Of course there is another very important reason, and that is the excellence of the pictures.

So with such a combination it is not strange that Saginaw smiles at the screens, and that managers are busy counting their receipts and booking new features.

Welcome Home

BILL JENNER erstwhile Wm. H. Jenner is back among the old folks once again—having returned to the paternal fold of the George Kleine forces July 1st to fill a more important position than the one he occupied before he transferred his affections to the Fox organization. The gentleman now presides over the destinies of twenty odd exchanges, and is located in the executive offices of the Kleine System instead of the Chicago branch he formerly conducted. Mr. Kleine is to be congratulated on his combination—Smith—Jenner—both aces.

Universal Heads and Exchange Managers Hold Lively Convention in Chicago

CARL LAEMMLE outlined the activities of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for the coming season to the Universal officials and branch managers who were here from almost every large city in the United States at the Sales Convention of the Universal Film Company at the Sherman House, July 7, 8 and 9.

The session was opened by President Laemmle, and after a brief talk promising his managers better and greater pictures for the future, he begged to be excused because of a cold contracted during his trip from New York to Chicago.

Joe Brandt, Assistant Treasurer of the Universal then took the chair and gave a peppery ten-minute speech filling Universal managers with enthusiasm regarding the many coming productions and the many new innovations launched by the Universal.

The meeting was the most enthusiastic one ever held by any exchange managers. The managers said that they had made direct inquiries among the exhibitors all over the country and claimed that the draft had not materially affected the movie business and that conditions in the smaller towns were much better than they had hoped for and they predicted bigger and greater business for the coming fall.

The consensus of opinion among the managers of the exchanges was that the open policy would prevail and the exhibitors were not looking kindly towards signing up for long term contracts.

A new sales policy was adopted which will eliminate waste in picture selling and at the same time bring the salesmen in contact with more exhibitors than heretofore and will make Universal salesmen the most efficient and most productive in the film business.

A new department has been established to take care of the newspaper and publicity matter for the exhibitor which is decidedly new and novel. The plan and purpose of this new department will be explained later.

Mr. Laemmle was very enthusiastic about the coming productions and stated that no pains will be spared to make all their productions the best and the biggest that brains and money could make.

Harry Berman, Sales Manager of the Jewel Productions waxed warm and enthusiastic about their productions for the coming season and announced that they will soon release "The Geezer of Berlin" a two reel travesty on "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" and Windsor McKay's wonderful picture "The Sinking of the Lusitania" and a new Lois Weber Production "For Husbands Only" and a new production now in the making "The Yellow Dog" from the story by Henry Irving Dodge, which ran in the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Julius Stern, President of the Century Comedy Company announced that in the fall he will do something new in the way of comedies and will make some new comedies of special nature like the "Geezer of Berlin."

The Managers of the various exchanges were all highly enthused and prophesied that the coming season would be the greatest ever had by the Universal.

At the close of the business activities at the end of each day the various managers attended a loop legitimate show at which Carl Laemmle was the host.

The arrangements for the convention were made by Joe Brandt, Assistant Treasurer of the Universal Film Company, and was attended by Messrs. I. L. Leserman, Morris Hellman, S. J. Goldman, Julius Bernheim, I. Gettleson and Irving Mack of Chicago; Messrs. C. C. Smith and Joe Roderick of Milwaukee; Messrs. Joe Schnitzer, R. W. Abbot and D. Adams of Indianapolis ; Mr. Sam Saxe of Cincinnati; Mr. E. J. Smith of Cleveland; Mr. W. D. Ward of Detroit; Messrs. R. K. Evans and L. H. Cohn of Minneapolis; Mr. Edw. Armstrong of Denver; Mr. John McAlear of Pittsburgh; Mr. Barney Rosenthal of St. Louis; Mr. S. Benjamin of Oklahoma City; Mr. M. J. Frisch of Des Moines; Mr. Feld of Kansas City and Curley Calvert of Omaha.

In Springfield Theatres

THE LYRIC will repeat the pictures of local soldiers, members of Battery A and Company C, two units now overseas. The films made a big hit here on the first showing and Manager Loper figures many did not get to see them while they were here the first time. The pictures will be put on July 14 and 15 with Gladys Brockwell in "The Scarlet Road."

THE GAIETY has booked the Mack Sennett Keystone comedy re-issues. The first one, "Cinders of Love," featuring Chester Conklin, was on the same bill with W. S. Hart in "Shark Monroe," which starts July 14.

"CLAWS OF THE HUN," with Charles Ray, comes to the Vaudette July 14 for four days; Douglas Fairbanks will follow for three days in "Manhattan Madness."

A MILLION DOLLAR RAIN on Sunday, July 7, threw hundreds of dollars to the theatres that they wouldn't have gotten otherwise. It was too wet for folks to get out into the parks, and too muddy for motoring in the country. Result: Everyone in search of amusement had to go to the motion picture theatres.

ARTHUR SIMON, once proprietor of a picture playhouse in Petersburg, but now of Valparaiso, Indiana, paid old friends a visit here July 7.

NELLIE BROWN DUFF, formerly with Vitagraph as scenario writer, expects to leave soon for France as a Canteen Worker with the Y. W. C. A.

IT HAS JUST DEVELOPED that the Majestic plans on using a new Vitagraph serial when the theatre reopens on Aug. 11. "Fighting for a Million" has been booked by Finn and Heiman for all their houses, rumor says, which means they think pretty well of the picture patron's business. Last year all of the Finn and Heiman houses ran "Vengeance and the Woman" with Wm. Duncan and Carol Holloway, and results were satisfactory.

W. W. Watts will leave Wednesday, July 10 for Boston to attend the National Convention of Exhibitors. "Bill" says he has a resolution or two that he will try and put through, something that will benefit every man in the film business. He won't say what it is, so we shall have to watch MOTION PICTURE NEWS. In spite of Watts' efforts to resign he is still treasurer of the Illinois Exhibitors.

THE PRINCESS screened "Patriotism," Bessie Barriscale's new Paralta play, and those who saw the play say it is a "bear." Dates are not yet available from Manager Kunz at this writing.

ED MAISEL missed his show (Alma Rubens in "The Answer") on Friday, July 5, and had to scurry around for emergency reels. He put on something, one patron saying it was the best show he had ever seen at the Capitol. You never can tell.

THE ROYAL has booked William Fox service.

HARRY THORNTON, manager of the Gaiety, went to Chicago Monday, July 8, to see his mother, who is ill.

HARRY LOPER, of the Lyric, is enjoying an auto trip around the southern end of the state, with a side excursion into St. Louis.

THE PRINCESS, with Frank Keenan, Robert Edeson and Alma Hanlon in "The Public Defender" did great business for the three days starting July 7. This is one of the pictures booked by the Doll-Van company.

MANAGER KUNZ announces that he has secured Frank Kennan in "More Trouble" for an early showing. This is the picture that the New York critics said such kind things about.

NO MORE motion picture operators have quit. Things have settled down to normal again and the managers are breathing easy.

Heard in Fond du Lac

THAT THE ORPHEUM theatre made no mistake in booking Lois Weber's "The Doctor and the Woman," was evinced when the run was closed Wednesday night, July 10. Every show during the entire three days was witnessed by a large audience.

THE NEW PIPE ORGAN at the Orpheum is sure making a hit with its patrons; many of whom hunt up Manager Ainsworth, and express their appreciation. And they all wonder where it is for the entire instrument is concealed from view.

MANAGER AINSWORTH, of the Orpheum, believes in hitting the ball hard in the summer months. Here is a part of his program: Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer," July 11, 12 and 13; Evelyn Nesbit Thaw in "Redemption," July 15, 16 and 17; Wm. S. Hart in "The Silent Man," July 18, 19 and 20, and James Barrymore in "Raffles," July 22, 23 and 24. The Orpheum was packed to the doors with boys Thursday afternoon, July 11. Reason—five-cent matinee, with Jack Pickford in "Tom Sawyer" as the drawing card.

THE BIJOU THEATRE presented one of the strongest programs of the year during the week beginning July 15. Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany" ran the first three days, while the last three days found the Perfection picture, Taylor Holmes in "A Pair of Sixes." This will be followed July 23, 24 and 25 by Douglas Fairbanks in the splendid Paromount-Artcraft picture, "Reaching for the Moon." Thomas Edison's "The Unbeliever" will be one of the Bijou's big drawing cards in August.

THEDA BARA in the William Fox production, "Madame Du Barry," was the attraction at the Henry Boyle July 12, 13 and 14, with Saturday and Sunday matinees and played to good business.

Heard in Detroit

Temporary Manager at Franklin Theatre, Saginaw, Does Good Work

A. E. DENMAN has assumed his temporary duties as manager of the Franklin theatre, Saginaw, Mich., succeeding A. J. Moeller, who has entered Government war work, amusement division. While Mr. Denman came to Saginaw from Jackson, Mich., he was previously located in Chicago, where he was the representative of the Butterfield show interests and of the United Booking Offices. Mr. Denman expects to remain in Saginaw only until July 21, when a permanent appointment will be made.

However, Mr. Denman has adopted an aggressive policy and is actively promoting the business of the theatre. He also intends to start his successor with a real feature attraction, having booked the D. W. Griffith spectacle, "Hearts of the World," for a full week, beginning July 21. This is the first time that a picture has been originally scheduled for such a long run and indicates the belief of Manager Denman as to the drawing powers of the picture.

He has inaugurated the publishing of "The Franklin Tattler," a small folder containing announcements of the attractions for the week. The first number, dated June 23, has for the front cover a picture of George Walsh, who appeared Sunday and Monday, June 30 and July 1 in "The Kid Is Clever." Racine Reports

AMBASSADOR GERARD'S "My Four Years in Germany," after having been shown for one solid week at the Bijou theatre some time ago, returned Monday, July 8, for another run, and at special prices filled the house night after night. This picture was declared by many to be the best war picture yet shown in this city, and Manager McKivett is more than pleased at the results attained with it.

McKivett has now billed the city for "Pershing's Crusaders," and has strung a huge street sign across the main street where no one can miss it. He believes that this first official war picture will go over as big as Gerard's "Four Years."

THE LEE KIDS in "We Should Worry" landed with a jolt at the Rex Sunday, July 7, and packed the house afternoon and evening with a laughing crowd. Fay Tincher and the Vodeville Pictures added to the performance.

"MARIE, MARIE," one of Lina Cavalieri's most famous selections, played on a Victrola, opened every performance of "The Eternal Temptress," at the Palace theatre. This rather unique method of introducing the grand opera star's first motion picture vehicle took well with the audience, and selections made famous by the prima donna were played throughout the picture by the Palace Concert Orchestra to carry out the effect. "The Eternal Temptress," partly due to the exceptional work of Elliott Dexter, went over big for two days.

NORMA TALMADGE, in "De Luxe Annie," proved a great success for two days' run at the Rex theatre, due in part to the prominence of the star, the reputation which preceded the picture to the city, and the fact that it was taken from a story which ran in the "Saturday Evening Post."

MANAGER BLUMBERG made several trips to Milwaukee during the week of July 8 to look over a few of the "Big Ones," and Tom Norman of the Rex was in Chicago undoubtedly with the same end in view.

THE RIALTO theatre will be opened about Sept. 1 if things go along so swimmingly as they have been during the past few weeks. The ceiling of the huge auditorium has been plastered and work has been begun on the walls.

ROY STEWART in "The Fly God" drew well at the Bijou, aided by Sid Chaplin in "Looking Them Over," Sunday, July 7.

"FOR LIBERTY," with Gladys Brockwell, was shown at the Rex, Wednesday and Thursday during the week of July 8, and with Billie Rhodes drew to good business.

WILLIAM S. HART, starring in "Selfish Yates," was the offering at the Palace, Thursday and Friday, July 11 and 12.

"THE LILLY," with Alma Ruben, followed "My Four Years in Germany" at the Bijou. Charlie Chaplin was shown on the same day in "The Musical Tramp."

Gathered in Green Bay

"THE MAN WITHOUT A COUNTRY," a Jewel picture, proved the best release in a long time at the Royal theatre. It was presented July 2 and 3, and drew big crowds.

MABEL NORMAND appeared at the Colonial theatre July 7 in the Goldwyn film, "The Floor Below."

FANNIE WARD played in "On the Level," a Paramount offering July 8 and 9 at the Orpheum. Fatty Arbuckle appeared in the same programs in an Arbuckle-Paramount comedy, "Moonshine."

"BLUE BLOOD," the first Goldwyn-Selectart film produced this season at the Orpheum, was on the program July 7. It proved a drawing card.

"THE WHIP," the great racing picture by the Paragon Film, Incorporated, played to satisfactory business at the Orpheum theatre July 10 and 11. The film pleased patrons of the house.

ONE OF THE BIG productions of the summer at the Orpheum was "The Blue Bird," an Artcraft picture. It drew large audiences during nearly each showing of its run of July 3, 4, 5 and 6. Manager H. K. Timm added a chapter of "Vengeance and the Woman" two days, while "The Blue Bird" was on, and a chapter of "The Son of Democracy" the other two days.

MARY MILES MINTER in "Beauty and the Rogue," Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, and a screen telegram were the attractions at the Colonial theatre July 8 and 9.

FRANK KEENAN, in "Stepping Stones," played at the Grand theatre July 7, 8 and 9.

HENRY GOLDMAN, proprietor of the Colonial theatre, announced the booking of the Chester Outing series, a film release of the Mutual Company. The first showing of the series will be given in July.

THE PATHE picture, "Naulahka," played to big business at the Colonial theatre July 3 and 4. The film pleased the crowds as much as any recent offering at the house.

"MY LITTLE BOY," a Bluebird film, was shown at the Royal theatre July 10.

JACK CURTIS and Barbara Connolly, in the Triangle film, "Little Red Decides," was shown at the Royal theatre July 9. The fourth episode of the series, "Boy Scouts to the Rescue," was presented the same day.

G. L. STILES, who was formerly connected with the sales for the Metro picture service of this city, has severed his connection with that firm. Although he has not yet signed up with any other concern, he has many prospects in view.

THE VARIOUS SALES forces of the Universal Film exchange held a convention at the Hotel Sherman in Chicago last week. The officials announced that some new stars would be presented to the public in a short while and that new, better and bigger features than those before, would soon be ready for bookings.

HARRY CHAPPELLE, who recently took over the management of the Murray theatres, has closed it and left for a cantonment in the South where he will have charge of one of Uncle Sam's Liberty theatres.

JULIUS TRINZ, who was connected with the sales forces of the Friedman Film corporation in Minneapolis, has taken a position with the Metro service in this city.

THE ALHAMBRA THEATRE has reorganized its orchestra. Frederick Rowly will be the leader. He directed an orchestra in Seattle, Wash. and St. Joe, Mo. The management is also installing the largest pipe organ in the city.

Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?" is drawing large crowds at the Alhambra this week. The dainty acting of the star is known to everyone, and the picture does not need much display advertising, as it advertises itself.

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS" will start an indefinite run in Racine on Sunday. An extensive publicity campaign has been conducted and the picture ought to break all previous records.

THE FAR-FAMED OLGA PETROVA will make a personal appearance in the Cream City on the 18th of July. She will appear at the Butterfly theatre, and in connection with her appearance, the management will present to its patrons, her latest film success, "Tempered Steel." Mme. Petrova is making this tour on behalf of the War Savings Stamps.

"THE WHIRL POOL," with Alice Brady, is the attraction at the Butterfly theatre the first part of this week. In addition, there is being shown official war views of the world war.

MARY MILES MINTER is at the Merrill until Wednesday in "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," "The Soap Girl," with Gladys Leslie, will make its appearance on Thursday, and will occupy the screen until Saturday.

"LA TOSCA," with Pauline Frederick in the title-role, is at the Downe theatre to-day. "Tyrant Fear," with Dorothy Dalton, will be at the theatre on Friday. This theatre and the Mirimar is under the same management, and both houses are showing pictures that have recently had downtown showings.

La Crosse News Notes

GEORGE BEBAN was the attraction July 12 and 13 at the Majestic, in "Jules of the Strong Heart." Beban is a strong favorite with La Crosse audiences, and should draw exceptionally well.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, in "Wild and Woolly," stood 'em up in a return engagement at the Majestic July 10 and 11.

JUNE CAPRICE was seen at the Bijou July 12 and 13 in "Blue-Eyed Mary."

"M'LISS," that old favorite of melodrama, was brought back with its many pleasant memories when it was presented by Mary Pickford at the La Crosse theatre July 11, 12 and 13. The many friends of Mary delight in her impersonation of a ragamuffin child, and in "M'liss" she does some of the best work she has done.

"HER BOY," with Effie Shannon as the star, pleased the audiences at the Bijou theatre July 10 and 11.

Film Flashes from Flint

THE STRAND THEATRE front is being beautified by the addition of a handsome marquise canopy extending the width of the sidewalk in front of the building.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS in "Mr. Fixit," shown at the Garden July 2, 3 and 4, drew good business to the house every day of the run. Several of the evening shows saw capacity business. This Fairbanks picture was liked much better than some of the western type of plays in which he has been seen here.

AMONG the pictures shown at Flint theatres during the week of July 8 were Alice Brady in "Woman and Wife" and returns of "The Desert Man" with William S. Hart, and Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," the latter drawing exceptionally good business for a return engagement. June Elvidge in "Woman of Redemption" at the Strand and Harry S. Sheldon's "Men" at the Orpheum.

Des Moines and Iowa News

THE GARDEN showed Mme. Petrova's latest First National, "Tempered Steel," the first three days in July, in honor of the star's personal visit to Des Moines on the 2nd. The picture drew splendidly. On Wednesday the genial Doug. began a four days' record run with his latest, "Say, Young Fellow." Even the matinee houses were crowded on this picture.

BEFORE its five days' return showing of "My Four Years in Germany," the Palace devoted the first and second days in July, to George Beban's last Paramount, "One More American," and the picture went over big. The Gerard picture at a quarter admission, did a magnificent business, since the legitimate prices when the production had its first run at the Berchel about six weeks ago, were a bit stiff for the picture patrons.

THE RIALTO started out on Sunday, the first of July, with "The Yellow Ticket" for a five days' run, but the business was so exceptional and the people so mightily pleased with the screen version of the dramatic play, that it was held over the rest of the week to exceptional business.

PAULINE BECKWITH, owner of the Pastime theatre in Mount Pleasant, has purchased the Auditorium from E. H. Helmps.

B. B. BAKER, manager of the Rex theatre in Ottumwa, underwent a major operation at the hospital in Ottumwa, the week of June 23. His partner, Mr. Fry, took the management of the Rex during the former's illness. At the last reports, Mr. Baker was on the road to rapid recovery.

H. S. HOLMES and George D. Bickford, of the Graham Theatre Operative Company, opened the Opera House in Washington, Monday, June 24, with "Revelation."

THE PICTURE houses in Ottumwa enjoyed a great business on Wednesday and Thursday of the third week in June, when the Elks' Convention took place in that city. All the houses were beautifully decorated and every theatre reaped a handsome return. W. C. Silvers of the Strand theatre secured the rare head of a yearling elk and had it on display in the lobby of his theatre.

HUGH BENNETT, the enterprising owner of the Fairfield and Orpheum theatres in Fairfield, took a motor trip to Lansing, Michigan, the week of the 23rd.

C. F. SCHEE, of the Princess theatre in Humeston, paid a visit to Des Moines exchanges, the week of the 23rd. He had a private showing of "The Doctor and the Woman," the Jewel feature, and promptly booked it for a two days' run.

THE BUSY HOUR in Jefferson has been dismantled and will be made into a store room. Manager Palmer is running the Lincoln theatre every night, and the Opera House once in a while, when a special feature is secured.

FRED S. DAVIS, owner of the Opera house in Coon Rapids, has taken over the lease on the theatre from E. J. Gilluame, and is thoroughly remodeling the place. The theatre was formerly conducted upstairs; it will be placed on the first floor now and named the Lyric. It will seat something like 500 people.

POWD McLUEN is about ready to re-open the McLuen theatre in Knoxville, after a thirty days' redecorating and remodeling operation.

Olga Petrova Visits Des Moines Theatres

MME OLGA PETROVA, who is touring the country in the interests of the War Savings Stamps, paid Des Moines a visit the second of July. Arriving in the city about ten o'clock, Petrova made two appearances at the Garden theatre where she sold a total of $11,219 worth of Stamps. At the matinee performance alone she sold the largest amount since leaving New York, a total of $6,780.

After the matinee, Petrova spent the evening at Camp Dodge, where after dining with the regimental officers of the Three Hundred and Fifty-second infantry, she addressed the boys at the Y. M. C. A. auditorium.

Mme. Petrova is traveling at her own expense, carrying only hand luggage, and is accompanied only by Bobbie North, her manager. She went to Omaha from Des Moines.

The Garden was jammed to the street for two hours before the time of her appearance in the afternoon as well as in the evening. "Tempered Steel" the star's latest First National was shown.

Ike Beltman, of Indianapolis, Dies

IKE BELTMAN, former president of the Indianapolis Exhibitors' Association, and owner of the Tacoma motion picture theatre, died at the Methodist Hospital June 22, about 9 o'clock. He was 50 years old and lived at 2132 Talbott avenue, Indianapolis.

"Hearts of the World" Going Over Big in Indiana and Kentucky

"HEARTS OF THE WORLD," D. W. Griffith's latest masterpiece, under direction of the Doll-Van Film Corporation of Indianapolis has completed a big three weeks run at English's theatre. The publicity campaign was an extensive one directed by Leon Victor, booking representative, who has handled "The Birth of A Nation" in this territory. Booth Tarkington, the well known author, stated that never in the history of English's theatre was it is beautifully decorated both inside and out, with a fine lobby display of photos. The criticis proclaimed "Hearts of the World" better than "The Birth of a Nation." The Indianapolis Company is being handled by Arch MacGovern, Manager of the Company. The advance staff consists of Leon Victor and Fred E. Walters. The company opens in the northern part of Indiana next Sunday, week of July 14 at the Gary theatre. A symphony orchestra is being carried by the company also all effects and heads of departments for same. The Louisville engagement was a highly successful one having completed two big weeks at Keith's Mary Anderson theatre. This company is being handled by Daniel L. Martin, of "Intolerance" and will make a tour of Kentucky starting the middle of August, carrying a complete company, same as the Indiana organization.

Henry Dollman, President of the Doll-Van Film Corporation was highly pleased with the opening and received may commendations from prominent citizens of Indianapolis and Louisville. Mayor Jewett of Indianapolis and Governor Goodrich sent personal letters commending the production. The general offices of the Doll-Van Film Corporation are located in the Merchants Bank Building, Indianapolis, with Leon Victor in charge of booking department.

McWilliams Gets Madison Theatre

FRANK J. McWILLIAMS, one of the pioneer motion picture managers of La Crosse, formerly manager of the Bijou theatre, and later the Casino threatre, has taken over the active management of the Grand theatre, in Madison, Wis. Jay E. Sherwood, who has been Mr. McWilliams' partner for the past ten years, another veteran of the motion picture business, will go to South Dakota for several months. He still remains secretary of the combination, known as the Grand Theatre Company.

The Grand, Majestic, Olympic, Fair Play, Gem and Fuller in Madison have all had Sherwood management. Summer moving pictures at the Fuller have been in Sherwood's charge for five years. He estimates that 8,000,000 have patronized his pictures.

Mr. Sherwood is state chairman of the national war cooperative committee of motion picture men on appointment of President Wilson; former national vice-president of the Motion Picture Exhibitor's League of America; a director of the American Exhibitors' Association and Wisconsin Exhibitors' Association; former president of the latter; one of the first to show free pictures and advocate visual instruction by the use of film in the schools. For eight years he has been in charge of work in connection with motion picture legislation in Wisconsin.

"To Hell with the Kaiser" Breaks Records

"TO HELL WITH THE KAISER" opened at the Playhouse, Sunday, July 7th, breaking all house records and proving to be one of the sensational successes of the year, holding the crowds out into Michigan Boulevard. All afternoon and evening hundreds were turned away.

M. J. Frisch, New Manager Des Moines Universal Exchange

New Des Moines Man for Universal

M. J. FRISCH has been appointed manager of the Universal Exchange in Des Moines to succeed H. E. Freidman, who has been managing the office since D. B. Lederman, veteran Universal man in Des Moines, left to accept a position in New York.

Mr. Frisch left the management of the Pathe Exchange in Oklahoma City to accept a personal representative office in the Des Moines Universal Exchange and it was soon evident that his war friendship with every exhibitor in the state, and his personal amiability, coupled with his ability, made him just the man for the management of the exchange.

One of the first things he did upon entering his new office was to impress upon the minds of his staff that the motto of the exchange must be service with a capital S. He demonstrated his idea of service on the Fourth of July, when he, accompanied by William Swain, cashier of the Exchange, made a two and a half hour trip to Marshalltown to deliver "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin" to J. Jolly Jones on the Strand. The picture arrived in Des Moines about thirty minutes after the last train to Marshalltown had departed and the Frisch service wasn't yet downed.

The little facts that a regular Iowa downpour overtook Frisch on the way back and that a Ford skidded into his car, damaging it up somewhat, did not quell the wide spread of the new manager.

Mr. Frisch left Saturday night the 6th of July for Chicago to attend a meeting of the Mid-West Universal Managers at the Sherman House. On his return trip, Mr. Frisch will stop off in Cedar Rapids, Dubuque, Davenport, Clinton, Muscatine and Iowa City, to shake hands with exhibitors.

What's New in Peoria

AFTER being closed nine weeks, as the result of a fire, the Princess theatre of Peoria was re-opened Friday, July 12, with the "singing pictures," as the feature of the program.

When the patrons of the theatre returned, after nine weeks' absence, they found that the entire interior had been re-decorated so that the Princess is now one of the daintiest little theatres in central Illinois. The new decorations are of old ivory, rose and Tiffany. The lobbey also has been re-decorated and an indirect lighting system installed.

The "singing pictures" which featured the opening program were recently introduced in Chicago. This was their first showing in Peoria. The song hit presented was "Over There."

Clara Kimball Young, in "The Marionettes," was shown at the opening. The Princess management has a new line of first run Select attractions booked for the season.

"THE MILLION DOLLAR DOLLIES" made their appearance at the Apollo theatre Thursday, July 11. This was their first visit to the city. A Victor Moore comedy and the Apollo weekly of current events completed the program.

DOROTHY PHILLIPS in "A Soul for Sale" featured the bill at the Empress theatre beginning Friday, July 12. This was followed by "The Heart of a Girl," the new World picture in which Barbara Castleton and Irving Cummings are starred.

FOX SUNSHINES are being shown at the Hippodrome theatre now. These are proving quite popular with the patrons. Special children's matinees are held on Saturdays.

NAZIMOVA in "Toys of Fate" scored another triumph at the Apollo theatre the first of last week. Crowds at this play were unusually good as Nazimova is a favorite in Peoria.

Mexican Editors See "Hearts of the World"

AFTER an extensive tour of the United States, during which they had visited every important munitions factory, shipyard and military cantonment as the guests of the United States Government, twenty prominent Mexican Editors on Saturday night, July 6th, were presented with the closing argument as to why Mexico should become one of the Allies. As the guests of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce they were taken to see D. W. Griffith's screen triumph, "Hearts of the World," at the Alcazar and they responded to the tremendous scenes of the production with cries of bravo and much handclapping. During the playing of "The Marsiellaise," the party promptly rose, an indication of the respect with which France is held in Mexico.

At the close of the performance the Mexican National Anthem was given by the "Hearts of the World" Orchestra. The titles on the screen were translated by printed folders, as only four of the party were able to speak or read English. Each of the four spoke in praise of Griffith's latest production. Carlos Gonzales Pena, Editor of "El Universal Illustrada," at Mexico City, said: "We go back to Mexico feeling that we have seen France as well as the United States, thanks to your wonderful cinema. I think it should be exhibited in Mexico immediately for the effect it would have on our people. It is a glorious illustration of what France is doing."

M. Uribe y Mendoza of "El Liberal," published at Sattillo said: "I wonderfully enjoyed seeing this great play. It seems true, and no doubt every member of our party goes back to Mexico with a better understanding of conditions in France. We have many big theatres of the cinema in our country and your play should be given there as soon as possible."

"We have seen much in the past three months, but nothing with such excitement and interest as this big photoplay," said Enrique Manero of "El Economista."

The party, escorted by Lieut. P. S. O'Reilly, U. S. N. R. F., and Warren Manley, of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, included Luis Tornel Olvera of "El Universal," Carlos Gonzales Pena of "El Universal Illustrada," Franco Zamora of the "Historian," Jose de j Nunez y Dominguez of the "Revista de Revista," Leo D. Walker of "El Progresso," Manuel Carpio, who is the proprietor of "La Voce de la Revolucion," published in Merida, Yucatan, and "El Triumfo" of Havana Cuba, Jose E. Campos of "El Excelsior," Enrique Monero of "El Economista," Leopoldo Camora Flores of "A. B. C.," R. Herradar Calvo of "El Dictamen," Teodoniro L. Vargas of "La Prensa," J. A. del Castillo of "El Informador," M. Uribe y Mendoza of "El Liberal," R. de la Huerta, of the Monterey "El Liberal," Miguel Martinez Rendon of the "Nueva Patria," E. O. Herrara y Cairo of "La Prensa," and F. Y. Ossorio who represents "El Liberal" and the "Heraldo de Madrid," both of Madrid, Spain.

Metzger Goes Up; Baum in Portland

SOL BAUM, Northwest manager for Bluebird photoplays, succeeds Gus A. Metzger as general manager of the Northwest film exchanges for Universal, Mr. Metzger leaving for New York to become general manager of Jewel Productions.

Mr. Baum, one of the livest members of film row, has been Bluebird chief for more than two years. Prior to that he was handling state rights pictures. He left the lumber business to take a whirl at pictures in the early days of the industry. He operated the Casino theatre, a pioneer Portland house, then was with the Peoples Amusement Company as manager, and later connected with the National, now the Strand.

Mr. Metzger, who has been Portland Universal chief for four years, his jurisdiction including the Spokane and Seattle exchanges and their territories, came to Portland 13 years ago from Chicago. One of the first to recognize the future of motion pictures, he affiliated himself with S. Morton Cohn, founding the Peoples Amusement Company, which at one time operated 26 theatres. He stepped into the distribution end of the game in 1911, founding the Film Supply Company of Oregon, the Mutual Film Company, and finally Universal. He and his associates sold the offices in Portland, Seattle and Spokane to Universal in 1914, Mr. Metzger remaining as general manager.

The new Jewel head has been signally successful as a film distributor and is possessed of unusual executive ability.

Hugh B. Dobbs, New Manager for Select Pictures Corporation In Seattle, Wash.

Portland Mutual Manager in Army

GEORGE E. JACKSON, Portland, Ore., exchange manager for Mutual, has been called in the draft and will become a member of Uncle Sam's engineering forces this month.

Mr. Jackson has been with Mutual for three years and five months and has been Portland manager for a year. He is a successful salesman, a good executive, and is popular with exchange men and exhibitors.

Civil engineering occupied Mr. Jackson's attention before he broke into the film game, hence his call to that branch of the service.

In and Around Denver

THE MOST NOVEL patriotic campaign on record has just closed at Trinidad, Colorado, where for several weeks past, the exhibitors in that old Spanish-American city have made the admission price to children either cash or cutworms. All that was necessary for the youngsters to do was to walk up to the ticket window, throw down fifty cutworms and receive a ticket for the show.

Trinidad war gardens during the season have been infested with cutworms to such an extent that complete devastation was threatened unless something was done. That is why a patriot named Sinclair planned the war drive against the enemy.

Sinclair organized the boys and girls of the city into companies, and then appointed leaders in charge of the forces who were to wage war against the pests. His next move was an arrangement with every exhibitor for an offer of one admission for any boy or girl who would come to the box office and lay down fifty cutworms. Nearly 700 children took part in the drive and the result of the season's campaign showed a total of 100,000 cutworms. One boy who captured 5,500, was acclaimed the champion and was awarded a season ticket. Several other lads won as many as a dozen admissions.

Sinclair's drive practically eradicated the cutworms in Trinidad, and the scheme was so successful that it has been brought to the attention of the National Defense Council with a view to its adoption in other places.

AS A RESULT of the patriotic campaign of Mme. Olga Petrova a total of $22,333 has been added to the Denver war savings pledges. At the America theatre she secured pledges amounting to $7,180, at the Rialto $8,330, and $6,823 at City Park and at other theatres.

Madame Petrova was the guest of honor during her visit in Denver at a luncheon given by Harry T. Nolan at which members of the local war savings committee and film men were invited. She was also given a drive by local exhibitors to the top of Lookout mountain, where she visited the tomb of Buffalo Bill.

HENRI A. KEATES, for the past two years second organist at the Isis theatre, has been advanced to first organist. Before coming to the Isis Mr. Keates was with the De Luxe theatre in Chicago for four years, and enjoys the distinction of having played the first organ ever installed in a motion picture house. He studied music under the direction of Carl Remick, of New York City, and plays the violin, piano and French horn with the same brilliancy he exhibits when he sits at the Wurlitzer pipe organ at the Isis. He has toured the United States several times as a concert organist.

H. D. CASSIDAY, local manager for Sherry Service, announces the first five releases in Denver territory as follows: A Romance of the Underworld," featuring Catherine Calvert; "The Street of Seven Stars," and "Inn of the Blue Moon," featuring Doris Kenyon; and Catherine Calvert in "Out of the Night" and "Marriage."

"JIMMY" PROVAS, who recently went into training at Camp Cody, has disposed of the Pastime theatre at Albuquerque to George Papini, who will continue the business. A relative of Mr. Provas will look after his Princess theatre at Santa Fe until the end of the war, and Mr. Johnson, his partner in theatres at Douglas and other Arizona towns, will look after his interests in that state during his absence. Mr. Johnson and Mr. Papini were both guests of the Rocky Mountain Screen club at their weekly luncheon last week.

MRS. LEE MOTE, owner of the Acme theatre at Riverton, Wyo., was in Denver a few days ago to purchase a new automobile. She says she thought she knew all about a car before her visit to Film Row, but is now firmly convinced that she knows practically nothing.

THE DENVER FILM EXHANGE Board of Trade is now on a stronger basis than ever in point of membership and enthusiasm. The organization is now meeting every Wednesday at the Kenmark hotel, where the various problems confronting the members are threshed out at a noonday luncheon. The last two meetings were especially well attended.

CHARLES GILMORE, one of the best known film men in this territory and formerly manager for Pathe and the World in Denver, has accepted a position as road salesman for Select.

MANAGER KNAPPEN of Select, states that "The Savage Woman," featuring Clara Kimball Young, is about ready for release and will be shown at the America in Denver about August 1. The production is based on the French play of the same name.

NORMA TALMADGE will also be at the America about July 21 in "The Safety Curtain," recently screened here for the benefit of some fifteen exhibitors of this territory.

T. Y. HENRY of Foursquare is out on a mountain trip visiting exhibitors at Idaho Springs, Silver City and Georgetown.

JOE BARNETT and Gene Sherman, owners of the B theatre at Albuquerque and two of the largest exhibitors in New Mexico, visited Denver distributors last week. Among other country exhibitors to Film Row were Manager Wrightsman of the Lyric, Fort Collins; H. A. Benson, of the Gem theatre at Golden, and J. V. S. Wessels of Griffin & Wessels, owners of the Orpheum at Steamboat Springs.

Miss DuBrey says that it was a comparatively mild part and apart from doing a little opium smuggling, kidnapping, forging and several mild things like that she was quite a nice character. She will next be seen as the mother in Baby Marie Osborne's coming feature, in which she will have a congenial part.

Portland News and Gossip

JUST TO PROVE that "The Model's Confession," the Star theatre film offering is a sensational production, a Ford limousine, enclosing a female figure, adorned the lobby of that Portland house during the screening of the Universal five-reeler.

PORTLAND FANS are in a condition of expectancy for Clara Kimball Young and Olga Petrova are to be visitors within the next few days; Petrova at the Liberty and Columbia, and Miss Young at the Majestic.

J. B. SPARKS' Opera House, at Heppner, Ore., was destroyed by fire, not long ago, and more recently his Star theatre was so damaged by fire and water during the disastrous conflagration which almost razed the town, that Heppner had no theatrical entertainment for a number of days.

A. BUTLER has installed a motion picture machine at Ashford, Wash., way up in the Mount Rainier-Tacoma country, and will run pictures once a week for the tourists.

THE BROADWAY THEATRE, Portland, has closed for the summer.

SAM MENDELSON, manager of the Empire, Anacortes, Wash., has resigned and will open a house of his own, "The Rose."

F. B. WALTON, former owner of the Rose, at Colfax, Wash., has bought the American at Bellingham, Wash.

UNIVERSAL subjects made a big splurge in downtown Portland theatres recently. "Smashing Through" at the Star, "Midnight Madness" at the Strand, "The Kaiser" at the Sunset, and "Boy Scouts to the Rescue" later in the week at the Star, was the schedule.

WALTER B. ARMSTRONG, manager of the Strand theatre, Portland, is going to spend a barrel of money this summer in renovating the house. Two new Simplex machines have already been installed, new scenery, including two tormentors, grand drapery and satin olio, will soon be on the stage; while new carpets, new stage floor, painting inside and out, and a new hanging lattice for flowers and vines for the Washington street lobby will soon greet the eyes.

THE 1918 HUDSON supersix stolen from "Oregon City" Long, prominent exhibitor, has been located in southern California.

What Seattle Exhibitors Say

THE L. J. SCHLAIFER ATTRACTIONS COMPANY is putting three new salesmen on the road. One of them is a woman, Miss Cornilia Ahlgren. The other two are Art Winstock and C. A. Chester. They are going out on 14 Ivan features.

THE DANZ BROTHERS, who are acquiring a monopoly of the theatre business in the southern end of Seattle's business district, are more than pleased with the business their new "Rialto" is doing.

THAT BUSINESS is still in the air, although summer has come upon us is proven by the fact that The Exhibitors' Film Exchange is still doing big business with "My Four Years in Germany," "Tarzan of the Apes," "The Fall of the Romanoffs" and their other features.

C. M. BIGGS, a prominent young railroad man of Seattle, has taken over "The Madison," a photoplay house at Broadway and Madison streets. During the first week he has done good business for the summer and is certain he will do better as time goes along.

THE JOHNSON SEATING COMPANY recently sold a Power 6A machine to the Kennicott Copper Company in Alaska.

C. H. ARTHUR, JR., of the Portland branch of The De Luxe Feature Film Company, has been in Seattle during the week of July 1st, visiting the main house. While in Spokane he sold "Hearts of the World" to J. W. Allender. Allender will run it at least three weeks. He will stage a beautiful tableau in connection with the play.

NORMA TALMADGE in "De Luxe Anne" opened at the Coliseum, Seattle, on a Saturday night following a two weeks' run of "My Four Years in Germany" and at 9:30 that night there was a crowd a block long in front of the Coliseum. The house record had been shadowed. Jensen and Von Herberg are contemplating repeating this "Select" picture again in the near future for a full two weeks' run.

E. I. HUDSON, one of the most popular film men in the Northwest, has severed his connections with the Seattle branch of the Goldwyn house and has joined the Seattle "Select" office.

MANAGER H. B. DOBBS, of Select in the Northwest, returned to Seattle June 30 from a trip to New York and Chicago. In Chicago Mr. Dobbs attended the managers' conference, to which he had been called. While in New York, Mr. Dobbs re-edited "War Brides" for national distribution. In its new edition this great picture is meeting with immense success everywhere and will go on in Tacoma at the Apollo for the week of July 27.

NORTHWEST MANAGER A. W. EDEN, of the Fox Films Exchange sent a new salesman out on the road for "Salome" and a couple of days later received notices from his men that business was written up.

MANAGER CARL STEARN, of the Metro office, Seattle, left Wednesday, July 10, for Portland, Spokane and other Northwestern cities, with the Metro's great feature, "To Hell With the Kaiser."

H. LUSTIG, western representative for Metro, left Seattle Tuesday, July 9, for Los Angeles, Cal.

MIKE LYONS, up to a short time ago proprietor of The Palace, sold his place out to M. Mizuta. Mike is well known among the film men of the Coast and is looking around for something good. He is now in California, but will return before he spends all his money.

MANAGER JOHN HAMRICK of the Rex has opened another new house in Seattle, which he calls The Jem.

W. J. DRUMMOND, branch manager of Perfection Pictures, is receiving many compliments because of the float he fixed up in the parade held on July 4 in Bellingham, Wash. He arranged certain effects from "The Unbeliever" in such a manner that they could not help but attract attention.

C. D. BEAL, formerly of the Perfection office in Salt Lake City, has joined Mr. Drummond as a booker. G. F. Churchill, of Los Angeles, Cal., has joined the Seattle office of Perfection Pictures, as shipping clerk. He has taken the place vacated by Mrs. Scott.

AL H. WEST of the Babcock, Billings, Montana, and C. Cady, his advertising man, were in Seattle July 5. They, together with some of the boys on Film Row, gave Ed. Head, who was West's partner before he went to Camp Lewis, a great ovation. West went over to the camp and brought him to Seattle for the ovation.

MISS GRACE SANDERSON, who has written the scenario of "The Finger of Justice" and "More Deadly than Battle," is now in Seattle where she has opened a sales office at 2016 Third avenue. She finds it more profitable to do her own booking. Her two pictures are taking very well. "The Finger of Justice" has already been contracted for at the Rex, Seattle, for the week beginning July 21. The Little Theatre will then put it on the screen. Miss Sanderson will appear at each performance, wherever it will be shown.

San Francisco News Condensed

A DELEGATION of film men, headed by Louis Reichert and M. J. Cohen, on July 9 attended the opening of the new theatre built by the boys of the U. S. Naval Hospital, Mare Island. The inaugural performance was a stage play written and produced by hospital corps talent.

THE PARK THEATRE on Devisadero street has been closed.

BRUCE JOHNSON of Turner & Dahnken announces that on account of the increasing office duties at the Circuit headquarters, Manager Wilson of the T. & D. house at San Jose has been transferred to San Francisco as assistant general manager.

MRS. MAY PETTINGILL, who, with her husband, conducts the Pastime theatre at Eureka, has been in San Francisco, getting in touch with the film conditions and booking a number of attractions.

THE THEATRE in the little mountain town of Jackson, Amador County, was too small to handle "The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin," and so N. S. Kelsey, prominent mining man and chairman of the Red Cross Chapter in Jackson, arranged to have the picture shown as the final attraction at the Fourth of July picnic. He arranged personally for the renting of the picture, machine and operator, and gave an open-air production that was free to the entire community.

"THE AMERICAN," a three-reel picture made in San Francisco by the Liberty Feature Film Company, a new local company, was booked at the St. Francis theatre for the week of July 7. H. E. Wallace of San Francisco directed the picture and local talent was employed, for the most part, with Marjorie Riley of Hollywood as the star.

FRANK ATKINS, manager of the Atkins theatre, Marysville, has again put his Hawaiian show out on the road. He was a recent visitor in San Francisco.

T. F. McCULLOUGH, formerly of the Jewel theatre, has become manager of the sales forces for Mutual.

ROBERT DRADY, manager of the Alhambra, has returned from a visit to Camp Kearny, where his son is stationed.

MANAGER ROSS, who owned and operated the Premium Circuit of theatres several years ago, has purchased the Hayes theatre.

PHILIP GARCIA of the Motion Picture Operators' Union has been called to the colors.

MANAGER CHARLES ROHRER announces the closing of the Edison theatre, Sacramento.

L. ALEXANDER, district manager of the Parex Sherry Service, with headquarters in Los Angeles, has been among the San Francisco exhibitors and he announces much interest in the coming releases.

MANAGER W. HENNING of the New Empire theatre, Red Bluff, has taken over the Red Bluff Opera House, formerly owned by J. M. Deeds, and is remodelling it.

"THE UNBELIEVER" opened at the Oakland Auditorium on July 13 as the feature attraction of Marine Corps Day, with music by the Marine Corps Band of eighty pieces. The seating capacity of the Auditorium is 7,000.

MR. AND MRS. REX MIDGELEY entertained Grace Valentine at a luncheon in the Hotel Oakland on Friday, July 5. That afternoon Miss Valentine appeared at the American theatre, Oakland, where her photoplay, "The Unchastened Woman," was running. She was welcomed by Mayor John L. Davie and was literally showered with flowers.

M. O. EDMONDS, manager of the Majestic theatre, Reno, was in San Francisco a few days last week making his August bookings.

EUGENE ROTH, manager of the California and Portola theatres, has contracted for the entire new series of Sessue Hayakawa productions.

SOL L. LESSER is supplying three United States Official War Films daily to the Allied War Exposition, which opened in San Francisco on July 7.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG "adopted" Company B, Twenty-fourth Battalion, at the Presidio in San Francisco, pledging her word to send cigars and cigarettes to the men once in two weeks. The soldiers elected her their captain.

WINIFRED KINGSTON has been the object of much society attention in San Francisco. Last week she assisted at the Red Cross Tea Shop in the California theatre. Among her guests at a Cliff House luncheon was Mrs. W. B. Kibbey, of Tucson, Arizona, at whose famous ranch a number of thrilling Wild West scenes have been filmed.

Olga Petrova devoted Wednesday, July 10, to War Stamp Work in San Francisco and found time for a hurried visit to the Tivoli, where her "Tempered Steel" was one of the attractions.

Slipper to Handle Simplex

J. SLIPPER and Company of Los Angeles, has been appointed distributor for Southern California and Arizona of the Simplex projecting machine, and has in the recent few days, taken orders for a number of these projectors which will be installed shortly.

"Kaiser" Turns Portland to Verse

CONNECTED with Universal's Portland exchange is a peculiarly modest individual who writes poetry on the exchange manager's desk calendar when on one is looking and then signs his verse "Sam E." At times his efforts are good. Sometimes they're just fair and still other times they're awful, but his recent poem on Kaiser Bill has swept through the Portland territory like wildfire and has already travelled East.

Here is his verse, just as it was originally written. Although Gus Metzger, manager of the Portland exchange, has announced that a check is ready and waiting for the mysterious "Sam E.," he hasn't come forward to claim it as yet.

"The Kaiser" on a "Risky Road,"
This Beast of old Berlin,
He boasted that he would "Come Through"
And still he is not in.
He said the U. S. couldn't fight,
But just you wait and see,
For every "Scarlet Drop" he takes,
He'll pay me back with three.
He sent out many a "Mystery Ship,"
Like pirates did of old,
He thought he'd buy this country off,
By passing out "Thieves' Gold."
He sure has the "Grand Passion,"
But Old Glory called his bluff,
And proved the land of Liberty
Was made of the Reel Stuff.
We'll sink "The Kaiser" "20,000
Leagues Under the Sea,"
So "The Hand that Rocks the Cradle"
Will forevermore be free.

Quimby Visits Los Angeles Branch

FRED C. QUIMBY, general sales representative of Pathe Exchanges, Inc., spent three days of the past week in Los Angeles with Manager Tate, after a trip over the northwest, and a stay of a few days at San Francisco. This is Mr. Quimby's first visit to Los Angeles since he took up the position of special representative for Pathe, and the fact that his stay in Southern California was very short, indicates he found everything in excellent condition respecting the distribution of Pathe Pictures.

A portion of Mr. Quimby's time was spent with members of the several different producing units of the Pathe organization located at Los Angeles studios. He was also guest of honor at several social functions given by Pathe principals.

Mr. Quimby has been absent from New York almost a month, and it will be fully that long before he returns to the eastern film metropolis. He spoke very enthusiastically concerning conditions in general, and with those respecting Pathe in particular. In some sections he said the warm weather

First Hickman-Barriscale Done

BESSIE BARRISCALE has just completed the first feature she has been starred in under the direction of Howard Hickman, and a rough perusal of the film, before it was cut, gives promise of a splendid and vastly interesting photoplay. Miss Barriscale gives a fine performance in this (does she ever do otherwise?) and the direction shows that Mr. Hickman has been misdirecting his energies, for he has turned out a production well above the average. The feature, which will be released by W. W. Hodkinson, is now called "Conscience." A feature to be looked forward to.

Theatre Owners Fail to Hear "Fatty"

THE regular bi-weekly luncheon of the Theatre Owners' Association of Los Angeles, held at Hamburger's Cafe at noon, July 10th, proved to be a very pleasant and entertaining affair. Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle and his entire company were scheduled to appear and furnish the entertainment on this occasion, but were away on location and could not attend. During the course of the luncheon Marshall Stimpson, and Professor Fritz, Four Minute men, together with Judge Summerfield gave patriotic talks. No business of the association was brought up.

May Boost Laboratory Prices

ADVANCE in prices of all chemicals used in photographic laboratories, may cause an increase in the price fixed by west coast laboratory firms. It is pointed out that two years ago methyl developer could be purchased for three dollars and seventy-five cents per ounce, while at the present time, imitation domestic product is thirty-five dollars per ounce. Hypo which formerly sold at one dollar and forty-five cents per keg, is now five dollars and twenty-five cents per keg, and hydrochinone, which two years ago could be purchased for fifty-three cents per ounce is now two dollars and sixty cents.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

D. S. MITCHELL, Arizona salesman for Vitagraph, who is now covering the territory of that state, writes to the Los Angeles Vitagraph branch that many of the theatres in the smaller towns throughout Arizona are planning on closing their houses several days each week, and predicts this policy will be adopted in all of the towns with the exception of Phoenix, Bisbee, Tucson, Prescott, Clifton and possibly one or two others.

THE NEW VICTORY THEATRE at San Pedro is to show Paralta Pictures, contract having been made for the service by Manager F. O. Adler this week.

JO. JOHANSEN, owner of the Casina and Yuma Theatres at Yuma, Arizona, and other houses at Somerton, Gladstone and Imperial, California, is in Los Angeles to remain until after the hot weather is over. His son, Roy, is in charge of the several theatres. Mr. Johansen reports business for his theatres, the only ones in the towns named above, to be at its lowest ebb since he opened his first house which was four or five years ago.

THE ONE-REEL RE-ISSUES made by the Essanay Company of the Broncho Billy subjects, are proving very popular throughout the Southern California territory, and thirty different subjects are now in continuous use, which means solid booking for approximately three months, has been made by Manager E. H. Silcocks.

THE TAYLOR HOLMES subject, "Ruggles of Red Gap," is now having its first run in Los Angeles at the Garrick theatre where it opened Sunday, July 7th, and played to line-up business afternoon and evening.

ROBERT AMADOR, Vitagraph salesman, is making the coast territory, and finds less complaint in this district from exhibitors respecting attendance, than in any other section of Southern California.

HARRY D. NAUGLE, special western representative of Vitagraph exchanges, returned to Los Angeles for a brief vacation, before again taking up a tour to the various exchanges he supervises. Mr. Naugle's home is in Los Angeles, and here he gets to spend about four weeks in each year, the balance of the time being taken up with making four trips over his territory.

MANAGER AL KAUFFMAN of the Gem theatre at Colusa, California, had a unique experience last week when patrons of his theatre insisted that he give a midnight matinee. "The Kaiser" was being shown at this theatre on this occasion, and Kauffman had locked the entrance door, after closing the box-office. People who wanted to see the show, beat on the door until they were given admittance.

THE ST. ANDREWS THEATRE on West Jefferson street, Los Angeles, which recently underwent considerable improvement, was re-opened Saturday evening, July 7. Diles Shaw, who formerly conducted the Columbia theatre on the same street, is the new lessee of the St. Andrews. He has enlarged the theatre, added a number of more chairs, and installed modern equipment.

THE EMPRESS THEATRE, Phoenix, Arizona, owned by John Barncord, and with a seating capacity of about 600, has been closed for the balance of the summer season.

JOHN C. MOORE, who for the past two years has served as manager of the Phoenix, Arizona Universal exchange, has tendered his resignation and Pat Steveson has been employed as his successor.

C. L. THEUERKAUF, Universal salesman, now making a tour of southern California and Arizona, sends in contracts for Jewel, Blue Bird and Universal Special Features for the Rainbow theatre at Glendale, Arizona, managed by G. A. Cox; the Liberty theatre at Needles, Arizona, and others of that territory.

THE AIRDOME, owned by J. J. McCondra, at Casa Grande, Arizona, has been closed for the remainder of the summer, due to excessive warm weather in that section.

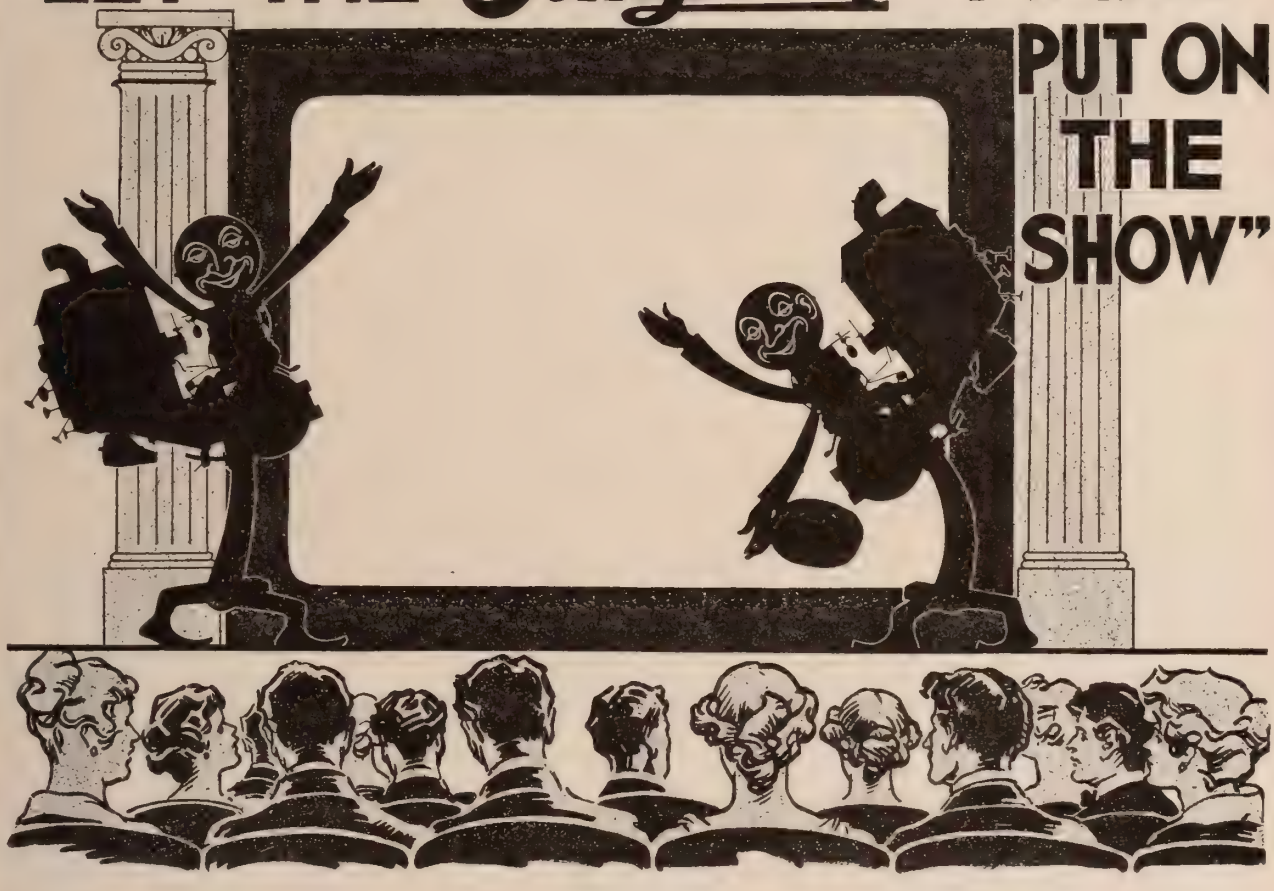
"LET THE Simplex TWINS PUT ON THE SHOW"



"LADIES AND GENTLEMEN:

"We are the Simplex Twins, and desire to speak a few words to you.

"Our Manager has taken pains to select pictures that will afford you the highest degree of entertainment, education, and amusement.

"But he knows that no matter how excellent a subject may be, its good effect is lost, and your eyes are injured, if the picture is not projected in life-like manner, or if it quivers or jumps.

"In order to prevent this and to save your eyes from all strain, the Manager has engaged us, because he knows of our successful work in the highest-class Theatres all over the world.

"We do our work in that room up yonder, so you will not see us. But when the show is over you will appreciate that we were kind to your eyes, and you will decide to come again. We thank you."

"Speaking of embargoes on imports—can you imagine a laboratory telling a customer that he would have to improve the quality of his photography or take the subjects to some other laboratory? Watterson Rothacker did that a few weeks ago to a good steady account. And what is more—he didn't tell us about it himself."

"This may sound like an ad, but we just had to tell you about it to show how fast this old game of ours is moving."

We don't know how or where the Motion Picture News gathered this information, but we do know that we have no desire to do business with anyone who does not aid in protecting the interests of the Exhibitor and Exchange by furnishing negative of proper photographic quality.

Neither do we care to negotiate with anyone who is not prepared to furnish satisfactory evidence of both intention and ability to live up to our requirements.

Vitagraph Serial "A Fight For Millions" starring William Duncan is wonderful serial. First episode held audience spellbound at Park Theatre. I consider it one of the best of seasons. Exhibitors that have never run serials will make no mistake booking it. Our house plays to the best people in Boston and New England. This serial will prove a good business builder to everyone who plays it. I cannot speak too highly of the episodes I have seen. I could write more but it is not necessary.

He wasn't exactly what you would call moral, Olsen wasn't, but the royal blood of manhood coursed through his veins, and when his life's great crisis came—when it was a question of his liberty or the safety of the woman he had come to love—he took the long chance, and "went up" for five years.

And in the heart of the woman he had protected was implanted the magic seed of love which sprouted and flowered into fullest bloom during the dark days of his imprisonment.

But when he came back—back to freedom, to life, and love—it was she who, curbing her desire, decided that their paths had best separate. The danger, the zest and excitement of the old life was in her blood, while he had felt the call to the path of righteousness.

And yet—they were but on the threshold of a new existence. Fate had set the stage for them—the curtain was rising on the tensest act of their life-drama. And—after the world had turned on him, not for what he was, but what he had been, then he found the one thing he needed was the love of a woman whose love had been tested in the crucible of sacrifice.

ROPED!

Here is a new way to capture Western badmen—
Guaranteed successful if done as

Anita King
"The Outdoor Girl"

does it in her swift "Votes for Women" photo play entitled

"PETTICOATS and POLITICS"

a timely comedy-drama in which Miss King demonstrates the "superiority" of women by winning a "Sheriffship" and a husband as well.

A clean and fascinating photo-play that will dispel that "tired" feeling.

See it on Wednesday and Thursday.

ALHAMBRA THEATRE

Believing that we can make our advertising space of value fo the exhibitor we are devoting it to practical demonstrations of the exploitation and advertising angles of the pictures we are distributing.

For example, the ad. above represents one advertising and selling angle of the first Plaza picture "Petticoats and Politics."

It brings out Anita King's athletic ability, the Western atmosphere, and one exciting incident in the picture.

We have made provisions to supply the above ad. in suitable sizes (single, double, and triple column) to any exhibitors wishing to make use of it. The electros we will supply may be obtained in either 65 screen for newspaper work or finer to suit any purpose.

In our effort to make Hodkinson Service mean more than just pictures we shall be glad to receive any suggestions you may have.

By

J. GRUBB ALEXANDER and FRED MYTON

Produced under the personal supervision of

ROBERT BRUNTON

Directed by Raymond B. West

As "Ariel," Bessie Barriscale is seen in the role of a little waif in a fishing village of Scotland, whose destiny is shaped by the falling of an aeroplane from the sky. How the little girl falls in love with the young aristocrat who is injured in the crash, and how she follows him to London, where she becomes the idol of that great city, presents Miss Barriscale in one of the most convincing roles in which she has appeared.

"The Great Love"

In Seven Reels

IN A STRANGE STORY BROUGHT OUT BY THE CYCLONIC EVENTS OF THE DAY—

We Have Tried At All Times to Give You Our Best

ASIDE FROM THE CAST OF WELL KNOWN PLAYERS IN OUR LITTLE PLAY WE HAVE SOME OF THE MOST FAMOUS SOCIETY WOMEN OF ENGLAND, INCLUDING QUEEN ALEXANDRA, LADY DIANA MANNERS, PRINCESS OF MONACO, ELIZABETH ASQUITH, COUNTESS OF DROGHDA, COUNTESS OF MASSARENE, HON. MRS. MONTAGUE, MISS VIOLET KEPPEL, MISS BETTINA STUART WORTLEY, LADY LAVERY, APPEARING IN BEHALF OF WAR CHARITIES.

Again we have the pleasure of picturizing MR. HENRY WALTHALL, to whom we owe a debt of gratitude for so many exquisite performances in the past, including the Little Colonel in "The Birth of a Nation," also,

MISS LILLIAN GISH, who created a real sensation as The Girl in "HEARTS OF THE WORLD," where her acting proved to be a revelation.

ROBERT HARRON, whose acting is so natural that it conceals acting, is again with us.

ROSEMARY THEBY, who plays in splendid contrast on the thunder theme opposite the part enacted by Miss Gish.

GEORGE SIEGMANN, who is remembered as Silas Lynch in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" and Von Strohm in "HEARTS OF THE WORLD," also plays an important role, also GEORGE FAWCETT, the eminent character actor, GLORIA HOPE and MAXFIELD STANLEY.

WE HAVE DEVOTED THE SAME CARE AND ATTENTION TO "THE GREAT LOVE" AS WE DID TO "HEARTS OF THE WORLD"

"THE GREAT LOVE" is timed 14 minutes to the reel, with seventy-five turns to the minute on the Sixth Reel.

The same people who arranged the famous music for "HEARTS OF THE WORLD" also arranged the musical score for "THE GREAT LOVE," and a copy is sent with every print.

WE SEND "THE GREAT LOVE" TO YOU WITH ONE HOPE—THAT IT WILL BRING YOU SUCCESS.

RELEASE DATE, AUGUST 12th—BY ARTCRAFT.

SINCERELY,

D W Griffith

The Splendor of Great Hopes, Desires. The Glory of the Courage of the Human Heart.

See how Jim Young, of Youngstown, Pennsylvania, matches skill and brains against a Prussian Plot to wreck the city of London.

See the sailing of the great fleet of Zeppelins; the swirl of the German air squadrons sweeping the sky and the glare of bursting shrapnel.

See how noble women of England are fighting side by side with our heroine in our little play.

Extraordinary as it may seem—a story taken from actual events.

Glories—thrills—excitement—on the stage of now, where Fate, the Greatest Director, is putting on the most magnificent drama the world has ever seen.

Lillian Gish

LILLIAN GISH has proven that she is not only beautiful, but as a dramatic actress in the art of real acting, so natural that it does not appear to be acting, she stands unsurpassed.

You have seen her in "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" and in "HEARTS OF THE WORLD," where she proved a revelation.

SHE IS NOW TO BE SEEN IN A FEW NOTES FROM THE GREAT PAEN OF PRAISE SOUNDING FROM EAST TO WEST

"This Gish is a comely thing and intrigues me. As the heroine of Prof. Griffith's movie, she reveals herself as its most spectacular feature."
GEORGE J. NATHAN.

"Lillian Gish is exquisitely sympathetic. Her emotions stand forth with expressions as eloquent as they are silent."
NEW YORK HERALD.

"The acting of Lillian Gish as the simple little peasant girl, as the budding woman, then the dementia of extreme suffering, back to normality and happiness, EXCEEDS ANYTHING I HAVE EVER SEEN ON STAGE OR SCREEN."
ANNA MOODY LAWRENCE, Chicago Post.

"Lillian Gish scores as the heroine of the sweetest, most sublime appeal. There is something DIVINE about her portrayal of the Girl of France."
WASHINGTON HERALD.

"She plays fine and subtle harmonies upon the heart-strings of all who watch her."
PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC LEDGER.

"Lillian Gish possesses a beautiful tragic mien which puts her among the foremost dramatic stars of all time."
FLORENCE LAWRENCE, L. A. Examiner.

You are Familiar with ROBERT HARRON'S Work. Seven Years ago he started with Mr. Griffith at the old Biograph Studios

A FEW EXCERPTS FROM THE DRAMATIC CRITICS THROUGHOUT THE LAND:

"ROBERT HARRON plays his part with wonderful intelligence in a language that all can understand. He dignifies the screen."

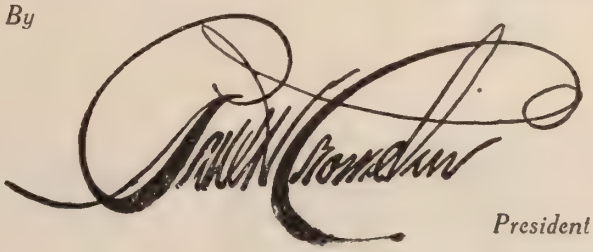
Little Talks with Foreign Buyers—No. 16

By



President

"ADVERTISE!"

"MADE IN AMERICA" on a film is to all the world a mark of excellence. So many thousands of dollars have been spent in improving American films—making them photographically perfect, technically correct and giving them the finest acting talent to be had—that foreign publics prefer American pictures to any other. And the American producers have been wise enough to go out and secure stories of international appeal, as against those with the old, strictly national appeal. Small wonder that YOUR audiences enjoy every one of them! A good American picture is as sure of success in Paraguay as in Pennsylvania! Foreign distributors should stimulate their exhibitors to give American films the utmost publicity available. Encourage them to put out plenty of advertising matter, to buy space liberally in the local press and to persuade the editors to run attractive departments of picture news. The big word in picture exhibiting today is, ADVERTISE!

Rialto Theatre,
Butte, Montana.

Dear Sir:-

Upon your kind invitation, accompanied by a number of the employes of the City Hall, I attended the presentation of the moving picture entitled: "My Four Years in Germany." I desire to say that it was one of the most entertaining and instructive performances I have ever attended.

If the importance of the scenes could be impressed upon the people of Butte and their attendance could be secured, I am positive that the Americanism and true patriotism of our citizens would be greatly increased.

I wish it were within the power of the City of Butte to so arrange matters that a ticket could be purchased for each and every resident of this county, believing as I do that it is the most instructive picture I have ever seen and one that cannot help but build up true patriotism and a love of liberty in the hearts of every one witnessing the same.

With many thanks for your kind invitation, I am

Yours very truly,

W. H. Maloney

Mayor.

Gentlemen;-

The writer wishes to express his gratification over the splendid results secured from the showing of "Pershing's Crusaders" during the present week.

Capacity houses greeted it continually, and it attracted a patronage heretofore not seen in the theater. People came from the most remote parts of the county and it had an especial appeal to the farmers and their families.

The continued applause throughout each show attested the pleasing power of the films and quite a good deal of favorable criticism was heard.

There is no question but what the films induced patriotism. They should be shown in every town and hamlet for this reason if no other, although I can hardly conceive of an exhibitor presenting the picture without reaping a splendid profit.

Yours truly,
Geo. A. Bleich.

24 SHEET IN BELGIAN COLORS—BLACK—YELLOW—RED.

Presented by

THE CITY OF BRUSSELS

This PHOTO-HISTORY of Belgium, dating from the Revolution of 1830 to the opening of the WORLD WAR in 1914, was made under the supervision of the City of Brussels as a contribution to the Archives of the Government.

The scenes of the early historical part were enacted in the exact locations in the streets, parks and palaces of Brussels where the events occurred in 1830; and the costumes are true reproductions from originals of that period in the Museum of Brussels.

Leading events in the reign of LEOPOLD I. are ably portrayed, including the presentation of the First Steam Locomotive in the World to the King whose financial assistance enabled the inventor Stephenson to construct it. The original locomotive, now in the Museum of Brussels, is shown in operation under its own power.

LEOPOLD II. became King of the Belgians in 1865; and under his able guidance Belgium became the fifth commercial nation of the world.

The scenes taken at the Coronation of King Albert I. are the most gorgeous of their kind ever shown in pictures.

The events of the WORLD WAR from August, 1914, to the arrival of Pershing and Our Boys were photographed by French and Belgian Official Photographers as they were occurring and are guaranteed to be authentic.

The high lights of this Vivid Photo-History show in detail the following events: Celebrating Declaration of War in Berlin; German Troops leaving Berlin for the Belgian frontier; Invasion by the Huns; Defense of Liege; Fall of Louvain; Entry of the Huns into Brussels and Ghent; The Destruction of Antwerp; Battle of the Yser Canal; Destroyed cities and pathetic scenes of the Refugees; Deportations; The Coming of the French and British to the aid of Belgium, showing all branches of the service in action; The Battle of the Marne and a continuous story of the War to the present time, including the American Troops.

These men are shown in person and in action: King Albert I., the Kaiser, King George V., President Poincaire, Lord Kitchener, Joffre, Foch, Haig, Pershing, Gerard, Brand Whitlock, Cardinal Mercier, Edith Cavell, Hindenburg and the noted "Aces" Thaw, Lufberry, Prince and Cowden.

TEN REELS and ACTION in EVERY FOOT—WONDERFUL MUSICAL EFFECTS

The pictorial paper furnished with "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief" is from Original Drawings by noted French and Belgian Artists and has never been equaled by any Motion Picture publicity.

All pictorial paper is in the Belgian Colors—Black—Yellow—Red—and are to be had in the following sizes: One 24 sheet, as shown above; one 6 sheet, four 3 sheet, and four 1 sheet. Also one sheet blocks, window cards and herald.

REVIEWED by BELGIAN OFFICIALS and declared Historically Correct

Endorsed by the Belgian Government Officials; and when shown under the auspices of the State Council of Defense of Illinois, at the AUDITORIUM in Chicago, netted in excess of $17,000 in six days.

Facts Concerning

William A. Brady's Big Picture

"STOLEN ORDERS"

It ran 6 successful weeks on Broadway. The New York papers were unanimous and enthusiastic in approval.

Washington went wild about it and paid the regular, legitimate theatre-prices to see it.

Boston is to see it next week at the Shubert Theatre, where the usual first class scale of prices will prevail.

If it can play legitimate theatres at regular prices, what will it do for you.

Lewis J. Selznick has purchased the New York State Rights for circulation through Select Pictures Corporation. It will be shown in all Marcus Loew theatres.

It is attracting purchasers from all parts of the world. The sun never sets on "Stolen Orders."

It is not a war picture—but it is a stirring, thrilling, hair raiser, with its eight reels jammed full of love, sport, jealousy, crime, passion and humor—played by an all-star cast.

"Stolen Orders" is Selling Like Hot Cakes!

To the Exhibitor:
If you bought a piece of real estate and foresaw that its value would quadruple if you held it a certain length of time, what would you do?
Certainly you would hold it. That's just what we did with "Triple Trouble."
Essanay made this picture with Charlie Chaplin when he was at the zenith of his laugh-making powers. We knew its value then. We knew there would come a time when it would be worth many times its weight in gold.
We held this negative in our vaults for the most opportune time of release, which we believe is NOW.
There has been only one new Chaplin film in several months. The public is eager for a NEW Chaplin comedy and will welcome "Triple Trouble" with open arms.

We were!

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 18. No. 5 August 3, 1918

Shake Hands—Gentlemen!

MR. SCHAEFER—this is Mr. Rembusch!

Mr. Rembusch—Mr. Schaefer!

Shake hands, gentlemen—and draw up your chairs. Here's a table in the corner where you can have a smoke and a good long talk about the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the American Exhibitors' Association and the chances of bringing the two together into one organization worthy of the name picture theatre exhibitor.

We're simply introducing you.

The main matter is up to you.

We don't want to butt in; and we've nothing up our sleeves—nothing to sell you in the way of trade papers, co-operative buying societies, pictures and the like.

We'd like to bring you together—that's all—to the end of exhibitor organization.

Mr. Schaefer seems to be a pretty good fellow, Mr. Rembusch. He's jovial, keen, wealthy. The most practical argument we heard, at Boston, in his favor is that he's made too much money to be tempted by anything a League Presidency could give him—like a salary or an enterprise capitalized upon the League's name and the scare it throws into the manufacturer.

They say he wants the Presidency for a hobby; and that he'll work as devotedly as men always do over their hobbies.

His success commands respect, and he looks like a man who can fill a chair solidly and say yes or no and get away with it.

If you think there's any political twist to him—an undesirable affiliation with the former President for instance or with any concern or individual in the trade—why not ask him point blank about it?

As we size him up he'll give you a straight answer—one that will stand. Successful men always stick by their words.

Anyway, get everything off your chest—right away. Have it out. Don't let gossip and rumors persist. They're generally groundless; and if not—find the ground!

As for Mr. Rembusch, Mr. Schaefer, we've known him for a long time.

He is—we feel—one of the few known quantities in the picture business.

His main fault is writing letters—but that indicates a candid, if not a cautious, man, and he says he gets a lot of fun out of it.

He stands more for exhibitor organization—and he stands more from it—than any man we know of. He has also worked harder and got less out of it.

The first time we met him, five years ago, and the last time we saw him, a month ago, he was sweating and worrying over organization same as ever—and then wondering why on earth he did it.

He's an idealist—that's the answer. But we didn't tell him that for fear he'd quit working.

He's a regular rather-have-organization-than-be-President sort of fellow. He'll never be happy till he gets organization.

With all that he's got a lot of good shrewd sense and he smiles and stays cool.

You two fellows, it strikes us, ought to work mighty well together—make a good business partnership for a league to have.

But if you've got any doubts about Mr. Rembusch, Mr. Schaefer, put them up to him. He's candid, too, and honest clear through.

THE sense of the Boston Convention, as we saw it, was to provide, through the election of officers and through committee appointments, for an amalgamation.

It's too bad they didn't make the constitution and by-laws all over to that end. This constitution and in particular the by-laws, it seems to us, are considerably off—to say the least.

But that's your business, gentlemen. There ought to be some way to give equal representation to the two bodies in event of amalgamation; or, if not, to provide for that next year; or at least to be sure that there will be no selling out of the League to politics or commercialism.

Committees, we might add, are more important to administration than presiding officers. They should be, in every democratic body.

The big point, after all, is organization.

You haven't got it today; neither one of your bodies has it.

You don't begin to represent the picture theatres of the United States.

The aggregate investment of these theatres runs into the hundreds of millions. It is the one great asset of this business.

Yet your treasury balance the year around is less than one day's receipts of one leading theatre.

Your fees are ridiculously low. So is your membership.

You do not include the leading houses of the country.

THE Boston convention was only an election of officers. The election was the sole point of interest. Had it been held on the first day, a quorum of delegates would not have remained.

There's lots to be done, gentlemen. If you are going to have a National organization you've got to have one that works the year around, one in which a convention is an important incident, but not a supreme and sole function—and a silly one at that.

Shake Hands—Gentlemen!

Don't be afraid of telling the truth, gentlemen; it should be told. Every exhibitor should hear it.

If you don't mind—Mr. Rembusch and Mr. Schaefer—we'd like to talk out loud in the matter.

Every exhibitor—who isn't an organization man—ought to know that it's his lack of interest that has made organization what it is today.

He's the man who is most to blame.

But we believe he is going to feel very differently now. And our belief is a strong one.

The President has asked for the screens of the country to help win the war.

He counts them very high as a factor.

These are not empty phrases.

They are plain, practical truths. We could tell you at length how solemnly they are regarded in the high councils of the war and the war relief agencies.

These screens should be given to the President—as millions are giving their lives today, through organization—through the ranks.

We de not mean to say that the individual screen has not already been freely given to war work.

It has and will continue to be.

But to be the great factor the screen can be, the organized screen must be given.

And the organized screen must be given by an organization—by an exhibitor organization.

So a higher call is made upon you today—you exhibitors who are not members or active members of an exhibitor organization.

The call is made upon you as an American—not merely as an exhibitor.

It's a call you can't possibly turn down.

There can be no single excuse.

You can't say you're too busy. There's many a busier man today who's shouldering heavier loads for Uncle Sam in addition to his own.

He wants to look back at the terrible but glorious epoch and feel he did a little to help.

So do you.

We are not criticizing. You are just as good and willing an American as we are, but perhaps you haven't thought what a great factor your screen is, and how it becomes still greater as a working unit in an organized screen and how you have got to join an exhibitors' organization to make your screen a part of the war-winning force.

Get busy now—for time is short. Hunt up your State League and join it. Write us if you don't know how. But take action!

We are talking now to every exhibitor. The organization wants you, your best efforts—not merely your small dues.

Your country wants you.

And we are talking particularly to you larger exhibitors—to you Mr. Rothapfel, Edel, Soreiro, Crandall, Tom Moore, Hulsey, Boehringer, Richards, Katz, Barrett McCormick, Marcus Loew, Sievers, Roth, Grauman, Clemmer, Von Herberg, Turner & Dahnken, Harold Franklin, Frank Newman, Landau, McGee, Perry, Carpenter, Partington—there's a lot more of you.

You fellows ought to be at work right on organization committees on each league.

No matter how much you're doing individually, you can do more by working for others, with others, through organization.

AND now, Mr. Schaefer and Mr. Rembusch, we come back to you.

These very same arguments—the same call from America—applies to you.

You must bring your two organizations together.

Mr. Rembusch is going to hold a good convention in Chicago, September 3-7, Mr. Schaefer. He's going to show you how a convention can be given over to practical business and to war co-operation with politics put 'way aside.

But don't wait for Chicago—or St. Louis.

Begin your work right now. See to it that every exhibitor joins his State League. Demand it—in the name of Americanism.

Draft him!

And then when the St. Louis convention comes we'll see what we've always hoped for and lied unmercifully about—a convention of thousands of exhibitors, representing fully the industry's greatest and most enduring branch, congratulating themselves that they put the American picture theatre on the world map, and made the American motion picture a great force in building the morale of the boys in the trenches and the homes they left behind them; and then working democratically, wisely and on the convention floor to give the box-office a greater and more enduring business value.

Something to Remember

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League Convention at Boston demanded a fifty per cent representation on the Board of Directors and all committees of the National Association.

We understand that a meeting of the National Association is in prospect for the near future to consider the League's attitude.

Which brings us to a point worth mentioning.

At the same convention at Boston the Exhibitors' League passed a resolution doubling the membership of its committees preparatory to possible amalgamation with the American Exhibitors' Association.

Should not the National Association directors, in view of this latter resolution, postpone action on the fifty-fifty demand until the September convention of the A. E. A. discloses that body's attitude?

This is not an idle question, for even a short memory will recall a previous tangle of the Association and A. E. A. that should enter into the present calculations.

It looks like the choice of prudence for the Association to mark time until September and then give consideration to any proposals put forth by a united and solid exhibitor organization.

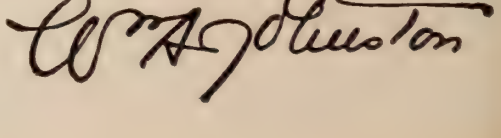
Hitting the Nail

BALTIMORE reformers were not satisfied when the City Council recently passed an ordinance permitting Sunday baseball, but took the issue into the courts.

Judge Dawkins none too gently turned them back, and in closing his opinion denying their application to overrule the Council said: "The voice of the people is the voice of God and must be upheld."

Remember that thought:

"The voice of the people is the voice of God and must be upheld."



Serving It with Speed and Ginger

Abe and Mawruss—with offices on the 729 Curb—are in again.

Says Abe: "Tell it me, Mawruss, when those Leaguer fellers ask it the manerfacters for a fifty-fifty percentage on all committers und indirecters did they mean it also fifty-fifty on all assessments?"

* * * *

SINCE Abe has reminded us of Boston we may perhaps be pardoned for adding a few impressions gathered in meeting returning visitors to the Hub.

No one doubts that Pete Schaefer's closing convention will muster more exhibitors than the sorry seventy-odd showing that gathered to hear Lee's exit march.

A few are waiting "to be shown"—declaring the harmony talk to be mere camouflage. But these same few are willing to give the politicians a fighting chance to make good—and are therefore refraining from anything that might be interpreted as obstruction.

To some extent these men are right—there is still some house-cleaning to be done by the League—in such matters as the present by-laws, for example—before we can hope to read "They lived happily ever after."

Those who ought to know are betting on "Pete" Schaefer to meet the issue squarely and fairly.

* * * *

Says Abe again:

"Tell it me, Mawruss, why is it some knockers they say it wasn't a real Business Convention when by me it seems business was booming. Didn't I hear how some one got a first-class printed bunch of stock for nuttin' and also how some lawyer he got nine thousand dollars for fighting the musicker tax and y'understand, Mawruss, he ain't neither a Hughes, oder a Stanchfield oder Gerard?

"Some salesmen, Mawruss, could carry a sample case of this here Snappy Stories to a Stenographers' Picnic and then tell it you there wasn't no Business."

BUT speaking of lawyers, we have just read Lee Och's parting speech and learn therein that during the past year "some of the trade papers have been malignant in their attitude."

Which—while taking our breath away—also reminds us of the recent announcement of a likeable contemporary that during the coming year its policy would be "a virulent one."

Disease is surely running rampant these days.

But one more thought regarding Boston and we will be through.

We think a word of praise is coming to the New York delegation headed by Messrs. Cohen, Mannheimer, Reilly, and Berman. They went to Boston without a candidate and but one axe to grind—harmony. Their members were released from the unit rule. They returned to New York after feeling a few turns of the steam-roller—but without a sore spot and ready to jump in and work constructively towards—harmony.

Go to it, boys.

Met James McBride, who came from the newspaper and political games to enter the screen ranks as aide to Winfield Sheehan, general manager of Fox.

Felt a bit upstage at first—the supposed proper attitude toward a newcomer in Filmland.

And then a fifteen-minute talk showed that this James McBride already has a pretty big bump of film knowledge and talks real, solid film sense.

Why, we have to admit that he probably knows as much as we do ourselves—and isn't that the height of admissions from a film man?

"MAYER and Gordon Unite." There's a news story in this week's issue that will be read with interest by those knowing the New England situation.

The move means Mayer's entry into the councils of the First National, and the withdrawal of his New England interests from Metro—duplicating in the latter respect happenings of a few months ago.

The announcements made public so far say nothing about the distribution plans for the coming Anita Stewart productions under Mayer's management.

But neither the task of putting two and two together nor of reading between lines should prove extremely difficult.

Last week we said something about Frank Tichenor's choice of floors in 729 which makes all elevators stop at his New York exchange.

This week we dropped over to his Forty-fourth Street office and found a staff of girl elevator operators.

"Tich" seems to be running in elevator luck.

DENIS SULLIVAN is succeeded as Assistant General Manager for Mutual by Arthur Kirkpatrick.

You'll want to read that story this week and get a line on Brother Kirkpatrick.

Adolph Zukor has the wheels oiled and greased for the picture industry's share in the next Liberty Loan drive.

Read that story—because when the drive comes You, Us, and Company will be pretty busy people, and you'll wonder why you didn't keep posted by following all the early news.

The Fifth Division of the National Association will hold a get-together luncheon on July 31.

Make a note of that now—if you are a member of the Fifth Division or if you ought to be. If the former—be there; if the latter—'phone John Flinn, now.

Guests are wanted. They'll introduce the members to each other.

* * * *

By the way, the affair is called a "Mitt Me Luncheon," but the "mitt" is pure slang and not Teutonic.

And no matter what the name, it is a great idea—and sure does give one "a grand and glorious feeling."

IT'S STARTING SOMETHING! Now let's keep the ball rolling.

WE had expected to tell you this week the answer to the query: "What Kind of a Fellow is —— Edel?"

But last minute pressure on the news columns forced us to hold the feature over till next week after it had been set in type and ready to run.

We have the room, though, for a word of apology to Manager Edel for a few words appearing on this page recently which unintentionally made it appear that he was trailing someone else when he presented the three-reel novelty "Outwitting the Hun" as a feature.

As a matter of fact Brother Edel had a double feature bill—no less a person than Mary Pickford being also on the program.

"MICKEY," you've heard and seen that name for over a year. You've asked us a thousand and one times for information about it.

Well, the suspense is over. Motion Picture News this week gives complete reviews of "Mickey"—and, as usual, FIRST AND EXCLUSIVELY.

P. S. Harrison talks on Page 719; Peter Milne on Page 790.

Chaplin Slightly Injured in Accident

The First National Exhibitors' Circuit was informed by wire on July 23 that Charlie Chaplin was slightly injured at his studio in Hollywood during the production of "Shoulder Arms," his newest picture, which deals with the war. A number of small cans containing powder to make the effect for bursting shrapnel in a scene were fastened over a trench, and the scene had been rehearsed several times. During lunch time, the wire stated, the wires connecting the explosives, had been tampered with, and it is claimed several lead slugs were placed in the can directly above where Chaplin "goes over the top." The can "exploded" and Chaplin was burned about the face and hands, and his uniform was burned. He continued with the scene.

A wire received by Motion Picture News on Thursday from its West Coast correspondent states that Chaplin was badly burned by an accident due to a short-circuit, but makes no mention of suspicions of tampering.

Lightless Nights Again Put in Order

Lightless nights throughout the United States, in a further effort to save coal for consumption next winter, have been put into effect again by the Fuel Administration.

Administrator Garfield has ordered four lightless nights a week in New York State, New England, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and the District of Columbia. Throughout the rest of the country two nights a week will be observed. The four nights designated for the East are Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, but to swing the schedule into its stride, the Fuel Administration started with Wednesday, July 24, and followed it up with the next night as well. Broadway was as dark as upon any night last winter, when the coal-saving plan was first tried out.

According to statistics prepared in Washington, each lightless night saves more than 1,000 tons of coal.

Motion picture theatres do not expect to be hampered by the order, as the public is more or less educated to the lightless conditions and seek their entertainment regardless of electric signs and street lamps. Necessary lights in open air theatres are exempted from the ruling.

Pathe Sets Date for Summer Outing

Governors of the Pathe Club announced last week that the annual midsummer outing will be held Sunday, August 25. Executives and employees of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in New York City comprise the membership of the club. Provided a suitable steamer can be chartered, a trip up the Hudson is the present plan for the day.

Honor Roll

Arthur Johnson, salesman for Mutual out of Denver, has gone to Duluth to report to the draft board. He will be assigned to Camp Dodge.

Charles G. Epperson has resigned as Denver manager for Pathe on account of a call to the colors, and has departed for Colorado Springs, where he is taking a three months' course of training at the radio school recently established by the War Department at Colorado College.

Joe Sternberg, of the World Pictures laboratory, who has had charge of all film for this concern from the time it left the camera until it was shipped to the branches, has joined the photographic division of the signal corps.

Russell E. Smith has relinquished his position as scenario writer and publicity man for the Betzwood Film Company of Port Kennedy, Pa., and entered the U. S. Army, being now in training to strafe the Hun.

Seven additional stars have been added to General Film Company's service flag in recent weeks. Four employes of the Cincinnati exchange, one from Cleveland branch and two from the Boston exchange have entered the service. Cincinnati employes who have entered the service are: James Boston and William Redmond, former shipping clerks; James B. Neff, booker, and John Pfeifer, assistant booker. James R. Beale, booker at the Cleveland exchange, enlisted in the navy and has been sent to the Great Lakes training station. Daniel O'Brien, of the Boston office has enlisted in the Merchant Marine, while W. L. Jennings of the same office has enrolled as a Y. M. C. A. hut secretary and will sail shortly for France. Fred Flarity, formerly manager of the General's Buffalo and Albany exchanges, is a member of Company 5, Fourth Training Engineers Regiment, stationed at Camp Humphreys, Va., where he is working hard for a commission.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is the justly proud wearer of a single service pin, while the same emblem in a flag conveys its message from the window of his limousine. The star is for his elder son, J. Stuart Blackton, Jr., who at the age of twenty is now doing his bit "over there" as a corporal in Battery E, Fifty-Ninth Artillery Corps, American Expeditionary Forces.

Joseph Henaberry, author and director of two of Douglas Fairbanks' Artcraft pictures, "The Man from Painted Post" and "Say, Young Fellow," has been called to the colors. He left Hollywood for Fort MacDowell, San Francisco.

Another member of the Fairbanks organization to be called to the colors is William Shea, who holds the distinction of having assembled and assisted in the editing of every Douglas Fairbanks production for Artcraft to date, starting with "In Again, Out Again," and concluding with "Bound in Morocco." Shea is now at Camp Kearney, California, where he has been assigned to special duty that deals with film entertainment for the soldiers.

Rolin Studio Raises New Service Flag

A new service flag with eleven stars was hoisted to the peak over the Rolin Studios in Los Angeles the other day by Hal Roach, president and director-general. The players and studio workers who have gone to the colors from Rolin Studios are as follows:

Herbert Brodie, Naval Reserve, San Pedro, Cal; "Slim" Voorhies, Coast Artillery, Ft. MacArthur; J. B. Roach, brother of the chief of Rolin with the 47th Regiment, U. S. E. F., now "Over There"; Walter L. Adams, acrobatic actor, now in the Aviation Corps, Kelly Field, Texas; "Sandy" Roth, U. S. N., Mare Island, Cal.; Clyde Hopkins, actor, now with Signal Corps in France; Lige Cromley, Corvallis, Ore., in government school of gasoline engines; Ray Kellerman, former purchasing agent for Rolin, with Engineers Corps in France; Charles Stevenson, in training at Camp Kearney, Cal.; Joe Matice, U. S. Aviation timer searcher, Vancouver, Wash.; Max D. Hamburger, cook at the Presidio, San Francisco.

Company Produces Only Patriotic Films

Los Angeles is to be the producing headquarters for a film company which was recently organized in New York, and will be known as the C. R. Maculey Photoplays, Inc. Mr. Maculey has arrived in Los Angeles and is now busy making necessary arrangements for production, which will be started within a month. Donald Woodruff of New York, business manager of the company, is expected in Los Angeles shortly. The plans of the company provide for the filming of spectacular patriotic subjects.

Ince's Honor Roll

A service flag with seventy-five stars was flung to the breeze from the flagstaff at the Thomas H. Ince studios recently. Charles Ray, donor of the patriotic emblem, conferred the honor of raising it on Enid Bennett, youngest of the Ince stellar constellation.

Julian Eltinge Signed

It was announced July 23 that Fred J. Balshofer has contracted with Julian Eltinge for several motion picture subjects, and is now at the Ansonia Hotel in New York to arrange the release of the films.

"Hands Up" Shown

Pathé announced July 25 that the first and second episodes of "Hands Up," its newest serial, will be shown to the trade at a private exhibition on August 2, at the New York theatre roof.

In and Out of Town

J. W. Burke, president of Mid-West Greater Features Company, Denver, Colo., is in New York looking at the current productions offered on the independent market. "Stolen Orders," "Parentage" and "Raffles" are among the purchases made by Mr. Burke for the territory of Colorado, Wyoming, Utah, and New Mexico.

Harry Sherman, Sherman Productions, arrived in New York this week with a print of his first independent production, "The Light of the Western Stars," featuring Dustin Farnum.

Hugh Hoffman, formerly of the Moving Picture World staff, now with Sherman Productions, in the capacity of a representative, is in New York.

W. E. Drummond, Knoxville, Tenn., prominent independent buyer and distributor in the Tennessee, Alabama and Kentucky territory, was in New York this week, looking at the current productions offered on the independent market.

Bert Glassmire, formerly production manager for Keystone Comedy Company, Los Angeles, dropped in on New Yorkers this week to spend a few days on business.

Louis B. Mayer, Boston, ran down to New York from his New England haunts last week, on business over the week-end.

W. F. Rogers, exchange manager, General Film, returned to the New York offices this week after a trip throughout the country on a visit to the general exchanges.

Kleine Leases Play House in Chicago

George Kleine has leased the Play House, formerly the Fine Arts theatre in Chicago, for first run presentation of his new features. He opened with "The Unchastened Woman" with Grace Valentine as the star and scored a success and will follow with the new Charlie Chaplin comedy, "Triple Trouble." Mr. Kleine will also present at this theatre his new Italian war picture, "Behind the Lines in Italy."

"Waifs" Shown Over There

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announced this week that among the pictures selected for showing to our doughboys in the Y. M. C. A. entertainment huts in France is "Waifs," a Pathe production in which Gladys Hulette is starred.

The fact that Miss Hulette is the wife of Captain William Parke, Jr., of the Royal Flying Corps, who is now detailed on duty in France, will probably lend added interest to this picture when the Yankee boys see it.

Louis Mayer In First National

Forms Partnership with Nathan H. Gordon of New England—Offices To Be in Several Cities of East

A BUSINESS change of unusual importance to the exhibitors of New England and to producers of independent special feature film productions comes with the announcement that Louis B. Mayer has joined interests with Nathan H. Gordon of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit of New England, with offices in Boston, New Haven and other centers which will shortly open. In so doing Mr. Mayer has given up his entire holdings in the Metro Film Exchange and will devote his entire attention to this new combination.

Mr. Mayer has been a pioneer in the exploiting of independent specials in New England, having exploited such attractions as "Traffic in Souls," "Cabiria," "The Birth of a Nation," "The Whip" and "The Kaiser."

Before entering the motion picture business Mr. Mayer had long been associated with the legitimate stage and theatre, having several legitimate stars such as Nance O'Neill, A. H. Wilson and others touring under his management, and entered the motion picture business as a full fledged showman. A great deal of the success Mr. Mayer has attained in the motion picture business he attributes to his long experience and early training in the legitimate and vaudeville field.

The firm of Gordon & Mayer, as it will be known hereafter, will handle nothing, in addition to the releases of the First National, but special productions of merit and box office value, and such attractions must be capable of special extra exploitation; producers offering such on the independent market will find ready buyers in Gordon & Mayer.

It is Mr. Mayer's intention that a Gordon & Mayer exploitation of specials in the New England States shall be carried out on a scale as big as though it were a national proposition. Each production released in New England will be backed up by chain newspaper advertising. Novel ideas for the presentation of each production will be carefully worked out by Mr. Mayer, assisted by an organization of trained experts, each man a specialist in his line, so that when an exhibitor books a Gordon & Mayer attraction he is assured of everything in the line of advertising, etc., that should produce box office results during the engagement of the film in his theatre.

Gordon & Mayer control the First National releases for New England. Chaplin, "Pershing's Crusaders," "Tarzan of the Apes" and "My Four Years in Germany," which is now on its fourth month at the Tremont Temple, Boston, Mass., are a few of the specials which the firm is now handling, and negotiations are under way and contracts have already been closed for the purchase of several important special productions, which they will shortly announce to the trade in New England.

Coming simultaneously with this announcement of a consolidation of the Gordon and Mayer interests is the announcement to the trade that Mr. Mayer has secured the release of Anita Stewart from her Vitagraph contract.

Court Ruling Affecting Ohio Censors

The censor leader of the Ohio Board of Censors must appear every time a picture is shown on the screen. This is the verdict handed down this week by Police Judge McGannon, in the case of ack Kuhn, manager of Loew's Stillman theatre, Cleveland. Kuhn claims that he ran the leader at the first showing of "Prunella," the particular picture under discussion, but that he did not know that the leader must appear at each showing. Mrs. Maude Murray Miller, chairman of the Board of Censors, came to Cleveland from Columbus to prosecute the case. Kuhn was fined $5 and costs.

"Extras" of Draft Age Told to Work

Members of the Los Angeles draft boards interpret the Crowder "work or fight" ruling to refer to employes not permanently employed, which includes extras at the studios. Twenty-seven of these players within the draft age were arrested July 22 and taken before the draft board, where they were directed by Chairman J. M. Long to secure work or enter military service.

Kaufman Takes Bride at Washington

Lieut. Albert A. Kaufman, Signal Corps, U. S. A., who for three years was studio manager of the Famous Players Film Company and later the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation previous to joining the Photographic Division of the Signal Corps, was married Thursday, July 18, at Washington, D. C., to Miss Rita A. Krone, of New York. The bride is a screen player, having appeared in "The Song of Songs," an Artcraft picture, in which Elsie Ferguson was starred.

Among those in attendance were Mrs. John O'Brien, sister of the bride; Miss Mary O'Brien, Eugene Zukor, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; Frank Meyers, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Laboratories; Ralph Kohn and Capt. L. M. Moody.

War Service Postpones Mask Ball

The mask ball which was to be given by the Motion Picture War Service Association of Los Angeles has been postponed from August 3 to August 10 because the association is conducting the Government's war exhibit in Los Angeles the first week in August.

Amendment Plans Elimination of Police Head

For several months the city council committee on judiciary has been struggling with a proposed amendment to the motion picture censorship ordinance in an effort to take away the censorship powers of the second deputy superintendent of police. This started before Maj. Funkhouser was suspended.

Alderman Maypole's compromise amendment eliminates the chief of police from having any powers in the censorship matter, and vests them absolutely in the second deputy, who is to be guided in his issuance or refusal to issue permits for motion pictures. A summary of the latest Maypole proposition is:

"Pink permits," licenses for showing pictures only to adults, are abolished.

Permits shall be issued when a majority of the censor board shall approve a picture. If five of the twelve censors declare against a picture it shall have no permit.

The censor board shall have the right to recall for re-examination any picture and shall have right to revoke a permit by a majority vote.

All pictures approved by the board shall have a label indicating that it has been approved.

The present censorship ordinance provides that the chief of police shall issue or reject applications for permits. The chief may be guided by the censor board or can ignore its recommendations.

The present ordinance also vests certain censorship powers in the second deputy, which the Maypole amendment takes away.

Brady Corrects "Stolen Orders" Impression

William A. Brady announces that "Stolen Orders," the New York state rights for which have been sold to Lewis J. Selznick, will be distributed by the Select Pictures Corporation in New York State only. The recent publication of a statement that "Stolen Orders" had been secured for distribution by the Select is in error, with the exception of its application to the State of New York, and has led to the impression that the exclusive right to distribute "Stolen Orders" had been secured by the Select. Mr. Brady desires to correct this impression.

Division of Films Names New Releases

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information and the Merchants' Association of New York, announce that, owing to the arrival of new and vitally interesting material from the American front in France and the desire to incorporate it in the United States Government's second official war picture, "America's Answer," the private showing arranged for Monday evening, July 22, was postponed until Sunday evening, July 28, at the George M. Cohan theatre, at 8.30 o'clock.

Buffalo Film Circles Find Things Lively

(Special to Motion Picture News)

BUFFALO.—Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, has been appointed a member of the local food administration publicity committee. He will mobilize the exhibitors in the interest of a slide campaign.

E. O. Weinberg is soon to celebrate his second anniversary as managing director of the Elmwood theatre at Elmwood avenue and West Utica streets. Mr. Weinberg has built up a large patronage during his term of office.

The Family theatre has been co-operating with the local Marines this week by showing "The Unbeliever," and by having "soldiers of the sea" speak from the stage. Many recruits were procured for the corps at this theatre through the efforts of Manager Samuel Carver.

Earl L. Crabb has "shot" some excellent films of the stunts staged at Lafayette Square by the local unit of the Duryea War Relief fund.

Billy West, manager of the Regent, is complimenting himself upon his inaugurating children's matinees at this house every Saturday afternoon. A capacity house, made up exclusively of mothers, sisters, daughters, nieces, aunts, grandmothers, etc., usually greets this matinee.

"Hearts of the World" will be shown in Buffalo, commencing Monday evening, August 12, in the Majestic theatre, legitimate house.

During the same week Shea's Hippodrome will show Griffith's "The Great Love," and the Strand "To Hell With the Kaiser."

Lionel Edel, who has been manager of several houses throughout the State, principally in Buffalo and Syracuse, is seeking the post of manager of one of the Liberty theatres in the army cantonments. Mr. Edel, whose home is in Buffalo, is a brother of Harold Edel, manager of the Strand, New York.

Arthur C. Willats, who is handling the travel pictures produced by the Post Film Company through the Buffalo Evening News, reports many bookings in western New York. Shea's Hippodrome is showing the pictures each week end and the News is publishing a descriptive article the day the picture opens.

Petrova's Tour Reaches Twin Cities of North

Madame Olga Petrova appeared in St. Paul and Minneapolis on Friday, July 17, devoting one day of the tour she is making for the United States Government to the Twin Cities. The Polish star was greeted by a crowd of people who attended a noon-day open-air meeting at St. Paul. She was introduced by the Mayor of the city, who told the assembled throng of the work she was doing in the sale of War Savings Stamps and outlined the object of her patriotic tour across the continent. The screen star sold over $19,000 worth of War Saving and Thrift Stamps.

A. E. A. Establishes Chicago Headquarters

Permanent headquarters of the A. E. A. were established last week in the Hotel Sherman, Chicago, and will be kept open until the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association convenes September 3 to 7.

Plans for the convention which has been termed "a business meeting of the entire industry" are well under way and the extensive publicity campaign planned, which hitherto was held in abeyance out of deference for the Boston meeting, has been put into operation.

Frank J. Rembusch, national secretary of the American Exhibitors' Association, who has been making frequent trips from his home in Shelbyville, Ind., to Chicago, in the interests of the affair, has called for a list from each of the State organizations of members in good standing. Oklahoma was the first to respond with seventy-two names.

President Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va., whose continued ill health makes his appearance in Chicago in September uncertain, has written to Mr. Rembusch suggesting that the proceeds derived from the grand ball, planned for the closing night of the convention, be given to the Red Cross. This suggestion has met with instant response from the members of the entertainment committee.

Ohio League Elects Officers at Cleveland

The semi-annual election of officers of the Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League was held last week in Cleveland with the following results: Henry H. Lustig, unanimously re-elected president; Sam H. Barck, vice-president; Sam Bullock, secretary, and Adolph Mahrer, treasurer.

The principal business of the meeting, other than the election of officers, was devoted to a discussion of arrangements for a big picnic, to be held the early part of August. It is the intention of the League not to confine the picnic to exhibitors alone, but to include the exchanges and the operators, as well. To this end, a committee of three exhibitors was appointed to meet with a committee of exchangemen, and a committee of operators, for the purpose of working out arrangements which will be satisfactory to all. Ernest Schwartz was appointed by the chair, as head of the entertainment committee. He will be assisted by Dave Schumann, chairman of the committee on general arrangements; Sam Bullock, publicity manager; W. J. Slimm, and M. B. Horwitz. Schwartz's idea is to advertise a series of contests with prizes, so as to arouse an active interest in the outing.

Sherman in the East

Harry Sherman dropped into New York on July 24, direct from the West Coast. It is understood Mr. Sherman descended upon the metropolis to dispose of the Dustin Farnum subject, "Light of the Western Stars."

"Schaefer and Harmony" the Winners

Exhibitors Look Forward to Amalgamation at A. E. A. Meeting in September—Brady Again He[illegible] National Association—Boston Wind-u[illegible] Peaceful

EXHIBITORS present at Boston for the annual League Convention returned to their homes this week with "Schaefer and Harmony" the cry. Even the New York delegation, which claimed full justification for a fight right up to the moment the last gun was fired, swapped its grievances for a "watchful waiting" policy in order that nothing might stand in the way of the prospects for harmony.

Peace seemed to be in the air on Friday, the day of the wind-up. The National Association sidestepped the chance for a fight on the League's demand for fifty-fifty representation, and after inducing William A. Brady to assume the presidency for another year, appointed committees, read self-commendatory reports and disbanded.

"Tay Pay's" Speech an Event

On the previous evening T. P. O'Connor, M. P., film censor for Great Britain, was the guest of honor at the National Association dinner and contributed the speech that was the event of the week. "Tay Pay" paid his respects to the ignorant critic of the screen and also explained the workings of his department of censorship. He painted a glowing picture of the future of the motion picture in educational and propaganda work and gave a few hints to American producers on the English market.

In addition to re-electing President Brady, the other officials of the association were named with few changes from last year's roster. The list follows:

Vice Presidents—Peter J. Schaefer, Adolph Zukor, P. A. Powers, William L. Sherrill, Paul H. Cromelin, W. C. Smith, E. M. Porter. Treasurer, J. E. Brulatour.

Executive Committee—Walter W. Irwin, chairman; Peter J. Schaefer, Lee A. Ochs, A. S. Black, P. A. Powers, William L. Sherrill, Arthur S. Friend, Samuel Goldfish, Paul Brunet, Paul H. Cromelin, J. E. Brulatour, Richard A. Rowland.

Brady Nearly League Head

The election of Peter Schaefer to head the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League came on Thursday afternoon following an illy-matured attempt to elect William A. Brady to the post.

President Ochs, after calling the convention to order on Thursday afternoon, announced that all other business having been completed, the election would now be held. He made a brief address, stating that he would give the new president loyal support, whoever was elected.

On the first roll call Connecticut passed, Illinois passed to Minnesota, whereupon Thomas Furniss, of Duluth, Minn., arose and placed in nomination Peter J. Schaefer, of Chicago; Iowa seconded Schaefer. Maryland passed to New Jersey, whereupon C. L. Dooley placed his nomination Dr. Hespe, of Jersey City; Mr. Lyden, of Massachusetts, nominated Mr. E. G. Horstman; Pennsylvania arose and withdrew the name of their candidate, J. H. O'Donnell. When New York was reached, Wm. Hilkemeier second the nomination of Dr. Hespe, and Sidney J. Cohen arose and placed in nomination the name of William A. Brady. In the balloting that followed it appeared that the New York delegation was split evenly, twenty-four delegates being accredited with this State body.

Previous to the roll call President Ochs had read a letter to the convention from William A. Brady, in which Mr. Brady stated that he had been asked to take the presidency in order to bring about harmony and amalgamation between the two separate exhibitor associations. He stated that he would accept the offer, giving up his producing activities and making any self sacrifice necessary, provided, that first, he would be the unanimous choice of all the candidates; secondly, that amalgamation would be brought about between the M. P. E. L. of America, and the A. E. A.; and thirdly that the taking of the office would in no way interfere with his present office as president of the National Association.

Mr. Brady's nomination was seconded by Sol Berman, of Brooklyn. The point was then raised as to whether or not Mr. Brady was an exhibitor, and whether his eleventh hour election by the New York delegates through Local No. 1 was valid. A ruling by the Chair was called for, and President Ochs ruled that Mr. Brady was not an exhibitor and therefore not eligible for the office. Mr. Kinkaid, of Boston, appealed from the decision of the Chair. A roll call sustained President Ochs' ruling, the votes being 115 in favor of the Chair's ruling and 15 against. Mr. Kinkaid had seconded the nomination of Mr. Brady, evidencing the fact that the Massachusetts delegation, like the New York, was also split, the balloting being on a basis of 17 to 4. Pennsylvania on the second ballot gave 4 of its votes to Schaefer, and 4 to Horstman; Horstman was backed solidly by the exhibitor delegates from Connecticut, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, except for the split among the Massachusetts delegates. The first ballot gave Schaefer 51 votes, Horstman 42, and Hespe 49, the total of delegates being present having been named at 132. After several recesses and late in the afternoon the Horstman and Hespe delegates went solidly to Schaefer, who was elected president.

In addition to the proceedings narrated in last week's MOTION PICTURE NEWS, the events of the week included speeches by William A. Brady to the exhibitors on the work being done by the National Association, a plea for amalgamation from Charles Pettijohn, and the passing of a resolution condemning the practice of inserting advertising in sugar-coated form in feature productions, and the approval of a bill for $9,200 from Milton Goldsmith for legal services in connection with the music tax fight.

The attitude of the A. E. A. towards amalgamation was expressed in the following telegram sent to Charles C. Pettijohn in Boston by Frank Rembusch:

"In deference to Boston we delayed announcement until now of the great national motion picture meeting in Chicago at the Sherman Hotel, September 1 to 7. Kindly extend heartiest invitation and welcome to all exhibitors, distributors, producers, and other workers in the industry to attend this meeting. I regret absence from the only convention missed since we had the first meeting of the industry in Cleveland years ago.

"Organization of exhibitors is more necessary and activities more urgent now than ever. Believe exhibitors desire real organization promoting their best interests but have lost faith because some leaders have preferred self and personal interests, side issues and entangling alliances before the interests of exhibitors.

"The American Exhibitors' Association holds steadfast to the principle of exhibitors first and our organization in a practicable way works out the protection of those interests that are identical and common to exhibitors. Our meeting will be an open one to serve the best interests of the exhibitors and industry as a whole and we reiterate our welcome and invitation for all to come to our great gathering."

Grist from the Copley-Plaza Lobby—By F. J. B.

Dr. Hespe says he would have had a great deal better chance of being elected had it not been that Lee Ochs kept him awake two nights rehearsing his speech to its author, Milt Goldsmith.

Bill Salem Wright has always been strong for authentic locations. Bill was born in Boston and spent considerable money in automobile hire hunting up the authentic location of his great grandfather, Cotton Mather.

Bill incidentally says he does not care what the tax of the League was but he did not get proper returns from the investment of $55 which he and Martin Quigley made.

Merritt "Ponderosa" Crawford had the hearty assistance of all his friends in making an impression with his new boss, Martin Quigley.

No, Hartman, that was not a foot race you saw, it was merely Sam Grant dodging Fred Elliott. Elliott knows whether he got his $100 a week extra salary from the Exposition Company. Grant didn't get his yet and he does not know whether Elliott got his or not. Incidentally, Hartman has not yet wirelessed whether he got his.

The politicians who had Pete Schaefer's campaign in hand must have wired him that everything was fixed, for Pete appeared at the Convention all dolled up like a bridegroom with one of those "cat that ate the canary" smiles, and a bank roll of elephantine dimensions, which he started blowing on his arrival.

Speaking of bank rolls, Hector M. G. Pasmezoglu was reputed to have had a considerable bank roll to bring the next convention or exposition (if there is one) to St. Louis.

Did you ever hear Charlie Pyle, he of the Bartola Musical Instrument fame, make a speech? If you haven't, again I ask you, Mawruz, don't.

Charlie was trying to create an air of respectability around Boston by chaperoning his brother, Ira Pyle, who is some pippins in his home town where he is in the real estate business, and also is grand exalted ruler of the Elks whose convention he has just attended at Atlantic City.

Many of our best known movie actresses spend a lot of money on photographs showing that they can shed real tears. We might suggest to some of them who have not yet learned the art that they communicate with C. C. Pettijohn. Charlie waved the American flag and spilled brotherly love for Lee so strenuously that two great tears trickled down his nose and splashed on the floor. It may be that those tears were being shed prophetically for the boom that busted which was engineered by Charlie and a couple of amateur politicians from the trade papers.

That old boom looked good for a few minutes about 2 A. M. on Thursday morning, and some of the amateurs thought they were fixed for life, and were proudly patting themselves on the back as the original Brady man. About 5 o'clock Thursday afternoon you couldn't find any one around the Convention Hall who knew anything about it.

One of the girls at the Palm Garden cabaret wanted to know what the $4 per capita tax, which almost caused a fight, really meant. When it was explained to her she understood the psychology of it at once, for she said: "Fifty or sixty of them came out here and they gave away a lot of badges, but that is all they did let go of."

It is best not to say much more on the subject of cabarets.

Zukor Outlines New Loan Plan

Industry Will Extend Valuable Co-operation When September Drive Makes Self Felt—Stars To Do Their Share

FOLLOWING his recent trip to Washington, where he went to confer with Frank Wilson, director of Publicity for the Fourth Liberty Loan, and the various district governors and directors, Adolph Zukor, chairman of the committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department, called his committee together July 22 at the office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Those present besides Mr. Zukor were J. E. Brollatour, Marcus Loew and W. W. Irwin. After briefly emphasizing the importance of the part which motion pictures are expected to play in the national publicity campaign for the Liberty Loan, which will be launched on or about September 28, Mr. Zukor laid before the committee the plan suggested at the Washington conference. In this connection he read the following letter he had just received from the Treasury Department:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, July 19, 1918.

Mr. Adolph Zukor,
485 Fifth Avenue,
New York City, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Zukor: Please accept the thanks of the Treasury Department for coming to our meeting of Publicity Directors and Sales Managers and outlining the nature of the co-operation to be expected from the Motion Picture Industry in the coming campaign.

All of our men expressed great enthusiasm over the motion picture campaign which we have outlined, and I sincerely hope that we will be able to fulfill all expectations.

Your appearance here made a decided impression upon the men, and I am sure it has contributed materially to the continuance of the friendly relations which we have always enjoyed.

Again thanking you, I am,

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) FRANK R. WILSON,
Director of Publicity.

The plan of the Treasury Department briefly is as follows: The services of various stars will be enlisted, each to make a picture of about three hundred feet in length. The negatives are to be delivered to the Government on or about September 1, at the very latest. The general plan of these pictures will follow the "Swat the Kaiser" film, which was produced by Douglas Fairbanks for the Third Liberty Loan campaign and which was universally commended.

Prints to the number of between three thousand and four thousand will be made from these negatives and distributed to the various Federal Reserve Districts, and all prints will bear an announcement something as follows: "The U. S. Treasury Department, in co-operation with the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, presents the following plea for Liberty Bonds."

In accordance with these suggestions the committee unanimously decided to solicit the active co-operation of the following companies, in addition to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Vitagraph, which were represented at the meeting: Goldwyn, Metro, Universal, World, Fox, Select, Pathe, General Film, Mutual and Triangle. This list, it should be understood, is not final to the exclusion of any other firms which may desire to lend their assistance, but is intended as nucleus, for without the co-operation of a large majority of the companies mentioned complete success of the plan cannot be assured. Similarly, the committee endorsed a list of stars to appear in the proposed pictures, which was drawn up by the Treasury officials, and to which it is more than likely that several names will be added: Ethel Barrymore, George Beban, Enid Bennett, Alice Brady, Mrs. Irene Castle, Charlie Chaplin, Marguerite Clark, Dorothy Dalton, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, William Farnum, Geraldine Farrar, Elsie Ferguson, Pauline Frederick, Lillian Gish, William S. Hart, Sessue Hayakawa, Alice Joyce, Frank Keenan, Enrico Caruso, Madge Kennedy, Harold Lockwood, Mae Marsh, Mary Miles Minter, Mae Murray, Mme. Nazimova, Mabel Normand, Olga Petrova, Mary Pickford, Charles Ray, Wallace Reid, Emily Stevens, Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Norma Talmadge, Pearl White, Clara Kimball Young, Billie Burke, George M. Cohan, David Warfield, Fred Stone, William Duncan, Earle Williams.

Since returning from Washington Mr. Zukor, not only as a representative of the National Association, but as an individual, has been devoting all his time wholeheartedly to this patriotic work and has placed the entire organization of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at the disposal of the Treasury Department.

Division of Films Seeks Picture Stories for Propaganda Work

The Advisory Board of Motion Picture Directors, Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, is anxious to obtain stories suitable for production in motion pictures.

All stories submitted must be written around themes that will be helpful to the United States and her Allies in various forms of war work.

Suitable subjects would be such as would have the effect of speeding up labor in shipyards, munition plants and other forms of Government work, stories that would be of material assistance in Liberty Loans, War Saving Stamps and other drives and stories that could be utilized to advantage in the foreign work of the Division of Films.

It is recognized by the United States Government that the motion picture is one of the most effective means of reaching the people of any country.

Not only will these pictures be shown in the United States, but also in every Allied country and every neutral country.

This Board is particularly desirous of obtaining good stories that fit present day conditions in Russia, Italy, Mexico and Central and South America.

Submit all stories to James Vincent, Secretary Advisory Board, Division of Films, Times Building, New York City.

"Big 5" Plans "Mitt Me" Luncheon at Astor

Division 5 of the National Association wants to be known as "Big 5" instead of the fifth wheel of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. For that reason it has arranged a luncheon at the Hotel Astor for July 31, to be known as a "Mitt Me" luncheon. It has several unique features.

At an informal gathering of the directors of the group which was called recently by Chairman Flinn, it was decided that the first step to efficient work was to undertake some plan whereby the members of the group might meet each other and become acquainted. After some discussion and several meetings a "Mitt Me" luncheon was arranged to take place at the Hotel Astor on July 31 at 12.30 o'clock, the luncheon to cost each individual but $2. The yacht room has been engaged for the purpose, and Chairman Flinn, Secretary Elliott and other speakers will outline the work which the division is expected to perform during this coming year.

The luncheon arrangements are in charge of Thomas G. Wyley and James Hoff, who promise that Mrs. Astor will exert herself on this occasion to give every man who attends a good square deal. It is expected that at least a hundred or a hundred and fifty will be present, and each one will be tagged with his proper locker number on entering the yacht room. He will then be taken in hand by the "Mitt Me" committee, who will perform the initiatory ceremonies upon him.

Eugene O'Brien Signed for Dillingham Play

Eugene O'Brien, who has been seen opposite Norma Talmadge as her leading man, in all of her screen successes for the past year, will return to speaking stage early in the fall as one of the leading characters in a comedy-farce-drama to open on Broadway under the management of Charles Dillingham. It is only within the past two years that Mr. O'Brien has been seen on the screen. Prior to his entering the silent drama, he was a prominent figure on the speaking stage, his last appearance being leading man with Alexandra Carlisle in "The Country Cousins" which played for an entire season at the Astor theatre.

Mr. O'Brien is now playing with Miss Talmadge in her latest picture, now under production at the Norma Talmadge studio, under the direction of Sid Franklin. He expects to be able to work in three more Talmadge productions before he takes up his duties on the stage.

Erdman with Paramount in Cleveland

George W. Erdman, who recently sold out his interest in the Foursquare Exchange at Cleveland, O., has affiliated himself with the Paramount office in that city, in the capacity of special representative for feature productions in Akron and its environs. Jack Hays held the same position before he joined the National Army.

Mutual Promotes Kirkpatrick

Appointed Assistant General Manager to Succeed Denis Sullivan, Resigned—On Executive Staff Since One Year Ago

ARTHUR S. KIRKPATRICK has been appointed to the post of assistant general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation by President James M. Sheldon, who by Mutual precedent carries also the title of general manager.

Mr. Kirkpatrick thus succeeds to the post previously occupied by Denis J. Sullivan, whose resignation was announced from Mutual's home office in Chicago last week.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, formerly a representative and branch manager for the Mutual in various western territories, was called into the home office of the corporation and made a member of the executive staff about one year ago, working there as assistant to Mr. Sullivan.

"This experience, plus the thorough experience of selling in the field has particularly fitted Mr. Kirkpatrick for his present functions and duties with the Mutual," said President Sheldon, announcing the appointment.

Mr. Kirkpatrick has been in the service of the Mutual Film Corporation for about three years, having worked in the capacity of salesman and as branch manager. His experience as salesman is wide having covered during that time practically all of the Western territory for Mutual and finally having been appointed as branch manager at Portland, Ore.

Prior to Mr. Kirkpatrick's connection with the Mutual Film Corporation, he was with the United States Steel Corporation at Chicago, Ill., there being engaged as chief civil engineer. He left that post to enter the engineering field as consulting engineer and efficiency expert. The most notable of his appointments in this connection was that of consulting engineer and efficiency expert in the city of Portland, Ore.

During the time he has been engaged in the Home Office duties, Mr. Kirkpatrick has covered practically all of the territories that are served by the Mutual Film Corporation and in this way has acquired a very thorough understanding of conditions and territories as they exist.

"I am naturally pleased with the promotion and the recognition," remarked Mr. Kirkpatrick. "It is significant not alone to me, however, but to every other employe of the Mutual Film Corporation, as pointing to the policy of President Sheldon of filling staff vacancies from within the organization and giving promotions when the men are available, rather than going outside of the organization. The Mutual Film Corporation has an army of good men out in the selling field and I am expecting their cooperation now just as we have had it in the past. The Mutual has plenty of big things to do and a line of product worthy of the best selling efforts that we can give it."

Mr. Kirkpatrick will make his headquarters at the New York home office.

Cleveland Managers Find Business Excellent

(Special to Motion Picture News)

Manager J. R. Johnson of the Vitagraph exchange in Cleveland has just returned from a four weeks' trip through the territory covering the northern section of Ohio, and as he was in every town in which there was a motion picture theatre, it is interesting to hear what he has to say as to the general condition of the motion picture industry.

"There wasn't a single 'bum' town in the territory that I covered," said Johnson upon his return to the office last Monday, "and in almost every one of them the exhibitors are making money. They are not just coming out even, or maybe a little better, but they are doing a nice, comfortable business. As far as I could judge, business was in a healthy, normal condition. There are several reasons for this, as I see it.

"The smaller towns, particularly, are doing a splendid business. This is because the smaller towns feel the draft more keenly than the larger cities do. The boys are more conspicuous by their absence there. And the result is that the inhabitants of the smaller towns are more dependent upon outside entertainment than those living in larger towns. Exhibitors told me that in the small towns, they have the same people coming to their shows two and three times a week."

Sam Morris, of the Select Pictures, made a similar report after his recent trip through the southern part of Ohio and Kentucky. "Louisville, in particular," Mr. Morris said, "is in fine shape."

Sherry Service Has Second Keeney Picture

William L. Sherry, head of the William L. Sherry Service, announces that "Out of the Night," a Frank A. Keeney production, will be released on August 4. This is a week later than had been originally intended. The scenario is by E. Lloyd Sheldon. It is a romantic love story. Catherine Calvert is featured, with Herbert Rawlinson in chief support.

This will be Mr. Keeney's second release. The first was "A Romance of the Underworld," also starring Catherine Calvert. Returns from the first release show a wide distribution and good business in almost every house where the picture has been screened.

The next Keeney release, following "Out of the Night" will be "Marriage," by Guy Bolton, a society story, in which two women enter into a scheme to resurrect their fallen fortunes by cheating at cards.

The fourth Keeney release will be "The Girl with a Past," by the late Paul Armstrong, author of "A Romance of the Underworld."

Mr. Keeney announces that he will resume production early in the fall.

The World Market

Conditions in Porto Rico

Alexander Goldman, Universal's Manager, Tells of Theatre Conditions—Island Fertile Field for New Advertising and Presentation Methods

AN interesting story of film conditions in Porto Rico has been brought back to this country by Alexander Goldman, manager of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.'s exchange in that island possession, who has just returned home for a brief visit.

"All told," declared Mr. Goldman when seen at the Universal offices by a representative of Motion Picture News, "there are about sixty-seven theatres on the Island of Porto Rico. And the largest cities from a moving picture standpoint are San Juan, Ponce, Mayaguez and Aricibo.

"When I tell you that to date there isn't a single house on the entire island seating six hundred; that there isn't a single organ in any of the theatres; that people don't know what an open air theatre is—in spite of the marvelous climate, that the majority of exhibitors do absolutely no advertising, and that the newspapers don't even think of soliciting their business, you will obtain an idea of prevailing conditions.

"With but very few exceptions, the moving picture theatres in Porto Rico are in exactly the same stage of development as were the theatres in this country fifteen years ago. In the main they are located in what were formerly stores, stables, and, in fact, any place wherein chairs, a screen and a machine could be placed.

"The houses all contain three classes of seats, boxes, lunetea and grada. The boxes command the highest prices, the lunetea, which corresponds with the orchestra, the next best, while the grada, or gallery, is the cheapest.

"Incidentally, the grada is located back of the screen, so that the fans are compelled to read the subtitles backward. The majority of these people are illiterate and because they cannot read, attend the theatre in groups accompanied by one individual who is able to read the titles to them. All of the latter, so far as Universal is concerned, are printed in English and Spanish.

"The boxes cost a dollar each and seat four people. Orchestra seats bring twenty-five cents, while the gallery seats cost ten cents. In some theatres they are as low as five cents. Matinees are few and far between, and then only on an occasional Sunday, because the majority of the people work seven days a week.

"The most progressive showman on the island is Antonia Arias, who owns six theatres, one of them the beautiful Broadway, just built at Ponce, Arias. Serials are easily the most popular pictures now shown in Porto Rico.

"That no attempt should have ever been made to establish open air theatres was one of the things that afforded me a considerable degree of wonderment during my first few months in Porto Rico. For a long time I was unable to ascertain the reason therefor, until it was apologetically explained to me that the people are inclined to be a bit superstitious, and for this reason hesitate to sit unprotected in the full glare of the moon."

Ivans in Trouble in Argentine

Jaun Lluch, prominent Buenos Aires film dealer, recently began his preparatory campaign in Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay for the Ivan subjects, rights to which he has secured. Considerable interest was aroused by the initial advertising campaign, but almost at the start Senor Lluch has struck a snag.

"One Law for Both," the first of the subjects to be shown, was exhibited at the Select theatre, Buenos Aires, but the proprietors of the Select are quoted as deciding that the film "is immoral and unfit for presentation" in that house. Now the distributor has appealed to prominent Argentine personalities and the city authorities for opinions, with which he expects to show that the picture points a strong and needed moral.

Garrett's Report Sheet

Sidney Garrett is now issuing a small bulletin summarizing the production points of each picture which he sees on the screen for the benefit of dealers in foreign rights located in New York and throughout the world. The Brockliss office reports an unusual number of dealers requesting to be placed on the mailing list for the bulletin, which is supplied gratis, and which covers all productions shown to Mr. Garrett in addition to those which he purchases.

Sr. Donati Coming Here

Sr. Jose Donati, of Cinematographica Sud-America, allied with the North American Film Service, is to visit the United States on business representing his Buenos Aires organization. He is expected to remain for a considerable time.

Market Light in France

Current advices from France show little activity of American films in that field. Aside from the activities of the house of Pathe, the few American productions being advertised to the trade include, "Civilization," by S. A. M. Films of Paris; various short Universal subjects by the Agence Generale Cinematographique; occasional Paramounts by Gaumont; and occasional subjects from the Cinematograph Harry organization of Paris.

Chimpanzee Comedies Ready for Release Soon

The new offices of William N. Selig in the Godfrey Building are preparing for the weekly release of single-reel comedies featuring Napoleon and Sally, the chimpanzee fun-makers. All foreign rights to these comedies are under the control of Sidney Garrett, of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc.

EXHIBITOR TO EXHIBITOR REVIEW SERVICE

"Mickey," with Mabel Normand

"Well Worth the Wait," Says Harrison

(W. H. Productions—Released on State Rights Basis. Directed by Mack Sennett. Screen Time, 90 Minutes)

WE have all been waiting for this offering for quite a long time, but I am sure you will be rewarded for the extended wait.

The picture is excellent. It contains comedy, pathos, suspense, in fact almost everything that could in anyway contribute towards making "Mickey" an entertaining picture. On top of all this we are presented with a real fight for good measure.

Most of you know, I presume, that the story was written and directed by Mr. Sennett himself, some two years ago. He was assisted by several directors. It was the first five-reel feature made in which Miss Normand was starred. I don't think I have ever seen her to better advantage.

In the first part of the story she appears as a tomboy, full of mischief. You think her actions break the heart of her guardian, a good old miner. When the day comes, however, in which he is to take her East he shows that he loves her as if she were his own baby.

In the balance of the story she is seen first as a servant and then as a society lady. It goes without saying that she assumes all these roles convincingly.

There is a racing scene in the picture. It is without doubt the most realistic one that I have ever seen in a picture in my life. "Checkers," "The Thoroughbred" and "His Last Dollar" have nothing on it.

The supporting cast is excellent. Geo. Nichols, as the old miner, and Minnie Ha Ha, the squaw, as the servant, are true types.

The comedy depends entirely on the acting of the star and also on the judicious directing. Mr. Sennett has certainly put in it lots of human touches. The story is a straight drama.

It is a clean picture and ought to appeal to all audiences.

"A Gentleman's Agreement"

Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman Interest

(Vitagraph—July 29. Directed by David Smith)

THIS is a good program picture containing some situations with heart interest. It will hold the attention well and will entertain.

The story was written by Wallace Irwin. It tells of the hero who was appointed assistant engineer in a Western mine. He promised his sweetheart (the heroine), he would send for her as soon as he got settled.

Shortly afterwards he was hurt by an explosion. He was nursed back to life by a young woman. She became infatuated with him. Wishing to make him her own, she interrupted the correspondence between the two lovers. She also wrote a letter to the heroine telling her falsely that the hero was killed. The heroine was almost prostrated from grief, but she eventually recovered. She was induced to marry the man who wooed her.

Not getting any news, the hero left for the East to investigate. He reached there in time to see his sweetheart coming out of the church after her marriage. The heroine swooned when she saw him alive while the hero became heart broken. He turned around and left for the West. The heroine, telling her husband she was going to find the man she loved, followed him there. The husband followed also intent on killing them both. But when he reached the cabin he found out that the hero was none other than the man who saved him from drowning once. As he considered himself a slave for life to the hero for that act he decided to grant his wife a divorce in order that she might marry him, but he was drowned while crossing the river.

There are some flaws in the story. For instance, while engaged to one man, the heroine kept going with another, whom she allowed to woo her. Such conduct is considered very improper when judged with the present code of ethics. It will also cause the spectator, first, to form the opinion that she didn't care for him so much after all, and second, to doubt the sincerity of her grief.

The principle of the husband to consider himself a slave for the rest of his life to the man who once saved his life also is not convincing. I have my doubts if you can find nowadays a living soul who would feel that way in such case outside, of course, of a certain amount of gratitude.

In spite of the above flaws the picture will entertain. It is the clean kind.

"A Burglar for a Night"

Warren Kerrigan in a Lively Melodrama

(Paralta-Hodkinson—Aug. 4. Directed by Ernest Warde)

THIS is a fairly good melodrama. It contains very few heart interest situations, the entertainment being derived mostly from the physical action and the suspense.

It is an amateur crook story written by F. McGrew Willis. It tells of the following:

The hero's father, an invalid, had control of the stock in a certain railroad. His rivals wanted to take this control away from him, so they signed up an agreement among themselves to raid the market and ruin the hero's father.

The only way such a catastrophe could be prevented was to get hold of that agreement. Therefore the hero decided to secure it some way. He took some lessons at a private crook school on opening safes. He became an expert at it in a very short time.

While at work opening the safe containing that agreement, he was caught in the act by the daughter of one of the railroad magnates. She happened to be running away from home to avoid a detestable marriage.

In order to prevent her from giving him away, the hero kidnapped her and married her by force. With the evidence of their guilt in his possession, the hero compels the guilty railroad magnates to compromise. The hero made up with the father of his wife and thus everything was fixed up satisfactorily.

It is a clean picture and will appeal mostly to those audiences who like excitement.

"The Waif"

Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale in a Satisfactory Offering

(Pathe—Aug. 4. Directed by Albert Parker)

THIS is a pleasing little picture. It is not the kind that will create much excitement but will furnish satisfactory amusement just the same.

The story was written by Grace Sartwell Mason. It tells of a pretty girl whose father's desire was that she should marry the son of his partner. She would not consent to become the wife of a man she never met and did not love so she ran away.

While alone in the boarding house where she is living she is attacked by a crook. A young man, hearing her cries for help, runs to her rescue. She learns to love him because he is young and handsome. Eventually she induces her father to consent to their union.

This picture is clean and will prove suitable mostly to high class audiences.

"Beyond the Shadows," with Wm. Desmond

Something That Should Please Everybody

(Triangle—July 28. Directed by J. W. McLaughlin)

THIS feature ought to please your patrons, as it contains plenty of situations with heart interest.

The locale of the story is the Canadian Northwest. It was written by Ralph R. Westfall. It deals with fur trading. It shows how the hero, a real man from head to feet, took up the side of the free traders against the company's men who were trying to prevent them from carrying on their legitimate business.

The story shows how the company's men were furnishing the Indians with whisky in exchange for valuable furs. There is also a great deal of shooting and killing in it.

The action is swift, the cast good and the photography fine. It shows some wonderful scenery in it. In places the reflection of the mountains and trees in the waters of the lake makes a wonderful sight.

The picture is clean and has been produced intelligently and in realistic atmosphere.

"Miss Innocence"

A Little of Everything in This June Caprice Offering

(Fox—July 21. Directed by Harry Millard)

NOTHING is easier with some authors than to condemn an innocent man. All they have to do is to write a sentence and to jail he goes for anything from one day to life. It all depends on how merciful or how cruel the writer may feel.

As to the spectator's feelings, he is not supposed to have any. Besides, he must not complain, question or doubt the infallibility of judgment of the writer. He knows what is best for picture-goers to see.

Of course, if such a hard-to-please customer knew something of the intricacies of writing for pictures and that most of the stories are furnished by the yard, he might be inclined to be more lenient towards the author. But, not being initiated in these mysteries, he goes on complaining until he stumbles across something good.

This story tells of gay Fay Gonard, who, after many hard attempts, succeeded in sending her husband to jail for fifteen years on a trumped-up charge (the nature of which is not revealed). She was assisted in this by Kale Loomis, her lover.

When her daughter is born she gets rid of it at the door of a convent because it is in the way of her ambitions.

In the years that passed she lost her vigor and also her beauty, and as a natural consequence was cast off by Loomis. She, of course, now remembered she had a daughter, and commenced to pine for her and long to clasp her to her bosom and kiss her (she never bothered with her before). She died with her wish unfulfilled.

The girl has now grown to womanhood. Not being able to stand the confinement of the convent at a time when her second (bad) nature asserted itself, she ran away. After many troubles and tribulations, she became acquainted by chance with some sporty women, in whose apartments wine was dispensed very freely. Wealthy men also were the most frequent visitors there. After a murder, a trial and an acquittal, she found her haven in the arms of a young man who loved her sincerely.

"The Golden Fleece"

Joe Bennet and Peggy Pearce Are the Stars

(Triangle—July 28. Directed by G. P. Hamilton)

IT is bad business in pictures to introduce the hero as a boob. It is still worse to make a crook out of him immediately afterwards. Thus he is not given a chance to win any of the sympathy of the picturegoer, which is so essential to a picture that is expected to please.

The scenario for "The Golden Fleece" was based on the story of the same name by Frederick Irving Anderson, which was published in the Saturday Evening Post. It tells how the hero, failing to gain recognition in his home town as an inventive genius, went to the city. Of course he would accept nothing less than a million for manufacturing and advertising the precious article.

After he was robbed of his best suit of clothes, slept hungry a few times, became a crook for a while, met his sweetheart who came to find him, he eventually succeeded in gaining recognition. He was given a check for ten thousand dollars and half partnership in the enterprise. He then returned to his home town in a fine limousine (married, of course) and surprised the old farmers.

The situations in the story are complicated to a bewildering degree.

As it is a clean picture you will possibly be able to get by with it, but don't boost it too much.

"Heredity"

An Ordinary Offering Presenting Barbara Castleton

(World—Aug. 5. Directed by William P. S. Earle)

THIS is just a fair program picture.

The story, written by Maravene Thompson, is an ordinary one. It tells of little Nedda Trevor, who was run down by an automobile driven by Paul Winslow. She was unhurt.

When grown to womanhood she was proposed to by her employer. She refused him because she did not love him. Besides her thoughts were on Paul all these years.

Nedda's mother was murdered by her drunken step-father and the crime was fastened upon her. She appealed to her employer to help her clear her name. He volunteered on condition that she marry him at once.

Just at that time Paul, learning her predicament from a newspaper, went to her assistance. Due to his efforts the real criminal was detected and Nedda freed. She married Paul.

The picture is clean, but not the kind of a subject that will leave you in a happy mood.

"The Death Dance"

Alice Brady's Latest, "A Good Picture of Its Kind"

(Select—July. Directed by J. Searle Dawley)

THIS is a good picture of its kind. The subject is not salacious, but it deals with high life. It is presented, however, in a refined manner.

The story was written by Paul West. It tells of the discovery by Arnold Maitland that his wife, Cynthia, had affairs with M. Boresky. While intent on killing him, he met a dancing girl, Flora Fansworth (Alice Brady), and fell in love. He determined to divorce his wife and marry her, but was killed in an automobile accident.

Flora became engaged to Philip Standish. Boresky, who was now her dancing partner, was also infatuated with her. Cynthia, jealous of Standish's attentions to Flora, incited Boresky into killing her. During the dance he made the attempt, but Philip intervened and saved her life. Boresky committed suicide. Standish and Flora were married.

One point picturegoers might not forgive is the fact that Maitland was fool enough to allow his wife to continue her relations with Boresky after he had become aware of that fact. He had obtained enough evidence to get a divorce.

This picture is not for exclusively family patronage.

"A Successful Adventure"

May Allison Charm Puts This Over

(Metro—July 15. Directed by Harry L. Franklin)

THIS offering will get by chiefly on account of Miss Allison's charming personality and not because of any merits of the story. There is not body enough to it. It is just a fair picture.

The story was written by June Mathis. It tells of two brothers who loved the same girl. When she married one of them the other became embittered and went away. Years later the daughter brought about their reconciliation.

There is a bad slip in the tinting in one place. It causes the same action to appear as taking place both at night and at day time.

"The Demon"

Edith Storey Unsuited to This Story

(Metro—July 22. Directed by George D. Baker)

THIS is just an ordinary "movie." If your patrons want to kill an hour of their time they may enjoy it.

The star is entirely unsuited for the part. It is a mistake to cast this fine artist in such a role. She is given the part of a young wild child. At times she is compelled to act ridiculously. For instance, where she kisses the feet of her master. One good thing—they didn't put her in short skirts.

The subtitles have been written with an eye to comedy, but missed the mark. They will have the tendency at times to cause people to laugh at the picture, I am afraid.

Talk to Your Newspaper—NOW!

AS this issue goes to press the Secretary of War has ruled that baseball is not an essential occupation, and that the players within the draft age must "work or fight." Many of the smaller leagues have already closed their seasons and even if the order is modified it is certain that the big leagues can go no further than finishing the season.

College sports have to a great degree been stopped and prize fighting has become unpopular, the public believing that the pugilists should use their energy against the Huns rather than against each other.

This means that a large amount of sporting news will be taken from the papers. Although there is a tendency to cut down space, this presents an opportunity for the motion picture managers everywhere to call attention of their local newspapers to the importance of photoplay news and to urge them to devote more space to it, now that they have the space.

In this issue there begins an article on the newspaper-motion picture situation in Los Angeles. This article will cover the entire field and show the newspaper owners the value of photoplay matter. It will show them that not only they will be printing matter that will interest every member of the family, instead of a limited number, but that they will be increasing their advertising revenue. Further than this they will be adding a powerful circulation builder.

Take this article to your newspapers and ask the owner and the business manager to read it. Don't count on some one else calling this to their attention. We believe that this completed article, the continuation of which will appear in one or more issues, forms a convincing argument for photoplay departments. It is not theory, but a record of what has been done.

If you want to improve your own business, act now.

Papers There Show What Can Be Done in Printing Interesting News Matter—Survey of Situation There

IN nearly every one of these articles about co-operation between newspapers and motion picture theatres, we have referred to the worth to the exhibitor of getting his newspaper to print real motion picture news matter and not to expect every item that goes into the columns of the paper to mention the name of his theatre.

Now the Los Angeles newspapers offer excellent ideas of what a newspaper can do and interest the public. It will be argued at once that the city is the center of production and that a large amount of news is available there that the newspapers of other cities cannot get. That is true to a degree, but it is also true that the larger part of this matter does become available to the newspapers later after the publicity men get to it.

Of course, like in all other things the high class photoplay editor is going to select his matter carefully, rewrite it and even create news matter by adding the knowledge that he has of the particular player or topic. It may have struck you that the Motion Picture News does not use any matter "flat" as it comes from the press agents and that matter that appears in these columns "reads different" from most of the exploitation stuff that you see. In the same degree the successful photoplay editor will watch his matter carefully, cut out exaggeration and evident fake and build up stories that need strengthening from his own storehouse of knowledge.

In order to consider the Los Angeles situation we are going to devote two and possibly three articles to the situation there. We have reproduced on the opposite pages some specimen pages from the Sunday papers only. Some of the afternoon papers do even more and we will have to postpone showing you what they do until next week.

But the history of the Los Angeles situation is very interesting. It shows that the photoplay departments have not been built up because of the fact that the city is the center of production, but because the newspapers have found that the great public wants this class of news matter and because the exhibitors are now co-operating to a considerable extent in the use of advertising space.

Now in considering the situation we must remember that Los Angeles, territorially, is the largest city in the world, covering 372 square miles of territory. The city annexed many small villages in order that they could be supplied with water from the acqueduct which brings the supply some two hundred miles to the city. This means that many of the communities are still practically separate towns and that they have their own centers of interest. That at least explains the theory why the outlying houses do not care to advertise. The population of the city is about 600,000, being larger than its sister city, San Francisco.

About four years ago a newspaper and advertising man went to Los Angeles to visit his brother and he was immediately struck by the fact that not one of the papers there was devoting a line of matter to motion pictures and that none of the theatres were advertising regularly. He took the matter up with the advertising managers of the various papers, but they could not see the proposition—they felt sure that the theatres would not co-operate. However, finally the managing editor of the Tribune, which was then a morning daily and Sunday newspaper (it has since discontinued the morning edition and on Sundays is consolidated with the Express, an afternoon daily) became interested in the position and the work started.

It was decided to put the photoplay department in the Monday and Thursday issues, since all of the larger theatres were changing twice weekly and on those days. At just this time "The Adventure of Kathleen," the serial, had gone over to record business and as the story had appeared in the local paper the theatre managers began to see the advantage of advertising. But it was a mighty hard row to hoe to show any of the exhibitors why they should use any larger advertising than they were doing. Fred Miller, who had recently opened a theatre in what was then not a successful district, was the first to be induced to use larger space and gradually the others followed.

Right here a point comes up that applies to practically all newspapers. They have two advertising rates, one called the commercial rate, which is applied to general advertising, and the other in the "amusement" rate. In most cities the amusement charge is just about double that of the business houses. It is a relic of the past, a left-over from the legitimate road show.

It used to be the custom in those days for the local theatre to arrange the advertising for the various attractions. He was allowed a cerain amount by the company and naturally, with the theatre's share, there was provision for a certain number of advertisements. Gradually the newspapers, especially in the "one night stands" found that the local manager or the traveling press agent was slipping in stories about coming attractions when no advertising was to appear. Further than that, these road shows provided about the only amusement and the advance men felt their importance accordingly and expected the donation of a couple of passes to get them anything that they wanted from the newspapers.

Finally, to remedy this and to even up the space occupied by these reading notices the newspapers established this amusement rate. It was double the ordinary advertising rate, for the newspapers figured that for every inch of advertising space used the show would demand at least as much reading matter. It was simply a case of making the attractions and the theatre pay for the amount of white paper that they used.

Another reason for this policy was that the papers realized that these reading notices were pure advertising, and that they were of no news interest. Now get this point very clearly: These were simply laudatory statements. Often they were no more than quotations from papers in cities where the show had already been seen. There wasn't the slightest news value to them. Reading notices had grown up to be a custom; few newspapers felt themselves strong enough to refuse them entirely, and so they made the theatres pay for them.

Now that old amusement rate has been carried over into the motion picture business. In part it is justified and in part it is not. Most theatre managers that advertise expect to get reading notices about their attractions and to get representation in the layout. These reading notices are not news matter and though the scene cuts are of interest to many they have no decided punch. Therefore, the newspaper is justified in charging the amusement rate to the theatre that used small space and wants all this addition stuff in return. But there is a limit to what you can give the theatre. If the man who uses five inches single column gets a picture in the layout and a short reading notice, it doesn't encourage another house to use a full page simply because he gets a larger picture and a longer story.

Hence it is only fair to charge the amusement rate for a certain amount of advertising and to give the exhibitor the commercial rate for the increased business that he gives the paper. This was one of the first problems that the man in question had to deal with in Los Angeles, and he was finally able to get the paper to grant the commercial rate to any theatre that uses over twenty inches in each of the two photoplay department issues, or a total of more than forty inches a week.

There is another thing that should be taken into consideration by the newspapers. Ten years ago in a city of 30,000 there were

Aids Needed By Small City Exhibitors

From out the Middle West come two valuable opinions this week on what is the matter with the exploitation of pictures. One of them comes from a city of only 10,000 and points out very strikingly what is needed in cities of this class where the facilities for advertising are limited.

Both this opinion and the one from a leading manager of Minneapolis make one same point—and that is there should be a careful plan for the exploitation of each picture and that these should be made in advance. It is pointed out that each picture must have an individual selling argument.

Thought on advertising picture is demanded—not merely of material.

READERS of these pages are already familiar with the work of Miss Flossie Jones, manager of the three theatres of the Waukesha, Wis., Amusement Co. Miss Jones has paid a great deal of attention to the exploitation of pictures and it has led to a great share of her success. Hers is one of the most interesting contributions to the question. She demands individual exploitation of pictures. And remember that she is not a big city exhibitor with all sorts of facilities:

Humanity is alike as far as hearing and seeing is concerned, but no one man in New York can guide the destiny of all from coast to coast. Existing conditions change each locality, and I would like to see the manager of every film office direct and school his salesmen in the art of "Exploiting Pictures" from the exhibitors' standpoint as well as "sales talk."

If certain sections are hit harder by the war than others—don't try and sell them a war picture or one that is gloomy and morbid—if factories are closed and their main revenue shut off, don't sell them an expensive special, unless you can give it to them for a little more than regular service. Don't do it, even if New York demands a certain schedule. New York must understand that most of the fault of the industry (and also the success) lies right at home. They demand that the manager do this and that, not understanding local conditions at all. If they have faith enough to put a man in to handle an office, they should at least let him use a little of his own judgment, else he shouldn't be there. There is many an exhibitor sold film, where conscientiously the salesman knows he can't make good. Then—Why do it? You may get that exhibitor again but eventually he is lost. If an exhibitor makes good on a picture (and it is always by his own exploitation) the picture wouldn't be worth a darn from a box office standpoint otherwise.

Why then does New York immediately demand as much or more on same star (regardless of class of picture) in subsequent releases? Now he hasn't the right to demand more. He is wrong. The manager made good by his own efforts, and instead of encouraging same by helping him, they scare him out, and the result is—the account is lost. One must never blame the local film manager—it's the man higher up—the fault is in their own office in not having more efficient publicity men, where thousands of dollars are at stake on every picture.

Imagine a certain film concern, with some of the greatest productions in the market, big special features, public likes them, they are pictures worth while and a pleasure to show—perfect in detail.

You get a press sheet, every ad is a mat—there is not a suggestion in the entire sheet a small town manager can use—the press sheet is worthless—paper from same concern cheap and loud.

That picture, aside from the picture itself, has no selling or buying power—what you get out of it you get through your own efforts. Now why will thousands of dollars be spent in press matter, which only the big manager can use (and he don't and doesn't, because it isn't good enough), and the small town cant? Will you tell me? Then the stand paper, 24 sheets, etc., the big houses can use it and want to, but it's not good enough on the average—it detracts instead of attracting. Of course, in certain houses in certain sections it is all right, but they are not the average—and what's more, they are not elevating the industry—and heralds!! You'll book say five or ten pictures from a certain concern and right away they want a standing paper order. Well you say so many 1's and 3's and 6's and perhaps a 1,000 heralds—well you get them and get them good. Your heralds for your five and ten pictures are so much alike you can't tell them coming or going, same color, same size, star in front, scene on back, 57 words of nothing and that's all. Now with such stuff, what can you expect?

There's not a speck of individuality—and EACH PICTURE MUST HAVE INDIVIDUAL EXPLOITATION.

I know it's a big job, but we are living in a big world and everything is on a big scale. If manufacturers and producers expect to get big financial results, give with every picture a selling and buying power. Of course, it's up to each manager to handle his picture in his own particular way, but stock advertising is always a help and a great saving as well, as it is practical. I do think the producer means well and really wants to help, only they haven't quite got the right idea.

Press men must be men of truth, who can picture in terms that will appeal. They must be men of imagination who can put themselves here and there—figure it out this way and that way from every angle. It's not a job that can be accomplished by pounding on a typewriter, it's a big contract for thought. Of course always showing good pictures will eventually build up a business, but many a man can't last that long. Then why waste time and throw away opportunity? If the publicity department is not big enough and not capable enough to handle the situation—why have them? The exhibitor pays in the long run. Cut them out, you'll save money and something towards that "great loss," that we are continually hearing so much about.

They all advertise in the trade's papers. Every exhibitor reads them. Then advertise when it pays. Aside from the picture proper, show how to exploit with honest to goodness selling and buying power. Have your synopsis short but truthful—your suggestions to the point and practical—your posting paper in color and lines that will appeal to the home. What I mean by that is—that HOME is the picture's chief competitor, and make your posters a truthful, direct appeal as far as possible.

Publicity should never be written—advertising never made until the picture is a finished product—and the men who handle any or part where brains take a place, should see the picture as exhibitor and patrons view it—they should see it purely from a "fan's" standpoint to get proper interpretation of story to work on.

While we're talking, the producer shouldn't get all the panning—the exhibitor comes in for a little of it also. In over half of the cases he doesn't make the most of what he has to work on. When he gets this stereotyped publicity he stands for it, with never a word of criticism or a word of help for himself or the producer.

CHARLES G. BRANHAM, manager of the Strand theatre, Minneapolis, declares that no picture should be put on the market until a complete campaign for it has been mapped out and the material prepared for the exhibitor's use. He has something to say about the work of several film companies and also scores the present trade paper advertising of some of the companies. Mr. Branham is exceedingly frank in what he has to say:

During one of the most severe rain storms of the season last night I was called upon to commandeer an automobile and to drive ten miles to St. Paul to review a motion picture that is to be played in one of our theatres within the next few weeks. The print of this production was to be taken out of town this morning, and my trip was imperative because it was the only way that I could get a line on the picture for advertising purposes. Now the junket through the rain wasn't so bad because the pilot of the car was that congenial soul, Eddie Flynn, manager of the Fox office here, and St. Paul boasts of the greatest fried chicken in the world, but the idea was all wrong.

Imagine, if you can, a film concern trying to place a production without having one line of publicity material, a cut or a press photograph on hand to assist the prospective purchaser. True, this picture was not the offering of one of our largest film exchanges—and, by the way, it was not Eddie Flynn's picture—but I have found conditions nearly as bad right in one of our largest exchanges. On several occasions recently I have been unable to get "stills," lobby stuff or press matter in time to help me, and if it had not been for the fact that the print happened to be in town in plenty of time I would have been up against it in putting over the show.

We are shown some wonderful ads. in the trade papers, ads. that could be used with good results by the first-run exhibitors in the larger cities, but never a mat or cut of these ads. reaches the local exchange, or, if they do arrive at all, it is weeks after the picture has been given its premier. I made this same kick to Mr. Carl Laemmle when he was in Minneapolis not long ago and he said it was up to the exchange manager to get the stuff in time for local use. I do not think the exchange manager is entirely to blame. Why isn't the exploitation material sent out from headquarters with the first prints to reach the territory? I don't think any picture ought to be marketed until a complete exploitation campaign has been mapped out and the material prepared for use. The way pictures are hurried on the market now does not give the production, the exhibitor nor the exchange a square deal.

Every producing organization ought to have on its staff a "still" photographer that has served as a news picture gatherer on a metropolitan daily. You've got to hand it to these boys for getting pictures with a punch—the kind that the news editor will not turn down—and they are the fellows that best know how to take "stills" that will be accepted by the dramatic and news departments. Most of the "stills" that come along now are abominable. The star "stills" are few and far between, lifeless and wonderful for the waste basket—with the exception of that famous collection of Mack Sennett bathing girls which recently cost me fifteen dollars and caused a lot of trouble at home. And if most of the producers would put as much pep into helping put over their product as the Mack Sennett crowd does their little features, the kicks about poor exploitation would be reduced considerably.

However, Harold Bolster of Goldwyn has promised me that the "still" problem will be adjusted immediately, and we will leave it to Harold.

Paramount-Artcraft has laid particular stress upon its helpful publicity department and urges the exhibitors to make use of its mats and cuts for advertising. These same mats and cuts may be fine for an exhibitor in a town where a flat-bed press gives birth to the family journal, but in a shop where the pages are stereotyped they are absolutely worthless. A special set of this material should be prepared for use in the big daily papers. These cuts should be coarse screen—very coarse in most cases.

Some time ago I used cuts of George M. Cohan and Mary Pickford, which I obtained from Artcraft. When the Sunday "movie" sheet appeared there were two black spots where the faces of Mary and George should have grinned at the expectant fan. Somebody is at fault. Maybe the men who are arranging this series never have had the pleasure of hunting "type lice" or turning out 700 an hour on a "Prouty hand." If they haven't, God pity them, for they've missed half their life.

And as for trade paper advertising—GOOD NIGHT! Of several productions that have received much space in the trade sheets recently I only found one that I thought would get money in the Strand theatre and at the same time please our patrons. If I had to depend almost entirely on the trade paper advertising, as many exhibitors in the smaller towns do, and couldn't look at my pictures before they are bought, I would be run out of town by a disgusted populace crying "Bunk!" We don't care a whoop how "great" a picture may be in the eyes of the producers and distributors, but we do want to know what that picture will mean to the movie bugs of our own home town and how we can best put it over to make some money.

One of old Kid Harrison's vest-pocket reviews in the Motion Picture News means more to me than a whole display advertising section devoted to exploiting a certain star or a single picture. Because I know that old Kid Harrison has been through the mill, has conducted a theatre right in this old town and knows more about what the exhibitor needs than all the high-class ad. writers can tell you in a million dollars' worth of space.

FROM SMALLER CITIES

Announcement of New Members Will be Made Next Week

UNFORSEEN delay in getting out letters has prevented our being able to announce the full list of exhibitors from the smaller cities who will become members of the Advisory Board. The only one to be named this week is Miss Flossie A. Jones, manager of the Waukesha Amusement Co., Waukesha, Wis.

Other names will be published this week. We believe that it is highly important that the smaller cities be represented here, but simply because the population may be less, the new members will be just as live wires as the manager of the biggest house. There are a lot of the smaller theatres that are setting a strong pace for others.

We are also glad to announce this week that Willard C. Patterson, the enterprising manager of the Criterion, Atlanta, Ga., has accepted our invitation to join the Board.

Your Idea and Ours

HERE is the best advertisement on Marguerite Clark in "Uncle Tom's Cabin" that we have seen. This is taken from an uncorrected galley proof, hence the typographical error in the matter in the mortise at the bottom. It will be noted that Manager Kuhn of the Stillman, Cleveland, O., thought that it was necessary to point out to the public that this was not another fairy story, as the star has appeared in so many of these recently.

Mr. Kuhn has followed the idea suggested in the press book by using pictures of Miss Clark in the two characters, but he emphasizes this by stating she does play a dual role. The reason that Mr. Kuhn has called attention to the fact that it was a most successful play is that there have been thousands of "Tom" companies tour Ohio and the character of the story is known to everyone. There is no necessity of going into detail.

At slightly increased expense the display has been improved by setting it against a Ben Day background. It is four columns, 11 inches deep.

Advertising is the lens of the theatre's spotlight.

MANY good lobby displays are spoiled by adding unnecessary matter. Here the Globe theatre, Toronto, Canada, had a good idea on "Sirens of the Sea," and the main idea was carried out in an attractive manner, but since the manager had bought a set of lobby display cards he couldn't resist the temptation of putting them up. It will be noted that the way they are arranged detracts from the main idea that is given in the drop across the front of the house.

Remember that the main idea of a lobby display is to get a big smashing effect; in other words, to "stop 'em in their tracks." Once you have done that the attention may be attracted to the minor details, but these should be placed separately. In this case the proper place for the various scenes from the production would have been inside of the lobby. There they could have been seen by the people who were stopped by the main display and nothing of the punch would have been lost.

The horizon is as far as you can see. How close is yours?

WE don't quite get the idea of the cut of the small boy used in this display of the Orpheum theatre, Chambersburg, Pa. Manager H. R. Weber has used entirely too much type in a display of 6 inches by two columns, and much of this matter is in the nature of repetition.

In the first place, we would have used a figure of a marine as the illustration, and then we would have started the display with the expression: "Made by the boys who are now fighting in France," and then the reference to the marines, the title of the picture and the origin of the story. The marines is the thing to have been featured here, and the names of the stars count for little, so far as bringing business.

Who's running your theatre? Are YOU?

H. C. HORATER, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, is always on the lookout for matter that he can use in his exploitation of pictures. He gets a lot of suggestions from the advertising in the Motion Picture News, and when he sees in its advertising pages material that he can turn into newspaper work he grabs it. As we have told you before, the trade paper designs are superior in quality to anything that the average theatre designer can do, but in too many cases this matter is not adaptable to use, for it is purely a selling argument to the exhibitor. It is mere camouflage in many instances. In other words, the advertising does not tell him anything about the picture.

Now in this case Mr. Horater has taken part of an advertisement used by Goldwyn in the News and adapted it to his own use.

We would advise managers in cities where they can have their own cuts made to file these pages of advertising of pictures that they know they are going to play. It will reduce the cost of advertising expenses.

There'll be a whole lot more luck around your business if you add a letter and make it Pluck.

WEST THEATRE, Galesburg, Ill., is up against it. The man who prepares the advertising tells us that the newspapers will not give any reading notices unless the theatre buy a large amount of space. This is a mistaken idea on the part of the papers, and we would suggest that the theatres forget their rivalry for a few moments and get together and put the question of co-operation up to the papers. We hope that the articles that we have been printing have given you some of that spirit. Both of the Galesburg papers are afternoon, and we realize that it would be felt if all the motion picture advertising were concentrated in one paper. We don't believe in threatening, but that is one remedy.

But the West is meeting conditions as they exist by devoting the space that it uses to talk about the picture. The space used daily ranged from five to eight inches, single column. The matter is well written and chatty. In one of the displays reproduced the writer talks about the pictures on two different days. That is bad; center advertising of this sort on a single theme. A light distinctive border with a designed name plate would cost little, last long and would improve the appearance of the displays.

About the only "infancy" left about the motion picture business is with those who would rather cry about hard luck rather than get out and lick it.

HERE is about as good a combination of an advertisement for a bill for the entire week and with special reference to a single production that we have seen. Now, as a general rule, we are opposed to advertising bills for the entire week and especially to advertising a later-in-the-week picture stronger than the first one that you have to sell, but here is an exception.

Manager J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal, finds that it pays him to advertise only on Sunday. His theatre is located in Olneyville, a suburb of Providence, R. I., and he places his advertisement every Sunday at the top of the page that carries the Olneyville news. He finds that it is read there, where it would be ignored during the week in one of the Providence papers. In other words, he is going to the big city and doing advertising, and he deserves a great deal of credit for his enterprise. And we know that it pays him.

But what we started to say was the linking up of the whole thing with the drawing by the use of a single expression: "A bill with a punch."

Remember that the only dynamos in the world are not those built of wire and steel.

GRAUMAN'S theatre, Los Angeles, continues to advertise the theatre itself and the high grade of amusement supplied there rather than a feature picture. A couple of months since we illustrateed one of the displays which reproduced a portion of the front of the house in the place of a border.

listed and there are a few words about each number. The feature picture is given slightly more space than any of the other numbers, but only slightly. The one thing that is made to stand out is the name of the name of the theatre, and the distinctive border that is used is largely responsible for that.

This is a good method for a theatre that has distinction and can afford to advertise itself—in other words to guarantee that it always offers a good show. But the theatre that merely puts on the picture cannot do this sort of advertising. And, another thing, we would vary this form of display with the advertisement of some feature of the program. It pays to try to reach all the elements of the public.

How we Lost a Patron

STRAND THEATRE
LOWELL, MASSACHUSETTS
Lowells Monument
Perfect Ventilation
THOS. D. SORIERO, GEN. MGR.
GEO. F. SELLMAN, RES. MGR.

WE have seen this idea used before in other lines of business, but it is a simple one and can easily be applied to a theatre. Especially is it effective in a city where there is a large working population and where unique exploitation pays. This stunt was used at the Strand theatre, Lowell, Mass., by Thos. D. Soriero. It is a four-page folder 3 by 4½ inches and printed on brown paper, the second cut representing the inside of the folder. On the back is the declaration that the theatre still has its first patron.

Now the distribution of these was unique in that they were not given out at the theatre; in fact, Mr. Soriero so arranged that they could not be obtained there. Ten thousand copies were distributed at munitions plants in Lowell, 8,000 more at various mills and 2,000 at stores. That exhausted the 20,000 that were printed. As was expected there were hundreds of calls at the theatre for copies, but the applicants were truthfully told that they were all out. That created a demand from those who received copies and the interest was all the greater. A thing like this which people will show to their friends is the most valuable sort of advertising, for the chances are that not only will the person getting one of these, but that they will preserve it for a time and show it to several others, so that the most possible advertising is obtained at the minimum cost.

This same stunt can be applied in a hundred different ways.

How the Palace Theatre, Maryville, Tenn., Uses Picture of Star in Display and Novel Arrangement of Sign

Tennessee Theatre Uses Its Sign to Exploit Star of Current Film

HERE is an idea that is well worth while, and it comes from the Palace theatre, Maryville, Tenn., a town with a census population of 2,381. This does not include the attendance at a local college which appeals rather to the sons of farmers and the less prosperous.

The Palace has an electric sign, but not with movable electric letters, so that the plain letters have to be used in giving the bill, the illumination making them legible for a considerable distance. However, it is the use of the large medallion above that portion of the sign that is unique. Here a picture of the star in the current feature is used.

In the case illustrated Alice Brady was the star in her first Select Picture, "Her Silent Sacrifice." Now, the Palace manager has devoted his entire display to pictures of Miss Brady. He has used three framed one sheets of the star, and then has used a cut out of her from larger paper, together with the picture in the medallion. Especially in the case of an attractive woman star there could not be any better lobby and sign exploitation.

After the original cost this plan could be operated at little expense. Where the theatre is showing the same stars regularly he could either get special pictures of them which could be used time after time, or take these from the paper supplied and preserve them for future use. It is especially good in a smaller city, where the manager can soon have every one watching the sign.

It is well, in this case, to follow the work of the Maryville house, and feature the picture of the star in the one-sheet matter, but be sure that the title of the picture is plainly brought out. Of course, if you can use a new pose of the star in the medallion each time, so much the better.

Chicago Neighborhood House Scores Hit With Its Presentation of "Over the Top"

CHARLES H. RYAN, manager of the Garfield theatre, Chicago, made a hit with the presentation of "Over the Top" at his neighborhood theatre. It was through the combination of the music and the pictures that he was able to get the fullest effect.

For the overture he used a medley of Stephen Foster's songs. Now these are so familiar that they may well be called national, but at the same time one is saved from the patriotic effort right at the opening of the presentation.

This was followed by Signor Bosley singing "Your Lips Are No Man's Land But Mine," which was written by Empey, and then came the prologue, with all the lights of the theatre out for ten seconds and chimes being sounded on the organ. Then came a dark blue flood light on the stage, revealing one of the trenches at the front, and from behind the scenes came a few bars of "Tenting Tonight," and then came the bugle call for the charge. Light green powder sticks and red torches produced the atmosphere and from the wings came the order, "Over the top, boys," and then with the sound of cannon firing a dozen boy scouts were revealed coming over the top of the trench. Then there was a volley of shots from behind the stage and finally the order to stop firing, with the American flag appearing over the trenches while "It's a Grand Old Flag" was played.

With that the picture curtain came down and there were a series of patriotic slides and then a series of news pictures that Mr. Ryan got from various sources. First there was "Pershing's Fifty From Washington" and "Spirit of the Nation," taken from the Gaumont Weekly, of which we have already told you in the stories of the Rialto and Rivoli, then the "Geezer of Berlin" in clay, and finally Gaumont pictures of marines getting ready for the front and forming in human letters the message, "We're going to make the world safe for you."

In a storm of enthusiasm the feature picture was then started. Special music was played through this and there were various imitations of the battle sounds. It was one of the biggest hits ever scored at the Garfield and the people of that section of Chicago will long remember it. It is a presentation within the means of any house.

Bullock Establishes Serial Day at His House

Sam Bullock believes that he has solved the problem of pleasing all the patrons of his theatre by the way that he uses the serials. He recently began sounding his patrons as to whether they liked serials or not and the result was that he found about fifty per cent of them were ardent serial fans and that the other fifty did not care for them.

So when he got ready to put on "The Fighting Trail" at the Boulevard theatre he announced through handbills and slides that Sunday would be serial day and advised those who did not care for the chaptered stories to stay away and the serial fans to make it the day to come to the Boulevard. So he divided the serial up into five parts of three episodes each, or six reels, and then showed six reels each Sunday. The result was a striking success. Not only was there no criticism by those who came to the theatre to see some feature and had to sit through an episode of a serial, but even the business on the serial was increased.

This setting was used at Shea's Hippodrome beginning the Fourteenth of July, the French national holiday. It represents the spirit of Joan of Arc leading the poilus to victory. It was shown after the usual overture had been played and as the curtains were drawn "Marseillaise" was rendered. It drew enormous applause

How to Develop Theatres and Patronage; Some Tips from Policies of Franklin in Buffalo

SHEA'S HIPPODROME, Buffalo, believes in catering to the motoring public. This is a class of patronage that is well worth building up. It is made up of persons who, as a rule, can afford to pay for what they want. It is up to the live exhibitor to provide "what they want." Quality audiences are what every theatre is striving for. When a house succeeds in drawing to its doors the so-called automobile trade, it is fair to assume that your patrons are quality audiences.

Shea's Hippodrome has developed this patronage to such an extent that it can vie with the finest theatres in the country. It is not uncommon to find the six or seven streets surrounding the house crowded with automobiles of every description, representing all classes of society. Here we find the quivering Henry and the stalwart Pierce-Arrow rubbing noses. This shows the general appeal of the Shea show. To cater to any one class is dangerous. Do not either be too high brow or go to the other extreme.

The automobile trade is made up primarily of those folks who, after reading the advertising of the live exhibitors (dead ones never advertise), pick out the best show and drive to see it, no matter what the distance. The auto has brought every theatre to a man's door. Therefore it is up to the exhibitor to put such class into his program that the footman at the porte cochere will be kept busy helping out motorists eager for the attractions within.

Watches Out for Cars

The Hippodrome has a uniformed attendant on duty in front of the theatre at all times who directs the parking of the cars. This man also keeps an eye on the machines. This is a small thing, perhaps, but the service is greatly appreciated by the motoring public. One of the most distasteful things to the motorist is to find a number of small boys crawling all over his car the moment he stops in front of a theatre. This should be eliminated if the exhibitor would continue to attract these folk.

In interesting motorists in YOUR house, it is possible to find a very desirable mailing list at your local automobile club or at the office of the State Registration Bureau. This list will give you the names and addresses of the motorists in the district. A letter telling why one can afford to use a little more gasoline in coming to YOUR show will usually be found resultful. The curious motorist who comes once and is pleased, comes again and is soon a regular patron—with his family.

The Hippodrome finds that mile-post advertising along the principal routes leading into Buffalo is very effective. At each mile post the motorist finds a Shea Hippodrome sign with appropriate advertising under the mile figure.

Stories are also sent by the Hippodrome Publicity Department to the suburban newspapers, and Manager Franklin has found by personal inquiry that many of his automobile clientele drive in from surrounding towns in the evening. With the new daylight saving law in effect commuting motorists find it possible to get to town early and on the way home almost before dark. The publicity in the country press can usually be secured for a pass privilege.

Automobile patronage can be secured by a watchful analysis of the situation in your locality. If your house is in a city where there are many automobilists, advertise shows consistently in the local papers. If you are running a big house like Shea's Hippodrome in the downtown section, it might be advisable to play up the first-run idea. Manager Franklin uses the line "Not Shown Elsewhere for Thirty Days" in every ad. placed. This, of course, attracts the motorist who does not want to wait thirty days before he can see the same feature at his neighborhood house.

However, after all is said and done, the principal magnet for this much sought after patronage is CLASS. You must put it in your show and its environment. One little thing that Mr. Franklin has found to bring expressions of good will is the attention given by the footman in front of the house to putting up the tops of machines, left down by patrons, during sudden rain storms. This saves the seats from becoming filled with water and leaves a pleasant memory with the man who owns the car. He sees that the exhibitor has an interest in keeping his patronage. Exhibitors will find it well worth while to go after "the man with a car."

In the Country Town

But it is by no means necessary to own the big theatre in the big city to get money out of the automobile trade. We know of a case of one theatre in a mining town where there is not another theatre in twenty miles in two directions, and none that is accessible in the other. The roads are good and the majority of the people are in prosperous circumstances and many of them own low-priced cars. We visited this theatre last summer and found that a number of people were represented in the audience who came from as far as forty miles away. He covered the territory with advertising in his country weekly, but in addition he sent his weekly announcements to every one in his section who owned a car, and reports that business has gradually increased.

Neighborhood houses in the city can profit a great deal by this. One neighborhood house in a large Southern city got a hint from a remark of his wife. His the-

Second Rothapfel Article on Patriotic Propaganda Appears Later

ON account of the fact that Mr. Rothapfel was kept unusually busy with the preparation for the presentation of "America's Answer," the second of the government-made war pictures, the second of his articles on patriotic propaganda in motion picture houses does not appear this week, but will be printed in an early issue.

It will deal especially with the arrangement of news weeklies, etc., as it is done in his two theatres.

Small City Manager Gives Advertising Big Share of Credit For His Successes

JUST as we were about to come out with the announcement that W. S. McLaren, managing director of the Majestic and Colonial theatres, Jackson, Mich., has been added to our Advisory Board as one of the liver wire representatives of the smaller cities—for Jackson has a census population of 34,097—along comes the Goldwyn Editorial Department and backs up our decision with some mighty nice things to say about him.

Goldwyn points to the abiding faith of the Jackson exhibitor in the efficacy of small city newspaper advertising for motion pictures. But since the Editorial Department of Goldwyn has gotten under the wire just a little ahead of us, let it tell the story:

"Mr. McLaren ungrudgingly gives the credit for the popularity of the Majestic and Colonial theatres, Jackson, to a systematic campaign of newspaper advertising and editorial co-operation in the matter of news of the pictures. But almost anybody of Jackson's 30,000 residents, the majority of whom appear to be motion picture fans, will tell you that 'Mack' owes a whole lot to a pleasing personality and to an indefatigable determination to make each patron of the Majestic and the Colonial feel that he or she is an honored guest of the management.

"Unlike many partially successful showmen in towns of the size of Jackson, Mr. McLaren regards his daily newspapers as the surest and best means of reaching his clientele. And, to back up his faith in this opinion, he uses space and copy that an exhibitor in many a big city might be proud of. No one or two-inch nubbins of ads. will do for McLaren. If he has a production he thinks is worth the price—and he takes mighty good care that none gets into either of his theatres unless it is—he goes in for a newspaper splurge, two, or sometimes three, columns, the depth of the page. And he tells a story in type and art that pulls with a power invariably reflected in the box office.

"McLaren is an 'idea' man. He builds his copy along the lines of his own vision. If the stills and advertising copy furnished by motion picture companies are not up to the McLaren standard, out they go, to be replaced by something the advertising man of the producing company had not thought of nor even wished he had until he saw what results McLaren had obtained with the production material given him to work with.

"Goldwyn's release of Mary Garden in her motion picture production of 'Thais' affords a case in point. Before beginning his advertising for this production, Mr. McLaren sat down and had a psychological argument with himself. Frankly, 'Thais' was a costume play, and as such he believed it would have little appeal to the greater number of his patronage, most of whom had been suspected of foregoing a costume picture on general principles.

"He could appeal to the higher class of his patrons with the name of Mary Garden. They, he decided, would come to see the picture because she was in it. But for those who did not know even by reputation the personality of the famous diva another angle was needed. This McLaren furnished with an advertising reproduction of a still in which the star was clad in the flimsiest of draperies. He appealed to his wider public with sensationalism. And no one was disappointed. Those who came to see Mary Garden saw her and were pleased; those who came for a sensation got it and went away satisfied. 'Thais' did a land office business at the box office.

W. S. McLaren, Manager Majestic and Colonial, Jackson, Mich.

"Mr. McLaren has scored equally gratifying success with other Goldwyn pictures—the only brand, by the way, which he has under contract—by similarly conceived methods of common sense showmanship.

"A striking feature of this young exhibitor's policy is apparent in the matter of second runs. Ordinarily a theatre manager in a town the size of Jackson hesitates before he plays a picture after a competitor has finished with it and has supposedly skimmed the cream off the patronage. Not so McLaren. He feels that if a production only half exploited plays to but ten or fifteen per cent of a town's population, there is every reason to believe that the same picture, properly advertised and brought sharply before the attention of the public, should play later to a majority of the inhabitants.

"The wisdom of this policy has been exemplified more than once when McLaren's houses have played to bigger and more profitable patronage second-run than the first-run man was able to draw.

"A large measure of McLaren's success must be laid to his close personal attention to the details of management of the Colonial and Majestic. He devotes the greater part of his time to the Majestic, the larger house, but never neglects the Colonial, a suburban theatre, a mile from the center of town. At least once each night he goes to the Colonial, if only to say hello to the box office man and to walk down the center aisle so that his patrons may see him and feel that he is there in their interest. He is 'Mack' to everybody.

"In the interests of the Majestic and Colonial McLaren edits and publishes a weekly film paper devoted to current and forthcoming feature productions at both houses. Seven thousand copies of this lively and interesting newspaper are distributed each week in the theatres and sent to a select mailing list. Letters from patrons praising or criticizing productions that have been seen at either house are printed. There is a column of film gossip devoted to picture personalities. Attractive photograph layouts add to the interest.

"All in all, McLaren is a showman of the younger school, from whom some of the older and supposedly wiser heads could profitably take instruction. He knows how pictures should be exploited, and he has the courage of his convictions."

"GEN." McCORMICK

We'll Call Him That for He Writes Next on "Strategy in Advertising"

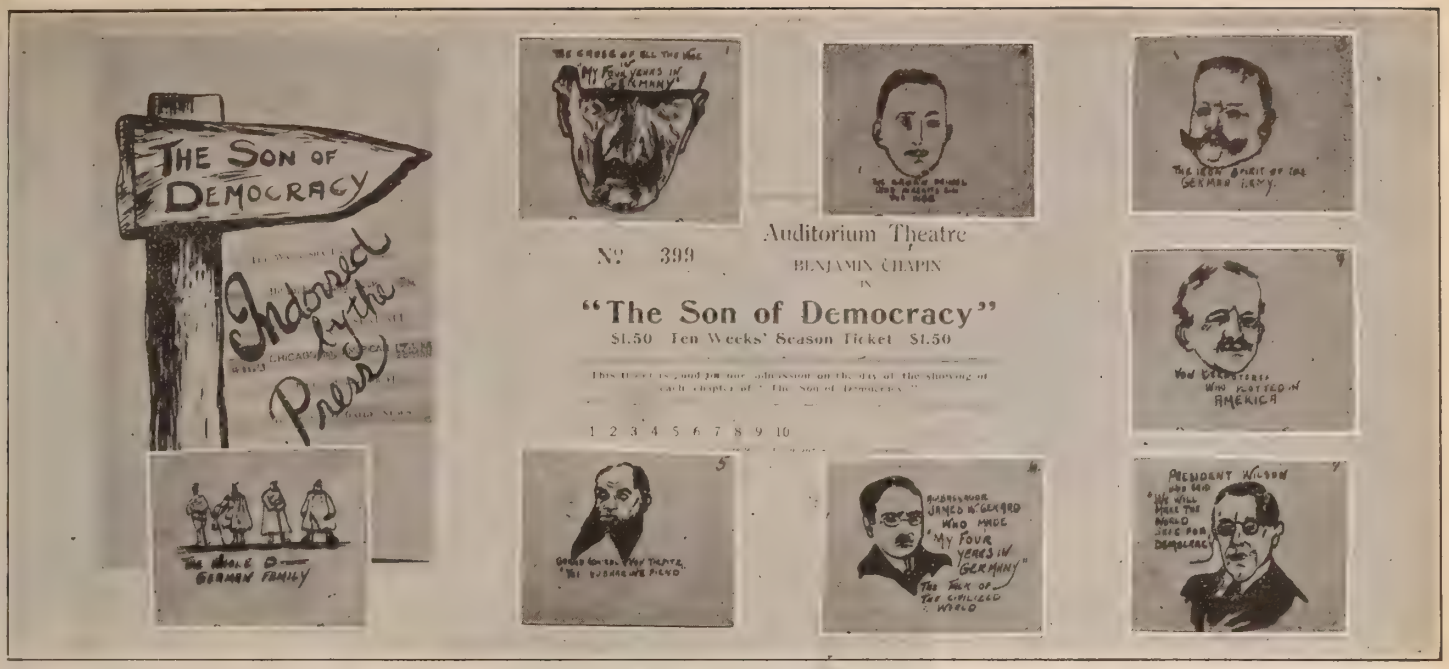
WE will have to begin calling S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, "General" after next week, for with that issue his fourth article will appear in these pages—on "The Strategy of Advertising."

But, pleasantry aside, there is a great deal in the strategy of exploitation and you are going to see quite clearly that it is as essential to the conduct of a motion picture theatre as it is to the generalship of an army.

These articles by Mr. McCormick are attracting unusual attention, and we believe that they are the best articles on motion picture advertising that have ever appeared. And every one that we meet agrees with us; and besides this we get scores of letters telling us how much good they are doing.

Be sure that you are reading these and preserving them for re-reading. If you don't you are going to be very much the loser.

Watch for next week's McCormick article.



At the Left, Home Made One Sheet Prepared by Miss Flossie Jones, Then Slides on "My Four Years in Germany," Together with Ticket for Entire Series of "Son of Democracy"

"Home Made" Aids and Thought with 'Em Put Over Pictures for Waukesha Success

RECENTLY we told you here how Miss Flossie A. Jones, the successful woman exhibitor of Waukesha, Wis., made a big success with some of the bigger productions which she presented in a city of 10,000, and how she got bigger admission prices as the result of the way that she put on the productions.

Miss Jones is a hard worker and the most of the things that she does, she does for herself. She is greatly interested in seeing the smaller exhibitor progress, but in this case, as in all others, it is necessary to work and to make the most of the limited facilities at hand. Her enterprise against handicaps is shown by what she did with "The Son of Democracy" and "My Four Years in Germany."

"I played 'The Son of Democracy,' the entire ten pictures, to ten of the biggest days' business possible," she says, "and I feel that it was due to the publicity campaign that I used." Here is the method she followed:

First she reviewed the picture for herself and then arranged for a private showing sending out some 600 invitations. Just before the pictures were presented she made a short talk on Lincoln and telling who Benjamin Chapin was, and of the fact that he had devoted his life to portraying the martyred President on the lecture platform and in pictures. But she did not stop there.

Chance for Children

Miss Jones then went ahead to tell her invited guests that she believed that these pictures would carry all of them out of the trivial things into a broader view of life, into enthusiasm to make Lincoln's ideals come true, to add just a little more kindness and a little more happiness. She emphasized the fact that this was a picture that she wanted every child in the section to see and that she had devised a plan to carry out that idea to as great an extent as possible. It was simply this: For every ticket for the entire series sold for $1.50 she would give a matinee ticket for the entire series to a child. She called attention to the fact that the price of admission for adults would be fifteen cents, and that they were making nothing on their own tickets by buying them in advance, but that they would make some child happy for ten days, which was worth far more. After this private showing she sold nearly 500 tickets for the series.

Miss Jones manufactured her own one sheets and window cards, using the design that is illustrated above. For this she used a signboard bearing the title of the series of the pictures and then she pasted on the headings from the Waukesha Press, the Daily News, Sentinel and Wisconsin, of Milwaukee, just sixteen miles away, and of the Chicago American and the Daily News, both of which have considerable sale in her town. Across these she wrote in large letters the words "Indorsed by the Press." This was in red and so stood out. Now mark you all of this was HOME MADE work. It did not require any engraving plant or large expense, but it was an idea that came to one who THINKS when she books a picture and seeks to get the most out of it. In addition to this she had her printer to print tack cards with the question, "Who was the Son of Democracy?" and under it "Abraham Lincoln." These were printed in red letters, white stock and then she took a paint brush and separated the question from the answer with blue, and the result was a three-color effect, and something entirely novel.

She used fifty of the first design in one sheet and window card sizes and two hundred of the tack cards. In addition to this she had tickets for the entire series printed, one style for the night admission and the other for the matinee. One of these is illustrated, showing the punching space.

"Youthful Star Night"

Now so much for the exploitation of this one picture, but there was something else that it taught her, or rather something that she figured out because she knew the character of the series herself. She realized that she was going to get a big attendance of children and she felt that the rest of her program should be in sympathy. So she determined to feature nothing but youthful stars in happy productions in connection with the series, and therefore used pictures starring Mary Pickford, Mae Marsh, Mary Miles Minter, Bessie Love, etc. Here was the result of this in Miss Jones' words:

"Now that 'The Son of Democracy' is through I keep on showing the same class of stars on the same night and call it 'Youthful Star Night.' Patrons are constantly calling up and asking in advance just what player will be seen on the next 'Youthful Star' night. They look forward to it with the same interest that they would to the next chapter of a serial that they had started."

Now Miss Jones believes in the use of slides and she makes her own. In the case of "My Four Years in Germany" she put over a very unique campaign that attracted much attention and brought a great deal of business. Anyone who can draw or trace or copy can make these slides just as she did. Her idea is to use her screen just as she would the daily paper. Here is some of her advice along those lines:

"Change each day. Set your slides up like you would a newspaper ad. Run teasers and, above all, lots of drawings.

"If it is a picture of war or a comedy, caricature your subject wherever possible, but see that they fit. If it is a sensational picture play on the public's feelings by words

"I use my screen exclusively for my own

Franklin Makes a Strong Appeal for Patronage of Auto Owners

atre had so much of a neighborhood appeal that when a strange party drove up in a machine his wife remarked: "I wonder who those people are. Get the number of the car, John, and we will look them up." That gave him an idea, and not only did he get the number of that car, but he watched for those of every other machine that stopped in front of his house. Each one of these received "personal" letters calling attention to the fact that the presence of the owner had been noted and stating that the manager would take the liberty of sending the weekly program regularly.

"Our productions," said the letter," are those that had already played at the downtown houses, but if you missed them there we will be very glad to afford you the opportunity of seeing them at the Regal." And that was the proper way for him to have expressed himself. He did not declare that this theatre was better, or anything of that sort. But he added: "You can have a delightful ride over good roads and always be sure of an entertaining show at the Regal."

The automobile has opened a new field to the proprietor of the house in the smaller town, and there is no reason why he cannot bring additional business by keeping his programs before the better class of farmers and the others who own machines. We are going to advance a plan for the development of auto patronage in an early issue.

Home Made Advertising Done By Woman

business. I feel that if it is worth $1.50 a week to a merchant, where there is a question of just how many people are interested in his wares, that it is worth more to me because I am advertising to the motion picture going public.

"I find that the public pays more attention to home-made slides than they do to those purchased from the film concerns. They are a novelty and you are never stuck on advertising a coming production if you have a few squares of glass on hand."

On "My Four Years in Germany" Miss Jones used the series of seven slides that are reproduced above, and these were preceded by an announcement reading: "Characters to be seen in 'My Four Years in Germany,' to be seen at the Colonial theatre Saturday and Sunday. Admission, fifty cents." Then followed cartoons of the kaiser, with a caption, "The cause of all the woe in 'My Four Years in Germany"; of the crown prince, "who inherits all the woe"; of Von Hindenberg, "the iron spirit of the German army"; of Von Bernstorff, "who plotted in America"; of Von Tirpitz, "the submarine fiend," and then four figures and the caption, "The whole d—— family." Following these were pictures of Gerard with the caption, "Who made 'My Four Years in Germany' the talk of the civilized world," and finally of

Vitagraph's New Style of One Sheets

President Wilson, "who said: 'We will make the world safe for Democracy.'"

Now you don't have to have the case of the Rialto or the Circle, or any of the other big cities cited to you to see how the audience would hiss the German characters, applaud the Gerard slide fairly enthusiastically, and then simply go wild when the features of the President are thrown on the screen.

There can be psychology in home-made things and the big city hasn't any monopoly on the punch.

Record Exploitation on "To Hell With the Kaiser"

There is nothing half way about the way that H. C. Horater, manager of the Alhambra theatre, Toledo, O., does things. He is to play, "To Hell With the Kaiser" the week opening August 4.

Two weeks before this he began to advertise the production. His first step was to make patriotic speeches before the Commerce Club, the Red Cross Society and to the Toledo Patriotic League. At all of these meetings he distributed buttons supplied by Metro and bearing the title of the production.

Here is the order that he sent into the Cleveland Metro exchange:

50 24-sheet stands
700 one sheets
100 three sheets
500 window cards
2 slides
2 sets 8 x 10 photos
2 sets 11 x 14 photos
10,000 buttons
5,000 auto tags.

In addition to this he ordered special half and quarter sheets, stickers, throw aways, etc.

There isn't any question but that the Alhambra is going to do a record business, for Mr. Horater has gone about the exploitation with both feet and in addition to the poster work has been using the newspapers heavily up to quarter pages

Vitagraph Makes New Series of One Sheet Worth Preservation

VITAGRAPH is combining the exploitation of a number of its pictures until all its stars have been included with furnishing the progressive exhibitor a picture of the players that they can preserve and use for lobby decoration and other purposes.

First of these new style posters has been issued on Corinne Griffith in "Love Watches." The same plan will be followed on one picture of each of the Vitagraph stars, the reason for issuing no more than one being, first, the high cost of this unusual work, and, second, the fact that the exhibitors would not want similar one sheets on all pictures of the same star.

In the first of these the designer made a slight mistake and allowed a small portion of the "V" to run up into the white border around the etching. This will be obviated in future issues. The face of the player is in etching effect, being printed in brown and gives a most attractive and artistic result. Only the head of the player is shown, so that there is no mass of detail to confuse. The lines are bold, and the entire effect is that of a splendid engraving.

It will be noted that it will be easy for the exhibitor to cut out these pictures, leaving the white margin all the way around. Then they can be framed for use in the lobby or foyer or in any other manner that the exhibitor may desire. This is a mighty good equipment for a theatre to have, and he will find that he can use them in combination with future pictures made by the particular star to excellent advantage, and that he will then have high-class display work on each offering.

This is paper that is certainly worth buying and preserving, and every house, from largest to smallest, can get good and permanent results from it.

"Joan" Sells $22,000 of Thrift Stamps

Colorado Springs, Colo., contributed $22,000 to Thrift Stamps as the result of the way that Manager J. F. Tompkins put on Mabel Normand's "Joan of Plattsburg" at his newly named Liberty theatre. He made the announcement of changing the name of his house from the Pike to the Liberty at the first showing of the picture.

During the run he gave special matinees in the mornings for all children who purchased Thrift Stamps at the booth in the lobby of the theatre, but it did not stop there for nearly all of the 12,000 adults who saw the film also made purchases at the booth.

For three days before the engagement and during the run of the picture Mr. Tompkins had three floats reproducing scenes from the picture parading the streets of Colorado Springs and neighboring towns. The lobby was decorated with American flags and the banners of the Allies.

W. C. Lamoreaux, manager of Ascher's Lakeside theatre, Chicago, used a beautiful display on "Cecilia of the Pink Roses" by arranging roses about the lights and a climbing rose vine over the electric sign with another blooming vine in the lobby probably 3,000 people going to see the road attractions at the local legitimate house. Today in a city of the same size there are probably 20,000 attendants at motion picture theatres. The increase in the appeal is evident and certainly the newspapers should endeavor to print the sort of matter that interests their subscribers. Further than that, the reading notices that had been given the road attractions were frankly advertising matter. They were prepared in New York before the show started "on the road" and the same set of "notices" were handed to the newspapers in every city that was visited. If the show stayed on the road for three years, the chances were a hundred to one that the original stories were still being employed.

Los Angeles Offers Study to What Can Be Done to Giving Real Photo Play News

But we insist that, aside from the vastly increased interest in motion pictures as compared with the legitimate house, there is real news from the photoplay world if the manager and the newspaper will seek to get it. And therefore we do not believe that the motion picture man should be made to pay the full amusement rate for his larger advertising. The amusement rate should apply to the extent to cover the reading notices and the cuts given, but no further. He should then have the commercial rate and be encouraged thereby to do bigger advertising.

But to return to the Los Angeles situation. When this grant of the commercial rate was made Miller kept his theatre advertising in the paper every day, but only occasionally would any of the other theatres come in for large space. Finally, the man that we have mentioned left the Tribune to take another position and the dramatic critic took charge of the reading matter and a man from the advertising department took care of that end.

For six months thereafter no paper paid any particular attention to the studio activities until the Times opened such a department edited by a young woman, who is still in that capacity. The Herald started a motion picture department, and a creditable one, about eighteen months ago, and the other newspapers began giving space to the picture.

In the meantime the idea of giving the commercial rate to the larger advertisers was adopted by all the other papers and on the same principle.

Although we have reproduced only the pages from the Sunday papers in this issue, let's have a glance at the Los Angeles papers. They are, with their circulation as given by Lord and Thomas and their rates as confided by a Los Angeles theatre manager:

Examiner, morning daily (74,336. Amusement rate $2.24, commercial $1.40). Sunday (158,951. Amusement rate $2.80, commercial $1.52).

Express, evening daily (59,506. Amusement rate $1.96, commercial 96c.

Express Tribune, Sunday issue of the Express (68,000. Amusement rate $1.68, commercial 84c.).

Record, evening only (41,501. Amusement rate $1.25, commercial 75c.).

Times, morning daily (66,944. Amusement rate $2.24, commercial $1.40). Sunday (109,337. Amusement rate $2.80, commercial $1.52).

The situation in Los Angeles is peculiar in that there are only a few theatres that are advertising, and these are doing such a full share that it is probable that there is probably more money spent by motion picture theatres in Los Angeles for newspaper display than in any other city of equal size in the country. And they are consistent advertisers all during the week. Again, they do not limit their copy to one or two papers, but in most cases give the matter to all, so that they are sure of reaching every person in the territory.

Now the principal theatres are in the downtown section, within a radius of some eight blocks. On Broadway there are Grauman's, with a seating capacity of 2,400; Clune's Broadway, seating 800; Superba, 690; Symphony, 720; Tally's Broadway, 895; Quinn's Rialto, 840; Riviera, 870; and the Garrick, 780. On Seventh street, in the Broadway block, is the Palace, a second run house with 710, and on Grand avenue, two blocks further away, the Kinema, 2,275. The Alhambra, 815, is on Hill street, running parallel with Broadway. Clune's Auditorium, 3,000, is on Fifth street, two blocks from Broadway, and Miller's, 899, is on Main street. This covers the advertising theatres.

We have reproduced five pages from the Express-Tribune. Practically all of the reading matter on these pages is motion picture matter, though there is some space devoted to the legitimate and vaudeville. We call your attention to the liberal space that is used by Grauman's, Clune's Auditorium, Clune's Broadway, the Kinema, Tally's Broadway and the Symphony.

The Examiner does less than any of the papers. We have reproduced the "Drama" and the "Film" pages, but you will notice that practically all the advertising is from the motion picture houses, and that the reading matter is confined to pure reading notices and photographic representation for each advertising house.

The Times has a peculiar arrangement of its entire paper and will not allow the use of heavy type or cuts in its advertising. The Ben Day effect generally prevails. It runs a section called "Music and Song," which includes the society news and other matter. On the first page of this section there is generally a story about some actor or some studio with start of the reading notices and of the studio gossip which turn over to inside pages. On the inside also is a layout on the leading attractions. A second page which carries dramatic news has been reproduced to show the character of the advertising.

This is a brief outline of the situation with a glance at the Sunday papers. Next week we will take up the other papers and go into the news matter that they print.

Seeing Rialto and Rivoli with Rothapfel

THERE is just one of the regulation rules followed at the Rivoli this week. The presentation opens with the overture and closes with a comedy and an organ solo. In all other ways the performance is distinctly "different." Monday evening after we had seen the show we stood in the lobby to hear the comment of the people as they went out and the whole trend of it was that everyone had been surprised. It was a splendid hot weather bill; a sort of a salad.

For the second time Mr. Rothapfel is putting on a bill without the so-called feature, and he is getting the people in the habit of looking for such bills. It is a remarkable bill in that the only picture in which human actors appear is a two-reel O. Henry picture, "Mammon and the Archer," which, by the way, proved that the people do not demand a lot of "action" so long as the two reels are so thoroughly entertaining as was this picture. Of course there were people shown in the cannibal picture, but the comedy is a cartoon. It was a really remarkable arrangement.

We want you to consider the novelty of this arrangement, not that you may go and do exactly the same thing, but that you may remember that it pays you to keep your patrons surprised and expectant. In these hot weather days we are too apt to let things rock along as they will, but this is the very season when it pays to be doing things. The patron himself doesn't want to waste any more energy than he has to waste. He isn't eating a great deal of meat these hot days when the weather is working for Hoover, but he wants his salad—and spice.

Our first surprise comes in the overture, selections from "Il Trovatore." With the lights in red with the exception of the columns of the inner dome in green, there is first played the introduction and then the "Anvil Chorus" and a number of the other airs, and then the red fades down to blue and the curtains part. We are shown a prison scene at night with Mlle. D'Espinoy in black on the stage, the prison at the left with a light at one of its windows. There is a single star in the sky. John Wenger, who designed the display, has never done anything better. Then the "prison scene" is sung, with Mlle. D'Espinoy first heard and then answered by G. Bettini, from the prison (and who, of course, does not make his appearance on the stage). With the last words of the duet the curtains part, and the audience which had been waiting to applaud the last crashing notes of the orchestra with a customary rendition of the overture accentuates its applause.

There is a punch to every moment of the Animated. The larger part of this is the Official War Review, but Mr. Rothapfel has given an intimate touch to this by first presenting Gaumont pictures of Gen. March, the chief of staff who gives out the war news weekly to the correspondents. This serves to give an added official punch to the pictures and the introduction is shown to the music of "El Capitan."

First of the war pictures show the Italian troops in action. First are seen the Austrian positions on Valbella peak as viewed by the Italians and then the fire of the big Italian guns, a curtain of fire, the advance and finally the capture of the foe's positions and hundreds of prisoners. The great applause is augmented by the orchestral rendition. First selection is "Sicilian Vespers" and during this there are trumpet calls and imitations of the firing guns and then it is counterpointed with a few bars of "Bersaglieri," turning into "Garibaldi" as the Austrian prisoners march on the screen.

Then we go to the battlefields of France and are shown American soldiers on the "Road to Victory," and here the music is "Over There," played with full orchestra and oral effects and the audience goes wild over the marching men and pictures of the Americans manning the big guns. "Battle of San Juan Hill" is used for these pictures and when the scenes change to bringing up munitions the music becomes "Loyal Hearts." You will remember that this is counterpointed with "God Save the King," for in these scenes the actors are British troops. We have then pictures of preparations for an attack and a storm furioso is used during the firing scenes, and then we are taken through a village which is being shelled, where the camera man must have come mighty close to losing his life, and then we have the Germans crying "Kamerad" and surrendering. "Battle Hymn of the Republic" played in very martial spirit is the music and the audience is stirred to a very high pitch of enthusiasm.

Now there was plenty of a punch for an ending here, but still there were comparatively few views of Americans in the official pictures, and Mr. Rothapfel wanted to get the great big thrill of patriotism from the audience, so he used Hearst-Pathe pictures of the Victory of the Marne. While these pictures were not quite up to the moment in the fullness of the American gains, the audience got the whole spirit and simply went wild. First was shown a map of the section and the objectives of the Hun Thing and then Gen. Liggett, the American commander on that front, with the orchestra playing "Hail Columbia." Then we get the bigger thrill with a scheme that Mr. Rothapfel originated and of which we told readers of these articles months ago. We are brought face to face with the boys who are taking part in this Over the Top of Right, with a sub-title, "Remember When the Rainbow Boys Were Reviewed by Secretary Baker?" and then we have views of the thousands of marching men with the tune "Yankee Doodle." Then come views of the Camp Upton parade, on that day of the big snow, when they marched down Fifth avenue and showed us that the Spirit of Democracy had made them veterans in a few months. "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean" is played here and—well, the Rivoli is built of steel and concrete and there are no "rafters" to lift.

Now here is just a little hint. But it's worth a good many dollars to you and it's worth a good many thousand in the appreciation that you are going to get from your patrons. The boys from your section of the country are going to get into the fighting. Perhaps they are already "Over There" and if they are not they are going every day. In nearly every section motion pictures are made of the marching men at the various camps. If you can afford it, buy this part of the news weekly, or whatever it is and put it away. If you cannot, arrange with your exchange to keep it in readiness for your call.

And when it is announced that the men from your camp are in the battle, USE IT. It is not necessary that the public is able to recognize faces, but the home punch is there, and the greatest of all patriotic impulses comes from the protection of the fireside—your fireside. It will mean a new incentive to winning the war, a new spirit that your city is a part of the fight; and it will mean that you are given the credit for thinking about your own people—that you are on the job.

With the lights all blue the string instruments and the organ play the last sixteen bars of "Onward Christian Soldiers" and then the stage curtains part, showing

AMERICA'S ANSWER

We Will Tell You How Rothapfel Puts On This Second U. S. Film

ON next Monday the second of the government made pictures will be shown for the first time at the Cohan theatre. This is "America's Answer" and follows along on the heels of "Pershing's Crusaders."

The Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information fully realizes the importance of having this picture properly presented that it has asked S. L. Rothapfel to attend to all the details of presentation. He will arrange the music, the settings and everything else.

There are thousands of you going to show this picture and will want the full description of the manner to present it. We will print in the next issue a full account of Mr. Rothapfel's method of presentation. This will be the complete and authoritative account.

Rialto and Rivoli

Greek Evans seated on the steps of a pedestal before one of the Wenger sets with an oval opening of red, merging into the blue of the sky in the rear. As this splendid performer sings "My Angel of the Flaming Cross," the Red Cross appears gradually in the sky. It is remarkably effective and as the curtains fall together with the last strains the enthusiasm of the audience is remarkable, even considering the way that the song is staged and the admirable voice of the singer.

Now comes the O. Henry two-reeler, "Mammon and the Archer." These productions are intensely human, with a strong heart appeal and plenty of humor. "Love's Old Sweet Song" is the theme for this, and it is first played when the hero is in the garden with the girl. "King's Lieutenant" is used for the opening and then as scenes in Wall street come on the screen it changes to "Sidewalks of New York." "You're in Love" follows the first theme rendition, then with "Causerie" as the hero climbs the balustrade to see the girl, then "Poppyland" and "Valse American." "Garden of Love" is employed for the scenes where the rival is shown with the girl, and you'll remember that this popular song of Carle's referred to the "gent" who "picked a lemon in the garden of love where only peaches should grow." The theme, with the chorus played and then violin solo and chorus repeated are shown for the scenes the next morning and then follows through "Sweet Emaline Girl," then "Pink Lady Valse" and "Un Peu D'Amour." Then comes the scene that explains how father had arranged the street blockade and "What's the Matter with Father?" is aptly used, with the theme at the end. The picture gets an enormous hand.

Then come the Martin Johnson pictures, "Among the Cannibal Isles of the South Pacific." These are remarkable pictures and probably the most unusual that have ever been taken, for they were secured at imminent risk of life. Three times daily Mr. Johnson and his pretty little wife who accompanied him on the tour appear, Mr. Johnson lecturing the picture. However, as the film will go out for general release it will have the usual titles. Of course no music is used during the time that Mr. Johnson himself appears and at other times the music is carried on the organ. Inhabitants of a number of the islands are shown, the tribes being entirely different and the pictures come to an end with the most savage of all, from which the author and his wife barely escaped with their lives while poisoned arrows were being shot at them. There is plenty of humor brought in to relieve the danger elements, and the film will lend itself especially well to a fine musical setting, including the various native dances that are shown. There are remarkable types of people shown with their lack of costume, their weird facial decorations, such as plugs through the noses, and innumerable water scenes. There is one remarkable picture in which is shown one of the older men of the tribe being buried alive, it being explained that when one of them became so old that he was a care to the rest, he was put out of the way by being buried alive in a ceremony that lasted a couple of days. Flat-footed dancers form another one of the novelties, and there is something to interest every moment.

With the lights all gold the orchestra then plays selections from "Sari," and to give us a good laugh at the end the Katzenjammer Kids, released by Educational, come on the screen in "Pep." The kids buy a bottle of "pep" from a medicine man and then proceed to use it when the rich uncle comes to visit. First they feed it to the chickens, who execute wonderful dances and then attack the "cap'n" when he comes to kill one of them for dinner, and here "Kukokama," with imitations of the chickens is used, and when the old lady and the uncle get the "pep" and start to dancing, it becomes "Visions of Salome," with "Vixen Gallop" at the end.

"Fra Diavolo," which is played with the lights all gold, is the overture at the Rialto and then follows "Glimpses of Gascony," a Beacon film. This contains some especially beautiful views of the Bay of Biscay and water breaking on the rocks. First "L'Arlesienne" is used and then "Clavelitos," both effective numbers for such scenics.

Miss Gladys Rice furnishes one of the biggest hits of the whole bill with her singing of "Oh Promise Me." This girl, under the direction of Mr. Rothapfel, has put a wonderful amount of expression in a remarkably sweet voice and her stage presence makes her renditions all the more effective.

Rialto Animated is short this week, too short for us, because we have come to look forward to these as a principal portion of the show. It had to be trimmed this week on account of the length of the remainder of the bill, but even though it was done at the Rialto where we generally find things just right, we believe that it is always a mistake to sacrifice any of this part of the bill.

It opens with Hearst-Pathe pictures of "With the Stars and Stripes in France," and to the music of "Columbia March" we have scenes in the trenches and pictures of the devastation wrought on the battlefields. Then Gaumont supplies the swimming carnival at Chicago with "Furore Gallop" and from the same source come views of harvesting the wheat crops with the gigantic new machines with "For the Freedom of the World" the music. Gaumont also supplies some interesting views of making shells in one of the big munition plants, with "Victory" the accompanying air. Hearst-Pathe pictures take us to Los Angeles, where we have more evidences of Schwab and his shipbuilding, and for this the music of "We Are Coming." Gaumont pictures off the coast of France show the Hun mines being picked up and exploded, with "Le Cid" accompanying. The Animated comes to a punching ending with the Gaumont pictures showing how we are meeting the German curse at its own game with bomb, rockets, etc. These night effects are unusually good and the stirring music of "Triumphant America" adds much to the effect.

With the lights all red except the center of the main dome in purple, Carlos Mejia sings "O Paradiso" from "L'Africaine" before the Byzantine setting.

Wallace Reid in "Less Than Kin" is the feature and this affords some excellent musical opportunities, starting off with "Pan Americana" for the opening scenes in the South American country and then going into "Goyesca" and "Symphonette" and back to "Goyesca," with "Forewarned" following. Then comes in "Roses and Memories," the theme, when Reid sees the picture of the girl that his double has. "Home Sweet Home" is used, with the longing for home on shipboard and "Home Again" for the landing in New York. "Kangaroo Drop" is effective with the appearance of the chief crook, and "Hot Time" is employed with the hero's trouble with his "wife" and two "daughters." Then when he has to choose between the electric chair and the wife "Oh, You Beautiful Doll" gets more laughs.

Following the feature the orchestra plays "Eugene O'Negrin" and then comes the comedy, a re-issue, and one of the funniest that has ever been made, "Fatty" Arbuckle in "The Waiter's Ball." We remember distinctly that when it was first issued we sat through it on three successive evenings and then on a return booking saw it twice. And Sunday, for the sixth time, we laughed just as much as ever. "There'll Be a Hot Time for the Old Men" is used in the introductory scenes of the old man with the gout and then "Good Morning Mr. Zip-Zip-Zip," "K-K-K-Katy," "Girl o' Mine," "Milo" and "Some Sweet Day," with "That Moaning Trombone" used for the jazz band at the ball and "Woonsocket Gallop" for the chase stuff. Of course there are all sorts of imitations, for one of these Keystone comedies would not be a success without them.

It's a big laugh. In fact there is a delightful theme of fun all through the bill. There's nothing heavy about it unless it be the male solo. In fact at both houses there are two mighty good sorts of bills for a hot day when you don't want to even have to think—and goodness knows it is hot!

SMALLER ONES

Have You Passed Up Stories of What Other Theatres Are Doing

WHILE we haven't quite completed our arrangements to keep our promise of last week and print more about what the smaller houses are doing, practically every line of matter in this department this issue is about things that smaller houses are doing or can do.

If you have missed them, turn back to these pages after you have read of the Rialto and Rivoli.

Rothapfel Books Goldwyn Films

Stars Series Policy Goes Into Both Rialto and Rivoli—Strand Also Signs Up in Addition to Stanley Chain

EVIDENCE of the immediate popular approval of Goldwyn's adoption of the Star Series booking policy seems afforded by the announcement by the company of the signing of contracts with F. L. Rothapfel for both the Rialto and Rivoli theatres and with Harold Edel for the Strand. Thus Goldwyn's individual star series productions will have their New York first-run presentation in three great metropolitan screen institutions.

Goldwyn also announces the closing of a contract for all of the Ascher Bros.-Lubliner & Trinz-Schaefer houses, numbering twenty-seven in all, in Chicago for the complete output of fifty or more productions in the coming season under the star series plan.

Announcement likewise is made of the signing of the Stanley and Palace theatres and all of the Stanley chain of houses in Philadelphia under contract with Jules F. Mastbaum for the complete new year's output of the company.

"The signing of New York's three great motion picture theatres and the Stanley and Ascher bookings are matters of pride to Goldwyn," said Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn. "The Stanley group represents the second largest booking of theatres that it is possible for a company to obtain in the United States. The booking obtained through Messrs. Nathan, Harry and Max Ascher is the third largest available in the country.

"It is worthy of note that Mr. Rothapfel, a genius among showmen, is giving his endorsement to the Goldwyn standard of production and that the endorsement first given us in New York last year by the late Mitchel H. Mark is continued this year by Mr. Edel.

"The endorsement that the late Stanley V. Mastbaum gave us by a solid booking of all Goldwyn Pictures at his Stanley theatre is repeated for the coming season by his brother and we continue to have our splendid representation in the largest and best houses throughout the Philadelphia territory.

"Already Goldwyn has closed contracts for more than a score more of the largest cities of the country with the biggest and most powerful exhibitors in those cities. Detailed announcement of these is reserved for a few days."

Lila Lee Finishes Her First Paramount

WITH her first picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," finished at the Hollywood studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Lila Lee, newest Paramount star, will start work shortly on "Peggy, the Pirate," her second film. The actress is said to have surprised the studio people from the first by her ready grasp of the details of the work and is being congratulated on all sides. It is freely predicted that she will surprise the public as well by her personal charm.

Cecil B. DeMille has also begun work on his new Artcraft special offering which has not been titled but which is said to be the most important film he has undertaken for some time. It deals with the war but not with the actual battlefield scenes to any extent. Indeed the psychological aspects are largely involved in the story which is by Jeanie MacPherson, but there is declared to be suspense and dramatic movement of the highest order in the picture. Bryant Washburn plays the male lead; Florence Vidor is the principal female figure and G. Butler Clonebaugh is the heavy. Scenically, it is promised the production will be far above the ordinary and Mr. De Mille is giving extraordinary attention to the details of direction. Belgium is the scene of the play, which is divided into two periods—that just preceding the war and the present time.

Wallace Reid and his company, with Ann Little as the leading woman, is making rapid work of "The Man From Funeral Range," a Western tale with plenty of zip and go, according to report.

Ethel Clayton's first Paramount starring vehicle has been named "The Girl Who Came Back." It is an Americanized adaptation by Beulah Marie Dix from the play, "Leah Kleschna."

World Picks Paper for Exhibitors

A new help has been arranged for exhibitors of World pictures. It is an important link in the World service chain, as it guarantees that every exhibitor will receive the particular kind of paper best suited to meet his requirements.

It is the custom, when issuing lithographs, to have them include, when the action of the play permits, a one-sheet and a thre-sheet poster depicting intensely dramatic situations (fights, murders, etc.), and the other one-sheet and the other three-sheet depicting love scenes or scenes of heart interest or pathos, or straight portraits, all strong in their appeal but of a character entirely unlike the other posters.

Arrangements have now been completed whereby a distinctive mark is placed on all paper so that the theatre catering to a class attracted by the ultra-melodramatic will receive the paper that will boost its box-office. By the same token, the theatre of an opposite kind will receive the paper that will appeal most forcefully to its patrons.

Carewe Establishes Record with Metro

Edwin Carewe, who is directing Harold Lockwood in the screen version of "Pals First," which Metro will distribute under the banner of Screen Classics, Inc., has established what is probably a record for lengthy service with one company.

Carewe put on "Cora," the first picture Metro released and, with the exception of a brief absence to put on one picture for another firm, has been with Metro ever since. In point of service he is the oldest director with Metro.

Most of the stars who have appeared in Metro releases were directed by Mr. Carewe. In the list are included Ethel Barrymore, Emily Stevens, Emmy Wehlen, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, Bert Lytell and now Mr. Lockwood.

Fox Buys Novel by Lusitania Victim

"Buchanan's Wife," the novel by Justus Miles Forman, who lost his life on the Lusitania, has been purchased by William Fox, it is announced by the Fox Film Corporation.

In speaking of the purchase of "Buchanan's Wife," an official of the Fox Film Corporation stated that he "considered the book one of the strongest and best adapted for motion pictures that he had read in a long time."

It is understood that it had not yet been decided who will be the star in the picture, but that work will commence soon is assured.

Pathe Begins Campaign on "Hands Up"

With the approaching release of the first episode of the new Pathe-Astra serial, "Hands Up," for which Aug. 18 has been set as the positive date, Pathe's advertising and publicity departments got their second wind last week, and launched the national advertising and publicity campaign in good shape.

Among the aids for exploitation of "Hands Up" are bill-posting campaigns in 450 cities; serial publication of the novelized version in one of the leading fan magazines; the publication of the serial in large city newspapers; and heralds, broadsides and campaign books printed in several colors.

Pathe reports the advance bookings of "Hands Up" to exceed all records. A special sales-reel in which are included some of the thrills contained in the first two episodes, has been sent this week to the thirty branch exchanges where it may be viewed by exhibitors. "Hands Up" is being made at the Astra studio in Los Angeles with Ruth Roland, starring, George Chesebro as her leading man and a good supporting company.

Scout Film Takes Shape as Long Feature

Manager Armstrong, of the Denver Universal Exchange, is arranging bookings on "Boy Scouts to the Rescue," as a superfeature in nine reels. The same method of handling has been adopted in the Northwestern territory.

Released originally as a five-reel episode serial, it is said to lend itself so readily to presentation as a multiple-reel special feature that exhibitors prefer it in that form to running it as a serial, in many cases.

Manager Erb, of the Plaza theatre, Denver, presented it as a serial, and other exhibitors who are arranging bookings as a single feature expect to get immense cooperation from the Boy Scouts of the country in putting it over, Universal says.

Serials Make Hit in Cleveland

Exchange Managers Declare State of Weather Makes No Difference to Box Office If One Is on Bill —Shorts Good

(Special to Motion Picture News.)

CLEVELAND.—It has been chronicled that Shakespeare said, once upon a time, that "the play's the thing." There are still those producers who declare that the Bard of Avon was right, and that the play IS the thing, while there are still others who choose to take a different view.

It is very likely the great writer did not take into consideration the exchange managers of Cleveland when he made his well-known grand-stand play about the drama. For just now the serial is the thing in Cleveland, proving that had Shakespeare lived until the age of motion pictures he might have glimpsed the art of entertainment from another angle.

Serials, like trumps, are always in order. Several local exhibitors have said that they make money on serials no matter what the thermometer registers, which is more than can be said for the finest feature known.

One of the latest evidences of the popularity of serials is manifested by the results obtained by Manager J. R. Johnson, of the Vitagraph exchange in Cleveland, and his sales force, which has completed a remarkable tour of the country signing up bookings on the next Vitagraph serial, "The Fight for Millions." The first installment of the picture was not released until the 14th of July, and before that date fifty-two houses in Cleveland had booked it; seven in Columbus; eleven in Akron; ten in Toledo; two in Lima, and other towns throughout the territory are equally well represented on the Vitagraph books for "The Fight for Millions."

"One fellow came into the office the other day," said Assistant Manager Van Gorder, "and said he wanted to book the serial to follow 'The Fight for Millions.' We told him that we didn't know the name of the next serial. That, in fact, we didn't even know what its plot is. But the exhibitor refused to be phazed. He came to book the serial, and book it he did, although he doesn't know a thing about it other than it will star Antonio Moreno."

Another phase of the serial proposition was discussed by Jack Conant, manager of the General Film's Cleveland office.

"In the summer, particularly, serials are remunerative," Conant said, "but they are especially good when coupled with one or two short reel comedies. The Rivoli theatre in New York has recently met with success following a short reel program. This condition has prevailed in Cleveland for some time past. We have at least fifteen theatres in Cleveland which run one day of short reel pictures each week. Almost always, this is in connection with a serial. We find the short reel program most successful when used with a serial, for the people who go to see a serial do not want to sit through a long feature picture as well. They want a good short comedy and a snappy Western picture of not more than two reels, like the Wolfville Tales.

"Some of the motion picture theatres which regularly run a short reel program are the Nemo, Crown, Lakeview, Empress, Lyceum, American, Amphion, and the Alpha. They are alternating the O. Henry stories and the Wolfville tales, and using the Judge Brown and Ned Finley stories, as well as a lot of single-reel comedies."

"The short reel progam is not particularly economical," Mr. Conant explained. "It probably costs as much as a long feature would cost, but the point is that it does the business in the summer that the feature often fails to do, and so is a welcome straw for the exhibitor to grasp."

Arrived in France

Ethel Barrymore, Metro star of "Our Mrs. McChesney," a screen version of the Edna Ferba stories and play of that name, has received word that her husband, Russell G. Colt, has arrived safely in France. Mr. Colt holds a commission in the Aviation Corps.

Production Increase Foreseen

Vitagraph Prepares on West Coast for Improvements to Handle Dozen Companies This Winter — New Studio Building

ACCORDING to an announcement this week to Motion Picture News, plans are maturing for a great increase in winter production at the Vitagraph Western studio in Hollywood. President Albert E. Smith states that he has authorized improvements which will cost approximately $50,000, as he contemplates an extension of activities on the Coast. At the present time seven companies are at work in the West and Mr. Smith indicated that others will be sent there shortly, although he was not prepared to state at this time how many others he plans to transfer from the East.

Improvements and enlargements have been going on at the Vitagraph Western studio for several months past, an outdoor stage 150 feet long having been completed not long since and a double tier of dressing-rooms added to those already in use.

Mr. Smith received word last week that the work of grading a portion of the Vitagraph lot in Hollywood for the erection of a new light studio had been completed, and the actual building of the stage is now under way. The stage will be 50 x 120 feet and it will be close to the larger light studio, which was one of the first buildings put at the plant. It is expected that the new stage will be completed and ready for production use by the latter part of August.

A new power plant also is being installed at the Hollywood plant and a well 190 feet has been drilled which will insure an unlimited supply of water for the laboratories and other parts of the studio. Incidentally the laboratories also are to be enlarged soon, according to Mr. Smith's plans, as the output of film in the West now is so great as to tax the laboratory capacity of the plant to the utmost. With the contemplated increase in production which is planned for the Western studio an increase in laboratory facilities is made imperative.

Mr. Smith indicated that before long he would be able to announce complete production plans for the forthcoming winter, both at the Eastern and the Western studios of the company.

Grandon Picks Cast for Gail Kane Story

GAIL KANE'S return to the screen after a six months' absence will be in a series of eight special productions to be made by Gail Kane Productions, and released by the Mutual Film Corporations at intervals of six and eight weeks, beginning with September 1. The first release is "Love's Law," Mutual announces.

Miss Kane is taking a week's rest at her apartment in New York after completing the first of the series and will commence work the first of next week on the second. The story has been selected and Francis J. Grandon, her director, is selecting the cast to support Miss Kane.

The plays for Miss Kane will be chosen by a process of careful selection to provide her with the best vehicles available. The stories will be diversified with roles for Miss Kane that most suit her particular talents

"Miss Kane has a tremendous box-office drawing power and her new pictures are being produced to deliver the most there is in her name to the screens of the country," said James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual in announcing that the Kane productions would be released as specials.

"The new Kane pictures will get every possible admission out of the territories in which they are shown if the exhibitor uses any sort of showmanship. I have seen the first of the pictures, 'Love's Law,' and I conferred with Miss Kane over the story for the second, and I know that the box-office value is there."

Courtney Foote appears with Miss Kane in her first picture—a five-reel story of how a girl of birth and talent rose above her environment and won professional recognition and a husband. It is laid in New York today.

"Temple of Dusk" Reaches Cutting Room

Work on "The Temple of Dusk," second of the Sessue Hayakawa feature productions, has been completed by the Haworth Pictures Corporation and the picture is now in the cutting room. The picture is regarded as in every way equal to Hayakawa's first production, "His Birthright," which is scheduled for release on September 1. The third picture of the series of eight, for which no name has as yet been selected, is now in work.

Hayakawa believes "The Temple of Dusk" epitomizes all that is best in interracial drama and is confident that the play will be popular with American audiences because it holds the mirror up to both American and Japanese character and permits both to see themselves as others do.

Edith Roberts Stars in "Love Swindle"

Universal announces that Edith Roberts' second subject as a Bluebird star will be "The Love Swindle," formerly called "The Doings of Diana." In her second feature Miss Roberts appears as Diana Rosson, who possesses a will of her own plus a fortune which enables her to disregard the mandates of her aunt, who is inclined to regard the modern girl as heading straight for perdition.

Supporting Miss Roberts in "The Love Swindle" are Emanuel Turner, who enacts the role of Dick Webster, Leo White, who appears as Trotwell, and Clarissa Selwyn, who enacts the part of Diana's aunt.

Information from Universal states that this Bluebird will be released the week of August 5.

Ramsaye Takes Over Screen Telegram

Ray L. Hall, supervising editor of the Screen Telegram, has been released to the Committee on Public Information for the duration of the war by James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. Terry Ramsaye, director of publicity for the Mutual, has assumed, in addition to his other duties, that of managing editor of the Screen Telegram. Mr. Hall becomes production manager for the Division of Films, of which Charles S. Hart is director.

The Screen Telegram has recently been moved from Chicago to New York, its staff reorganized and its scope broadened.

At the close of the war Mr. Hall is expected to rejoin the staff of the Screen Telegram.

Irwin Story Takes Its Release Date

Wallace Irwin, the magazine writer and creator of the character of Hashimura Togo, "the Japanese schoolboy," makes his debut as a contributor to the Vitagraph program with "A Gentleman's Agreement," the Blue Ribbon feature announced for release during the week of July 29. Nell Shipman is featured with Alfred Whitman in this feature, which was made under direction of David Smith.

Director Smith is credited with having given the play some splendid interior and exterior settings and a cast of extraordinary strength. This includes Al Garcia, Patricia Palmer, Juan de la Cruze, Mrs. Jessie Buskirk, Jack Wetherby, and Jake Abraham.

Flagg Makes Films at Manhattan Plant

The Fifty-fourth street studios of Famous Players were leased by Jack Eaton of Town & Country Films, Inc., to use for the making of the James Montgomery Flagg comedy series. They started on picture No. 2, "Romance and Brass Tacks," in the studio on July 8, in which picture they are starring Peggy Adams as the Romantic Girl. Playing opposite Miss Adams is Olin Howland, late star of the musical comedy, "Leave It To Jane." The leading juvenile part is played by Harold Foshay, formerly a Vitagraph player.

August Brings First of Plaza Films

W. H. Hodkinson Corporation announced to MOTION PICTURE NEWS this week that its new brand of Plaza pictures will be ready for distribution the latter part of August. The first will be, according to plans, "Petticoats and Politics," on August 26, with Anita King in the star role. The second will be released September 9 under the title of "Angel Child," starring Kathleen Clifford. It is said that prints of the first named production will be in all the General Film branch offices by August 9.

"Petticoats and Politics" is a comedy-drama and "Angel Child" is a comedy.

Later Plaza releases will be "Whatever the Cost," with Anita King, and "The Divided Law," with Miss Clifford.

Universal Selects New Story for Dean

Priscilla Dean, Universal star, who was presented in "The Two-Soul Woman," and who was seen recently co-starred with Ella Hall in "Which Woman?" will soon start work on "The Magnificent Jacala," a photoplay version of Louis Winter's novelette of the same name that appeared in Parisienne magazine. Tod Browning will direct the picture.

It is the story of a very rich girl who is told she is homely and has no chance to win out in life's battle. How she overcomes all obstacles through her own personality and will power, after renting the home of a society queen, makes a rapid-action story of human interest appeal.

Golden Builds Set

What the producers claim to be one of the most intricate sets ever erected for motion pictures is being installed at the Crystal Studios for use in several episodes of the coming Leah Baird serial. In order to supervise the preliminary installation of the set before taking the serial company up to Newfoundland, Director J. A. Golden worked from Saturday morning until Monday noon without rest. However, under his supervision, the Crystal studio electrical and carpenter staffs have produced a set that is said to be a marvel of mechanical skill.

First National Directors Meet

Plans Perfected for Coming Season, Including Purchase of Big Productions—"Tarzan" Sequel Distribution Secured

THE most important meeting of the directors of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit that has been held in some months, took place during the three days of July 16, 17 and 18 at circuit headquarters in New York. The directors present included Robert Lieber, president, Indianapolis; Walter Hays, Buffalo; H. O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia; Aaron J. Jones, Chicago; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas, and J. D. Williams, manager, who also took a prominent part in the meeting. The directors met to perfect plans for the coming season and to take action upon the ratification of important contracts and the purchase of several big productions which had been pending for several weeks.

A contract was signed with the National Film Corporation of America, giving the circuit exclusive right to distribute the sequel to "Tarzan of the Apes." William Parsons, president of the company which produced this feature, appeared personally before the directors and also arranged for a special showing of the film before the deal was completed.

H. O. Schwalbe who took an active hand in the arrangements on behalf of the circuit, spoke as follows after the contract had been approved:

"I have every confidence that this picture will make box-office history in the same way that 'Tarzan of the Apes' did. Every exhibitor who was wise enough to book the remarkable production of which this is a sequel, will find that his patrons will be glad to ratify his good judgment. In all my experience as an exhibitor and an associate of exhibitors, I never came across a production with more unique angles for box-office appeals than 'Tarzan of the Apes.' It has been one of the big reasons for the general satisfaction apparent among First National franchise holders during the current season.

"It was almost a foregone conclusion that there would be a second 'Tarzan' picture to follow up with, but I cannot refrain from congratulating Mr. Parsons, Mr. Reichenbach and their associates for the activity they have shown in turning out this excellent sequel in record time. Every house that has shown 'Tarzan' will welcome the news that the new picture will be ready for release within a very few weeks."

Another important business transaction was signalized by the directors with the outright purchase of the seven-reel official government war picture from the Italo-North American Commercial Union. It will be released in its full seven-reel form by the circuit, under the title of "Italy's Flaming Front."

Several other important production and distribution plans were taken up by the directors, complete details of which will shortly be forthcoming. Every man present left the meeting declaring that work had been accomplished which positively assures the continuation of the remarkable prosperity which the circuit has enjoyed up to date.

Washburn Heads New Pathe List

"The Ghost of the Rancho" Set for Release on August 11 in Five Reels—Rhea Mitchell Feminine Lead

PATHE announces another Bryant Washburn picture as the leading feature on its regular program to be released August 11.

"The Ghost of the Rancho" is a five-part comedy drama and Washburn has Rhea Mitchell as leading woman.

Bryant Washburn, who will be remembered for his performance in "Skinner's Dress Suit," "Skinner's Baby," "Twenty-One" and "Kidder & Ko," plays the role of a scion of a wealthy family who has paid a whole lot more attention to the cabarets and such gaieties of life than he has to the moot problem of getting on in the world in the usual way.

There are said to be complications of an exciting character which center about a murder in which a gang of bad men from the Mexican border have a hand.

The young hero sets out to capture this gang single-handed and succeeds with the help of his sweetheart and the ghost.

"Of course," said Pathe, "if you are one of those material-minded persons who insist that there are no ghosts, we can only recommend you to the picture which shows Mr. Ghost in a variety of convincing postures to say nothing of close-ups and swift action shots."

The comedy element of the bill is supplied by Toto and Clarine Seymour in "Do Husbands Deceive?"

The Official War Review which comprises government battlefield pictures from America, British, French and Italian cinematographers at the front, the Post Travel Series, dealing with "La Guira to Caracas" and semi-weekly issues of the Hearst-Pathe News, complete this program

Hodkinson Pictures Play Cleveland

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, distributor of Paralta, Plaza and Douglas Natural Color pictures, had a banner showing in Cleveland, Ohio, the week of July 21. Paralta plays ran a week in three theatres.

The Standard theatre, a downtown house, played Louise Glaum in "Shackled." The Metropolitan theatre, with a very large seating capacity, found that J Warren Kerrigan is proving a drawing card. The feature was "One Dollar Bid." At the Knickerbocker theatre Bessie Barriscale did well in "Patriotism."

The Metropolitan and Knickerbocker theatres, both under one management, are neighborhood houses.

Fox Studios Work on Five Productions

WITH four plays just completed, William Fox has five more productions in work at the Fox studios in the East and in California.

At Hollywood, Cal., Tom Mix is entering the third week of his production, "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.", which is described in advices to the Fox Film Corporation from the William Fox West Coast studios as being the best picture Mix has yet enacted.

J. Gordon Edwards, directing the superproduction, "The She-Devil," has entered the third week on the play, and William Farnum and his company under the direction of Frank Lloyd, are in the Grand Canyon, Cal., working on "The Rainbow Trail," the Zane Grey novel which is a sequel to "Riders of the Purple Sage."

In the East, Peggy Hyland, under the direction of Harry Millarde, is still at work on "Bonnie Annie Laurie," a story of Scotland and the great war, written by Hamilton Thompson. This picture is being filmed at Newdorp, Staten Island. Virginia Pearson, under the direction of Edmund Lawrence, is nearing the finish of "The Liar" at the Blackton studio in Brooklyn.

George Walsh has completed "Under the Yankee Flag," described as a "breezy story of love, adventure and war," and Gladys Brockwell, under the direction of Edward LeSaint, has completed "Kultur." This picture, which reveals the German secret intrigues which caused the war, has been shipped East from the Hollywood studios. The other William Fox production just completed is "Lawless Love," which was done by Jewel Carmen under the direction of Robert Thornby.

Metro Stars Hamilton in "The Tightwad"

MAXWELL KARGER, Metro's eastern manager of productions, has secured as the initial screen starring subject for Hale Hamilton, "The Tightwad," written by Izola Forrester and Mann Page.

"The Tightwad" is said to give Hale Hamilton an even greater opportunity for the display of artistry as a comedian than did "Get Rich Quick Wallingford."

Hale Hamilton's director, appointed by Mr. Karger, manager of Metro's Eastern studios, is Ralph W. Ince, who has completed "Our Mrs. McChesney," Ethel Barrymore's latest photoplay. In fact, immediately upon the filming of its final scenes, Mr. Ince begins work on the opening scenes of "The Tightwad."

Lucille Lee Stewart will be Mr. Hamilton's leading woman. Miss Stewart, who in private life is Mrs. Ralph Ince, is the Vera, "the chorus lady," of Ethel Barrymore's "Our Mrs. McChesney," and just before coming to Metro, starred in "The Eleventh Commandment."

Miss Stewart is the sister of Anita Stewart, the Vitagraph star. Among her best known pictures are "The Destroyers," "The Conflict," "His Wife's Good Name," "The Ninety and Nine," etc.

In "The Tightwad" Miss Stewart will have another splendid role, and incidentally, an opportunity to display some particularly smart frocks.

World Starts Work on "The Bluffer"

Clara Beranger's picture play, "The Bluffer," was put in work this week at the World studio at Fort Lee. It will have an all-star cast, including June Elvidge, Irving Cummings, Frank Mayo, Muriel Ostriche, Tony Merlo and others, Travers Vale directing.

The story of "The Bluffer" briefly concerns a young lady who has always been led to believe that her father is a very wealthy man and discovers on the death of her parent that his estate consists wholly of debts. In order to retain her social position she thinks it is necessary for her to keep up the pretense of possessing great wealth. She is courted by a young man who thinks that if he can win her hand in marriage he will be abundantly supplied with funds. She thinks he is wealthy and marries him. Immediately after their marriage they both discover the truth, and this leads to a series of highly dramatic situations that also have a comedy flavor.

Paramount Stories Move Along Steadily

Marguerite Clark is soon to start work at the Fort Lee studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on her next picture for Paramount following "Out of a Clear Sky." The new production is announced as "The Three Bears," a comedy by Edward Childs Carpenter, author of "The Cinderella Man," which was presented during the past season on the stage of the Empire theatre with Ann Murdock in the leading role.

At the Fifty-Sixth street studio Director John Emerson is booming along with his production, "Come On In," the comedy which he and Anita Loos wrote and in which Shirley Mason and Ernest Truex are co-starred. This picture will be the first of the series of eight Paramount pictures in which Miss Mason will be seen during the coming year.

Los Angeles to Have War Exposition

The Motion Picture War Service Association has arranged with the Division of Films to bring a fourteen-car exhibit of French war relics to Los Angeles for an exposition to be held the second week in August. The exposition will occupy a ten-acre lot across from the Griffith studio where "Intolerance" was made. The ruins of the settings for that picture will be utilized and D. W. Griffith will stage a sham battle daily, using troops that are stationed at the coast training camps.

In this connection a big masked ball will be held on the evening of August 10.

"Vanity Pool" Starts

Mary MacLaren has begun work on her third Universal special production. It will be directed by Ida May Park, the feminine megaphone wielder, under the working title of "The Vanity Pool." The original story was written by Nalbro Bartley and appeared as a novelette.

Collins Reports Progress on Dana Subject

Director John H. Collins reports rapid progress on "Flower of the Dusk," Viola Dana's current starring vehicle, now being filmed under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Metro's manager of productions, at their Bronx studio. "Flower of the Dusk" is the second of Myrtle Reed's novels to have been secured by Metro for picturization, the first, "Weaver of Dreams," also for this star. Director John H. Collins has made the scenariozation in five acts and John Arnold has been selected as Miss Dana's cameraman.

In the prologue Viola Dana is Constance North, the mother when she was a young girl, and opposite her is Guy Coombs in the role of Lawrence Austin, whose love for her, as her's for him, is the great joy, and at the same time sorrow, of her life.

In the play the cast is as follows: Viola Dana is the daughter, Barbara North, while her father, Ambrose North, is played by Howard Hall. Roger Austin, Lawrence's son, who is in love with Barbara, is portrayed by Jack McGowan. Miss Milford is again seen as Mattie Austin, the aunt, who, unknown to anyone, has all these years secretly loved Barbara's father, Ambrose North, and Miriam is played by Margaret McWade.

"Unbeliever" Wins Enthusiasm of Workers

George Kleine's patriotic picture, "The Unbeliever," was shown recently to the employees of the U. S. Government Explosives Plant "C" at Nitro, West Virginia, and aroused the workers to a high pitch of enthusiasm.

David C. Bayless, secretary of the Y. M. C. A., under whose auspices the picture was exhibited, said to Mr. Kleine, "I consider this film one of the most instructive, loyalty inspiring and true depictions of the present world conflict that I have ever seen. Running through it all is the Truth with a strong moral pointing to the correlation of faiths, sects and creeds. It has my hearty commendation."

Laemmle Accents Open Summer

Answers Exhibitor That His Business Is a State of Mind—Makes Plea to Stick to Ship

IN line with his recent message to every exhibitor in the United States on the absolute necessity, from the standpoint of sheer patriotism, of keeping the theatres open throughout the summer, Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has made public a second letter said to have been sent to an exhibitor.

This exhibitor, who owns a theatre in one of the smaller Kansas towns, took issue with Mr. Laemmle's assertion, Universal declares, that the dog days are as full of profit possibilities as those of the cooler seasons.

"You're all wrong," wrote this theatre owner, whose name Universal withheld. "Neither you nor any other man can convince me that I can make money during the summer. I'd be tickled to death to keep my doors open because of the help it would enable me to give to the Government in the spreading of propaganda, but since I can't afford to lose money I've got to shut up shop during the eight weeks in July and August."

The answer sent by the head of the Universal organization said: "Some one said of a certain New York evening newspaper that it wasn't a newspaper at all: It was a state of mind. Well, that's just what the summer so-called dull season is—a state of mind," wrote Mr. Laemmle.

"There are, however, a number of exhibitors who have a deep-rooted idea that business in the summer drops off, because it always has dropped off. If you are one of those exhibitors, it probably always will drop off. That's your state of mind.

"You may be just waiting for a few continued days of hot weather to give you an excuse to close on the plea that you can't control the weather. If you are, just stop for a moment and ask yourself if it isn't your state of mind that's eating you. We've got to have hot weather. And when you come to think of it, it is not so terrible after all.

"Get into the proper state of mind and there won't be any dull season for you. The other fellow will enjoy the dull season all alone. And in the meantime you ought to be able to cinch the business of your town so that when he attempts to start all over again in the fall he'll wish he'd put it off till after the war.

"Try it on, and see for yourself."

Lois Weber's Lucrative Production, "Scandal," Is Being Reissued by Universal, under the Title, "Scandal Mongers"

General Issues Program Series of Slides

GENERAL FILM COMPANY has begun what is said to be the first distribution of a program service of slides for motion picture houses. The title of this service is "Bill's Budget," and it is now in its fourth week. The territory covered at this time by the "Bill's Budget" distribution comprises nine exchanges east of the Mississippi River, and is to be extended as the demand for "Bill's Budget" increases.

The weekly release of "Bill's Budget" is twelve different slides each carrying a pithy joke or epigram. These slides are interpolated through the house program at the theatre manager's judgment, and at the end of their run are returned to the General Film Exchange, the service being on rental basis.

So far two different alternative styles of "Bill's Budget" are being provided, one being devoted to miscellaneous topics and the other concentrating upon one subject and forming a sort of monologue.

Comic slides of several brands have proven popular locally in one or two eastern cities, and General Film is giving "Bill's Budget" a chance to show what it can do in wide distribution. The exchanges covered are New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Cincinnati, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago and Buffalo.

Campeau Plans Touring Company of Players

Frank Campeau, the villain in Douglas Fairbanks Artcraft pictures, plans a company of famous screen people to take "The Virginian" on tour of the country for the benefit of a patriotic war charity. Campeau created the part of "Trampus" in the same play, and has staged it for numerous stock companies. Campeau has already talked with Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum, Winifred Kingston, George Fawcett, Ruth Allen and Tully Marshall, who have consented to take part in these benefit performances, that will stretch over a period of two months. It is the intention of this troupe to play one-night stands at every stop cross country with the exception of Los Angeles, Chicago and New York, where they will play one-week engagements.

Goldwyn Arranges Canadian Distribution

Goldwyn Pictures distribution for the Dominion of Canada for a period of years will be in the hands of J. J. and Jule Allen, the largest exhibitors and distributors in the Dominion. This announcement follows the signing of a contract this week between Goldwyn through Samuel Goldfish, its president, and J. J. Allen, of Toronto.

Distributing offices are maintained in Toronto, Montreal, St. John, N. B., Calgary, Winnipeg, and Vancouver, B. C.

"I feel that Goldwyn is obtaining through the Messrs. Allen the finest and mose representative distribution that could be obtained in Canada," said Samuel Goldfish. "I feel that the Allens are, by all odds, the ablest picture men in Canada and that the contract I have just negotiated with them is the most important ever made by Goldwyn beyond the borders of the United States.

"Goldwyn Star Series productions will be widely advertised and exploited both before and after our first fall release in Canada, and as a result of this Canadian exhibitors will find that the box-office values of our pictures will be greatly intensified."

Carolina White Signs for Caruso Feature

Carolina White, of the opera and concert stage, has been engaged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to appear opposite Enrico Caruso, the tenor, in his initial Artcraft picture, work on which will be commenced in one of the Eastern studios shortly, the organization announces.

The work of staging the first Caruso-Artcraft picture will be in the hands of Edward Jose, numbered among the most capable directors in the Famous Players-Lasky organization. Among the Paramount pictures directed by Mr. Jose are the Lina Cavalieri films, "A Woman of Impulse" and "Love's Conquest," and the Pauline Frederick pictures, "Fedora" and "Resurrection."

The initial plans for the production of Mr. Caruso's film story are said to be now well under way. Considerable enthusiasm has been aroused among the executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation over the idea on which this story is based.

Betzwood Prepares Its First Release

The Betzwood Film Company, of Betzwood, Pa., announce that its initial release, "When East Meets West," will be ready shortly for bookings. This picture stars Lady Tsen Mei, Chinese artiste, in whom the Betzwood organization believes exhibitors will find a box-office value of extraordinary strength. In the cast are Robert Elliott, Benjamin Hendricks, Jr., Herbert Horton Pattee, Neil Moran and six Chinese players in addition to the star.

The story of "When East Meets West" is by J. Allan Dunn, with scenario by Russel E. Smith. Davide Calcagni did the camera work, and William Cooper had charge of the printing, which was done at the company's plant.

In the Bennison film will be Virginia Lee, Echlin Gayer, Elphonse Ethier, Herbert Pattee, Phil Sanford, Andrew Bennison, Lucy Beaumont, and Naudia Gary.

"Salome" Bookings Gain Ground Rapidly

The ruled chart in the offices of Samuel F. Kingston of the Fox organization, whereon are noted the bookings of "Salome," is fairly sprouting datings. Front-line trenches now bisect the Middle West, and one shoot in the ever-spreading drive has already penetrated to Seattle. The enveloping movement now in process of formation will effectually pinch off the Southwest.

Dates already set for primary offerings of the new drama include such diverse centers as Boston, Kansas City and Seattle.

With the routing of the various editions of the picture play begun only recently already nine cities of prime importance geographically and numerically have been booked for engagements of a week upward.

Blackton Names New Production

"The Common Cause" Will Star Sylvia Breamer, Herbert Rawlinson and Huntley Gordon—Recruiting Commission Co-operates

COMMODORE J. STUART BLACKTON has announced definite decisions on two details of the propaganda picture, elaborated from a popular play, which he has been commissioned to put on celluloid under the auspices of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission and with the co-operation of our Government.

Instead of the title of "Getting Together," previously announced, Mr. Blackton and officials of the British-Canadian Recruiting Mission have decided to name the film production "The Common Cause." This expressive phrase is believed to be a more significant title for the story which the photoplay will reveal and one which will typify its purpose, not only as screen entertainment but to present the common cause of all the allies, for which recruiting work is so readily carried on.

Secondly, having decided to present a trio of stars, instead of but one, inasmuch as the play offers three big stellar roles, Commodore Blackton has engaged Sylvia Breamer, Herbert Rawlinson, and Huntley Gordon for the featured list. After careful consideration and negotiations with various players, this trio was signed by the Commodore as being not only most capable but true types for the roles they are to portray in his recruiting special.

Having engaged his stellar players and those of the cast concerned in the first scenes, Commodore J. Stuart Blackton will begin actual production work Monday of next week.

He has arranged his schedule to take a number of exteriors first, and for this work will use a part of the Vitagraph studios in Brooklyn. Some of the interior sets are also being constructed in the Vitagraph studios, though the majority of the interiors will be made in his own studios, also in Brooklyn, which he again takes over next month. Mr. Blackton rented the Blackton Productions studios to William Fox while he was filming his Paramount series in California, and as Mr. Fox's tenancy of the plant expires next month, Mr. Blackton will then take possession for his production of "The Common Cause" and also for the other features he has underlined.

Sylvia Breamer, who is said to be one of the featured players, is expected to arrive from the Coast on Monday ready to start work in "The Common Cause." Miss Breamer will be remembered particularly for her splendid work under Commodore Blackton's direction as the heroine of "Missing." Herbert Rawlinson and Huntley Gordon, the other two stars, are already in New York. Jack Martin is assisting Commodore Blackton in the direction.

Select Holds "Savage Woman" on Program

THE Select Pictures Corporation announced this week that it wishes to deny officially the persistent rumors which have been in circulation to the effect that Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming production, "The Savage Woman," would be treated as a "special" and released on the open market, at prices far in advance of those called for in the existing contracts for Clara Kimball Yonng's series of Select Pictures.

Clara Kimball Young Wears a Semi-Cleopatra Costume in "The Savage Woman," Her Next Select Picture

The announcement said: "It is true that the Select Company could secure a tremendously increased financial return from the marketing of 'The Savage Woman' as a separate picture at top prices, such as could be secured for a production of this magnitude, and it is also true that representations have come from many quarters requesting that the picture be thus handled. These requests, naturally, come from exhibitors who are not holders of Clara Kimball Young series contracts, and who would be very glad to pay a good stiff price in order to cut in on their opposition and secure "The Savage Woman" for their theatres.

"If the Select Company were looking only to the monetary return there would be little to the argument in opposition to such a course. But the Select officials are looking further than the rich bag which they could make from the marketing of 'The Savage Woman' as a special production. They have decided positively against thus exploiting the picture. 'The Savage Woman' will be treated in every respect as one of the Clara Kimball Young series of Select Pictures. It will be available only to holders of Clara Kimball Young series contracts, and it will be released to such contract holders in the usual manner and at stated contract prices."

"Yellow Dog" Gains Publicity

Jewel Conducts Campaign Through Clubs of Country and Gains Ground at Every Point—Picture Well Advertised

THE drive against the Yellow Dogs that harass the Government conducted by the Jewel Productions, Inc., under the auspices of Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs throughout the United States, is on in real earnest. It is reported from the National Headquarters of the Anti-Yellow Dog Club in New York City, that approximately a million boys between the ages of ten and twenty years have already been enrolled in squads of Boy Detectives and supplied with membership cards and all the necessary literature to carry on the campaign.

A badge designed for the leaders of the Boy Detectives will be issued within the next few days and then visible evidence will be had of the spread of the movement.

The idea suggested by Henry Irving Dodge in his story, "The Yellow Dog," has not only been taken up by the boys of the country but by big organizations of men and women in all parts of America. The largest of these is the Associated Ad. Men's Clubs and the Rotary Club. Both of these organizations have formed subsidiary clubs known as the Yellow Dog Clubbers' Club. They have issued membership cards on which Mr. Dodge's rules defining the Yellow Dog have been revamped to read as the "Ten Commandments" of the Yellow Dog Clubbers' Club. They have also issued a button picturing a yellow dog in full flight followed by a tin can and a club. These cards and buttons have been supplied to all members of the Ad. Men's Clubs and to the different branches of the Rotary Club.

In addition to these national organizations, the drive on the Yellow Dog is being conducted along the lines devised by Mr. Dodge in nearly every city in the country under the direction of patriotic societies or public spirited private individuals. In Dallas, Texas, the Dallas Dispatch is recruiting the boys of that city and at latest reports most of the youths of Dallas have been enrolled.

Anti-Yellow Dog Badge

In the Middle West, Masonic bodies headed by the High Twelve Club of Danville, Illinois, have joined the movement in an association known as the Yellow Dog Catchers' Association. This association has issued a "report card" to its members on which the definitions of yellow dogism have been condensed and arranged so that each Yellow Dog met by a member of the "Catchers' Association" can be reported to the club and the nature of his offense recorded.

In the South, the Kiwanis Club of Nashville, an organization found in the front rank of all war work, is conducting the campaign against the yellow dogs in their section, while in the far west, the Express-Tribune of Los Angeles is waging an active campaign that is radiating to every point on the Pacific Coast.

Universal Bares Problems to Exhibitors

A CAMPAIGN, nation-wide in scope, and having for its express purpose the enlightenment of the exhibitor to a realization of the problems which confront the organization which produces and releases the subjects he uses, is about to be initiated by the Universal Film Manufacturinng Company.

Universal's idea is, frankly, to get into even closer touch with the exhibitors than it has hitherto been. Believing that the time has come when both producer and exhibitor should get together and share each other's problems and for mutual benefit generally, this organization is now putting the final touches to the campaign which it believes will help bring this about.

To this end, Harry Levey, Manager of the Industrial Department of Universal, was recently instructed by Carl Laemmle to prepare a film which would place before the exhibitors in every community in the land, the story of the whys and wherefores back of the company's product. Every phase of the producing and releasing ends of the moving picture industry will be filmed and in this manner the exhibitor will be given an opportunity such as he has never had before of seeing for himself the inside of the manufacturer's business.

Starting with the purchase of the original story, the picture shows how it is whipped into scenario form. Then comes the planning and the building of the interiors; the construction of props and the making of wardrobes. Follows the actual filming of the production at Universal City and the touches given it before it is shipped to New York, where the final Okeh is given it.

Seyffertitz Changes Name to Clonebaugh

Gustav Seyffertitz, one of the better known actors in the Famous Players-Lasky roster and who is also a director, has decided to adopt a new name for professional purposes. He will hereafter be known as G. Butler Clonebaugh, his mother's maiden name.

Farrar Company Goes to Wyoming

Geraldine Farrar, Goldwyn star, and her company have gone to Wyoming, via Chicago, where they will remain "on location" for about three weeks. On the way to Chicago Miss Farrar viewed her first Goldwyn picture, "The Turn of the Wheel," completed only a few hours before her departure for Wyoming. It was shown in her drawing room on the train.

In the Farrar party, besides the star and her husband, are Reginald Barker, her director; Percy Hilburn, her cameraman, and W. Barbarin Laub, his assistant; Norbert Lusk, of Goldwyn's publicity department; George Russell, chief property man, and his assistant, Robert Gottlieb; Evelyn Axzell, the only woman member of the company taken from New York, and Richard Turner, W. W. Black, Frank Montgomery, William Trow, William Gibbons, and Harry Lee, actors.

Ben Schoenfein, who will act as business manager of the company on location, preceded the main party a day, and Harry Schenck, Mr. Barker's assistant, will have been on the ground several days when the star and her director arrive.

At Cody, Miss Farrar was joined by her new leading man, Milton Sills, and by Thomas Santschi, who will have another important role in "The Hell Cat."

Two Features Finished

Charles Ray has finished the production of "String Beans" at the Thomas H. Ince studio at Hollywood and is now about to start on his next picture, the title or nature of which has not yet been announced.

Enid Bennett has just finished her latest Paramount picture, which has the working title of "The Pawn," and has started work on the C. Gardner Sullivan film which was held over pending the completion of this offering.

"Eight Bells" from World August 19

The announcement made by World Pictures that it will release on August 19 Byrne Brothers' nationally known "Eight Bells," the comedy that made millions laugh, recalls the original source not alone of this attraction but also of Hanlon's "Superba" and "The Devil's Auction."

Early in the fifteenth century traveling companies of actors in Italy went from town to town and in the market squares presented comedy entertainments known as harlequinades. In course of time these shows were enlarged and became the forerunner of the modern circus. In France pantomime was fostered by the Government, and the acrobats, who were the principal strength of these entertainments, were compelled to also speak lines and sing. Thus came about the comedies such as "Eight Bells." The first of such shows were given in New York even before the Revolution and during the early part of the nineteenth century, especially down South, strolling players went from village to village, gypsy fashion, in their own vehicles and gave their comedies.

Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman Are Starred in Vitagraph's Blue Ribbon Feature, "A Gentleman's Agreement"

Paramount Predicts Praise for Burke Film

When "In Pursuit of Polly," Billie Burke's newest Paramount picture, is released August 19, it is confidently predicted by the producers that the universal verdict, regardless of the praise which is bound to be bestowed upon the star, Director Chet. Withey and the members of the cast, will be that a rattling good as well as an unusual story has been filmed.

Izola Forrester and Mann Page wrote "In Pursuit of Polly," and as a combination of the desirable elements of mystery, romance, suspense and rapid action it promises to take rank with the best of Paramount productions of recent years.

Thomas Meighan is cast in the leading male role of the fellow who eventually wins out, and the supporting cast includes Alfred Hickman, A. J. Herbert, Frank Losee, William Davidson, and Ben Deely. Most of the exteriors were filmed at Oyster Bay.

Cecil B. De Mille, D. W. Griffith and Thomas H. Ince, Who Produce for the Artcraft Program

"False Faces" Gets Place as Special Release

As one of its special releases during the coming year, starting Sept. 1, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation will offer to exhibitors Louis Joseph Vance's story, "False Faces." This subject will be produced by Thomas H. Ince.

Henry B. Walthall has been engaged by Mr. Ince to star in "False Faces." Walthall's latest screen work will soon be viewed in D. W. Griffith's first Artcraft picture, "The Great Love." That the Vance subject will be one of the greatest, if not the greatest achievement of Mr. Ince is promised by the distributors.

The screen version of "False Faces" will be prepared by J. G. Hawks. The main plot deals with the establishment somewhere near Martha's Vineyard of a U-boat base and the destruction thereof through the chance intervention of the French ex-criminal now virtually a secret agent. A lovely girl is an apparent intrigante but in reality is also connected with governmental work and the result is the foiling of the plans of the Huns in America.

Among the thrills which are promised in "False Faces" will be a scene showing the hero being picked up at sea by an attacking German submarine and later a fight staged on the roof of one of New York's hotels.

Powell Directs Carmel Myers Subject

"The Duchess of Dark Entry" is the working title of the next photodrama in which Carmel Myers will start work soon at the Bluebird West Coast studios. Paul Powell will direct the picture. The story was written by Perley Poore Sheehan, and the continuity is being prepared by Hope Loring. Sheehan collaborated with Robert H. Davis on the story of "The Bugler of Algiers," later called "We Are French."

Concerning "The Great Love"

Motion Picture News Presents First Synopsis of Griffith's First Artcraft—All Star Cast and Notables Seen

"THE GREAT LOVE," the initial David W. Griffith production of the Artcraft program and that master's first program release in four years, is practically ready for release. Special correspondence from Los Angeles enables MOTION PICTURE NEWS to give the first publication of the synopsis of this important release.

Included in the cast of "The Great Love" are Robert Harron, Henry B. Walthall, Goria Hope, Lillian Gish, Maxfield Stanley, George Fawcett, Rosemary Theby, and George Siegman. Among the notable persons seen in the course of the action, who gave their services on behalf of war charities, are Queen Alexandra of England, Lady Diana Manners, Princess of Monaco, Elizabeth Asquith, Countess of Drogheda, Countess of Massarene, Honorable Mrs. Montague, Miss Violet Kappel, Miss Bettina Stuart Wortley, Lady Lavery.

The synopsis of the picture, as issued by the Griffith offices to MOTION PICTURE NEWS representative, follows:

In Youngstown, Pennsylvania, James Young, a bank clerk, doubled up his morning paper and threw it on the desk of his employer. He then reached for his hat and coat, drew on the one, crammed down the other, and with the statement that he was going to join the British army, went out and slammed the door.

The president of the bank regained his breath and picked up the paper, reading the first authentic report of the Prussian march of death through Belgium. It was not very interesting to him, however, as he was concerned more with the price of war babies.

In a house in Pump Lane, London, the Reverend Josephus Broadplains sipped his tea and dwelt at length upon his coming book, "The Evils of Divorce," then in the course of preparation.

His son, John, dawdled in an easy chair and felt a keen concern regarding the exactness of the manicure he had that day acquired.

In the same house, Alice Susanna Broadplains, the unsophisticated daughter of the ambitious clergyman, watched her pretty face in a hand mirror while deciding that the ways of Isidora Duncan held the charm supreme in feminine achievement.

In a village by the sea, Giovanni Allighieri, Count of Monte Leone, Baron of San Marino, whose home was in another house along Pump Lane, found it convenient, for the time, to take a brief sojourn from the too close proximity to Scotland Yard. It suited him also to take the trusting heart of Jessie Holloway, a trusting little country lass, and play with it as fitted his philandering, sensuous fancy.

And in the due course of time, James Young, of Youngstown, arrived in London, his address the Canadian training camp. The roll of privates would have shown him to be British subject, for the editor of the great white book of truth can not write every little detail on its pages.

Fate and a twelve hour leave of absence brought James Young, of Youngstown to the end of old Pump Lane, where some pretty flowers in the front yard of the Broadplains turned his eyes toward young Susie, and she was looking right straight at him.

Outside the house, James Young of Youngstown stalled for time and wondered how to get acquainted. Inside the house, Alice Sussanna Broadplains rehearsed her Isidora Duncan and planned her campaign of attack.

It ended happily, with Jim in the possession of a flower and the promise of another walk tomorrow, together with a memory of a visit to the pump, and a recollection that the Reverend Josephus was never more than three feet behind them. Susie went to sleep in the restful assurance that she had met her first Adonis and that he was hers to command.

The baron's stay in the seaside village came to an end with a letter assuring him that London was again a safe place in which to live, so he cast aside the heart of Jessie Holloway for new and brighter toys.

His return to London and Pump Lane called for the meeting of a coterie of "Pacifists" and Bolsheviki, souls out of tune with the things as they were, led into intricacies and intrigues by Mr. Seymour, of Brazil, formerly of Berlin, and one of the most ardent of "Pacifists." Among them, too, was Mlle. Gabrielle, a dancer, on whose graceful figure the amourous eyes of the baron found joy in feasting. The pacifists sought plans to end the war.

James Young, of Youngstown, found the road between the camp and Pump Lane not hard to travel.

But war is war and love is love and the next day James Young, of Youngstown left for France on thirty minutes warning.

The baron, his purse deleted by this or that drain caused by his own insatiable desires, began to look for fertile fields of conquest. And at the same time, Susie's aunt in Australia died and left her £20,000. The baron became a caller at the Broadplains' and with the assistance of the Reverend Josephus and brother John, became a suitor for the hand of Susie. The latter still thought of her soldier lover, the very first she had ever had, and there was little progress in the efforts of the baron.

But Jim came back from France at the wrong time. The changing fortunes of the Broadplains had brought many visitors, and Jim arrived in the middle of a tea served to a class with whom he had never been associated.

Susie received him graciously, poured his tea, and asked to be excused just for a moment. The moment turned to minutes as the Reverend Josephus and brother John connived to end the romance. And Jim, after setting a record for all time as a tea drinker, took his cap and stick and left the house.

Believing that she had wilfully misled him, he planned an attack on jealousy, by making violent love to a strange girl in the park, while the misused Susie looked on from behind a bush, some few yards distant.

She cried a little bit that night and wondered if all men were such faithless wretches. But love was young, and neither of them felt the longing to bring life to a sudden end. So Jim returned to France, and Susie—well, Susie accepted the proposal of the baron and they were married two days later, the baron leaving for France "on urgent business" fifteen minutes after the ceremony.

The tortured little soul of Jessie Holloway found solace in the thought that somewhere in London she would find her lover and that he would make things right when he were told the condition that existed. But the baron sent her away from his wedding festivities with an aching heart and doubts that God still reigned upon the throne of heaven.

Mlle. Gabrielle found it convenient to be in France at the same time the baron arrived in Paris, and he became a little deeper involved in the intrigues that menaced England.

With her nameless baby in her arms, Jessie Holloway told the story of the baron to the girl who was his wife by ceremony. In Paris, the baron sought to charm Mlle. Gabrielle. But she, under the orders from the leader of the Pacifists, returned to London.

In the trenches, James Young of Youngstown, felt the pain of German shrapnel and he was invalided back to England.

Queen Alexandra, the great sweet soul of England, found him in a courtyard and whispered words of encouragement. James Young of Youngstown began a speedy recovery.

On leave from the hospital and with the stripes of a commission sewed upon his shoulders, Jim once more essayed a visit to Pump Lane, just a little sheepish over the way he had acted, and with the insistent memory of a face that had turned away to hide a tear. He rang the door bell at the Broadplains' home and asked for Susie.

She received him in the parlor, sympathized with him for his wounded arm and hoped he might get well at once. But the arm was a small thing to the soldier, who began to pour out the contents of his heart to the girl he wanted more than anything else on earth. She stopped her ears and asked him if he did not know that she was married. The castle of his dreams came down to crush the hopes of happiness.

In the hours that followed, Susanna, Countess of Monte Leon and Baroness of San Marino, found that her heart lay far from the words she had spoken at the altar. She sought her father for advice.

The author of "The Evils of Divorce" convinced her that there would be no such proceedings in his family, but he left to make an investigation of the case of Jessie Holloway.

There are those who have that which they cannot love and love that which they cannot have, and Susie was one of this great class that knows the bitter taste of love unsatisfied.

In her locked room as a dungeon, she fought for hope when hope seemed dead, and crying out her heart in prayers for him she now knew that she loved, spent hours in the agony of soul that Fate deals mercilessly.

And then there came the baron, mad with unsatisfied desires, to claim his wife, whom he had left within the hour of his marriage. Struggling to force his attentions on her, and meeting the response of one who would rather die than give her soul to one she neither loves nor respects, he left her swooning and returned to his apartments.

That night the Prussian militant again demonstrated his ability to kill innocent children and unprotected mothers, and among those for whom he shall some day atone were Jessie Holloway and the little child who knew no name save that of its mother, gone to meet Him who promised light along the pathway to the gate of heaven.

The success of the raid spurred Potsdam on to greater efforts and the leader of the Pacifists received orders to guide a fleet of raiding zeppelins to the Worlich arsenal, the great munitions plant of England, where thousands of women are today employed in the effort to save the world from Prussian domination.

The plans were laid, but just before the fall of darkness, Scotland Yard stepped in, and those

Complete Musical Score for Perret Picture

LEONCE PERRET, whose first independent production, "Lafayette, We Come," a patriotic drama, is now nearing completion, announces that Boosey and Company, music publishers, has prepared a complete orchestration, musical score and setting to accompany the showing of this picture. He also announces that the publishers are negotiating with John McCormick, Irish tenor, to include the song, "Lafayette, We Come," in his repertoire of war songs. More than fifteen thousand copies will be issued to the exhibitors throughout the country.

M. Perret states that as a result of his announcement that his first independent production has as its title General Pershing's first words at the tomb of Lafayette in France, he has received letters from all parts of the country, commending him on the selection of the title and suggesting that Lafayette clubs be formed. The Lafayette League, New York, informs M. Perret that he has been elected an honorary member of the league.

M. Perret will be remembered for his directorial work in connection with the creation of "The Million Dollar Dollies," featuring the Dolly sisters; "Lest We Forget," featuring Rita Jolivet; "The Mad Lover," "The Accidental Honeymoon" and "The Silent Master," featuring Robert Warwick. His latest "Lafayette, We Come," will be given a formal showing soon.

"Her Only Way" Nears Its Final Stages

NORMA TALMADGE and Director S. A. Franklin will this week begin work on the concluding scenes of Miss Talmadge's forthcoming Select Picture, "Her Only Way," with which she will follow "The Safety Curtain."

Following the precedent long since established in staging big scenes in Norma Talmadge productions, the Select star and her director have for the last three weeks been attentive spectators at sessions of the Tombs Court and other courtrooms in New York, in order to make a faithful reproduction for the big courtroom scene in "Her Only Way."

The almost daily appearance of Miss Talmadge and Director Franklin in the courtrooms of New York might have intimated that the famous moving picture star was contemplating a divorce, an inference which, in a measure, was true, but the divorce will take place only in the picture, and it was for the purpose of obtaining local color and detail that Miss Talmadge and her director attended the court sessions.

One of the moments of greatest importance in Miss Talmadge's new picture occurs in the crowded room of a New York divorce court. Hundreds of extra people have been required to provide a realistic setting and as the majority of extras are used to represent New York society people, unusual care was taken in their selection. Several of the more important characters are played by people who are well known to the moving picture public.

Broadway Run Extended

M. Kashin, the manager of the Broadway theatre, New York, has arranged with Metro Pictures Corporation to extend indefinitely the engagement of Screen Classics, Inc.'s seven-part super-feature, "To Hell with the Kaiser," in which Lawrence Grant is featured as the Kaiser and Olive Tell plays the American heroine.

This will make the second time that the engagementt of his picture has been extended at the Broadway. It opened originally for a limited engagement, but the management obtained an extension.

Wright Scenario Chief

During the absence of M. Ramirez Torres, chief of the scenario department of Pathe, in California, William Lord Wright is in charge of that department, paying special attention to "Hands Up," the Pathe serial in which Ruth Roland stars.

Doris Kenyon's Second Picture Completed

"THE INN OF THE BLUE MOON," the second picture produced by Doris Kenyon at the head of her own company, De Luxe Pictures, Inc., was completed this week and will be released in August. The De Luxe pictures, as well as those produced by Frank A. Keeney and Harold J. Binney, are being distributed through the William L. Sherry Service.

"The Inn of the Blue Moon" is a romantic love story, written for Miss Kenyon by Louis Joseph Vance. The fictional rights have been sold to a leading American magazine. The story tells of Justus Druce, a wealthy New Yorker, who separates from his wife without a divorce when their twin daughters, Justine and Dorothy, are two years old. The father keeps Justine and the mother Dorothy. Mrs. Druce goes to a farm in the Catskills, where she leads a solitary existence and rears Dorothy as a child of nature.

Sixteen years later Dorothy is a beautiful young girl, her only companions being farm animals and domestic pets. She has built on an island in a lake a little sanctuary which she calls "The Inn of the Blue Moon." Justine is a New York society belle, surrounded by every luxury. After her engagement to Charlton Sloane is announced, her father discovers he is a bankrupt. In his desperation he appeals to his discarded wife for money to provide a marriage settlement for Justine. Justine learns of her father's plight and secretly gives the family jewels, her only dowry left, to Sloane, asking him to pawn them to help her father out of his trouble. A niece of Justus, Adelaide Druce, sees Justine give the jewels to Sloane. She, too, is in love with Sloane, and in revenge for losing him manufactures evidence which convinces Justus that Sloane has stolen the jewels. Sloane is arrested just as a letter from Mrs. Druce, refusing to give her husband money, falls into Justine's hands. The story then proceeds through a series of complications in which the remarkable resemblance of the twin sisters leads to numerous instances of mistaken identity.

Educational Announces Late Releases

Educational's releases for the week of July 29 are "Necaxa, the Power House of Mexico" (Wright's Mexico Today) and the International's Happy Hooligan cartoon comedy, "His Dark Past." In the week of August 5 the Educational will release Robert C. Bruce's comedy scenic, "The Sudden Tourist," and the Happy Hooligan "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp!" In August announcement will be made of the names and release dates of several new series of short pictures. There will follow shortly thereafter the releases of the company's feature productions.

Vitagraph Signs Bessie Love as Star

Bessie Love, one of David W. Griffith's finds, has been signed as a star by Vitagraph. Albert E. Smith, president of the company, states that she has already begun preparations for her first picture, which will be made at the company's Hollywood studio. She will be directed by David Smith.

President Smith states that Miss Love will appear in Blue Ribbon features exclusively, the first of which will be released early in November. He says that he plans to buy only stories and plays which he considers suited to Miss Love's personality, and that her pictures will be given the most careful consideration from every standpoint. The productions, in short, will be commensurate with the importance and the popularity of the star, says the Vitagraph president.

Boston Ball Holds Up Vitagraph Feature

Completion of "The King of Diamonds," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, in which Harry Morey, with Betty Blythe, is working under the direction of Paul Scardon, was temporarily delayed when the star and his leading woman went to Boston to attend the ball of the national convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Mr. Morey and Miss Blythe, with Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres, were the stars sent by Vitagraph to represent the company at the Boston high jinks. They left on a special car of the Knickerbocker Limited, from Grand Central Terminal, New York, on Friday afternoon and returned to the city at midnight of the same day.

Ruby de Remer Engaged for Graphic Feature

Ruby de Remer, former star in the Ziegfeld Follies, and more recently seen in the silent drama, has been engaged by Ivan Abramson, director general, Graphic Film Corporation, for an important role in the Graphic feature, now under production, "Ashes of Love," featuring James K. Hackett. Others in the cast are Mabel Julienne Scott, Effie Shannon, Paula Shay, William Davidson and Hugh Thompson.

New Paralta Plays

Forthcoming Paralta Plays for distribution by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation are Louise Glaum in "A Law Unto Herself" and Bessie Barriscale in "The White Lie" and "The Heart of Rachel," the latter being adapted from Kathleen Norris's popular book. J. Warren Kerrigan will be presented in his first Jesse D. Hampton production, "The Swamper."

Miss Kenyon on Vacation

Doris Kenyon, star of the De Luxe Pictures Corporation's productions, having completed the second picture under the banner of her own company, left New York this week for a vacation in North Carolina.

Enid Bennett Is Star of "The Vamp," a Paramount Picture

Triangle Gets Praise from Trenches

Clear from the trenches in France comes an echo of Triangle pictures, which are "doing their bit" toward cheering the soldier boys in their leisure moments. The writer, Bogart Rogers, is a Hollywood boy, who has grown up in the "motion picture capital." To him the Triangle pictures, which are being furnished free from the London exchange, are like a letter from home, and he watches for familiar "locations" and faces he has seen in Southern California before becoming an air fighter.

Young Rogers' letter to Triangle says, in part: "A bunch of us flew over to the trench theatre the other evening and it reminded me of the good old Mason theatre in Los Angeles after the theatre is out. Each aviator was calling for his tender before taking to his plane for his homeward flight just like the auto starter calling out his numbers.

"We saw a very good Triangle picture—old Bill Desmond as a college boy. It was taken mostly in Los Angeles, and many of the 'locations' were like meeting old friends from home. There was also a Triangle comedy shown. The Expeditionary Force Canteen Cinema Supply uses Triangle films almost exclusively, and they are scoring a hit with the boys here."

Talmadge Feature Gets Definite Title

It has been decided to give the title of "Her Only Way" to the production on which Norma Talmadge is working, to be released by Select Pictures following her current attraction, "The Safety Curtain." "Her Only Way" is from the pen of George Scarborough, the playwright, and was prepared for the screen by Mary Murillo, scenario writer for the Norma Talmadge Film Corporation.

This is the picture upon which Director Sydney A. Franklin has been working for the past few weeks, and in which Miss Talmadge is supported by Eugene O'Brien, Jobyna Howland and Ramsey Wallace.

About New Pictures

The title of Tsen Mei's first release for the Betzwood Film Company has finally been decided on, and will be "When East Meets West." "Sandy Burke" is the second release of the company, starring Louis Bennison.

In one of the episodes of the Leah Baird serial being produced by the Western Photoplays, Inc., of which Jos. A. Golden and A. Alperstein are the executive heads, an incident is recorded before the camera, showing the head-on collision of two automobiles.

A murder mystery forms the basis of "The Goddess of Chance," which Virginia Pearson has started under the direction of Edmund Lawrence for William Fox at the Blackton Studios in Brooklyn. The play was written by Harry O. Hoyt.

"A King in Khaki," in which Harold Lockwood makes his initial bow as a star in the productions of Screen Classics, Inc., distributed by Metro, will be presented in six reels instead of five, the previously announced length of the subject.

Production on "The Yellow Dog," Henry Irving Dodge's subtle indictment of unconscious slackerism, which is being made into a big propaganda photoplay, is progressing speedily at Universal City. Director Colin Campbell brought his company back from San Francisco and Pleasanton last week.

Albert Hart, who claims to have played more pirates' roles on the legitimate stage than any other actor, is cast for his first pirate's role on the screen in the new World Picture, "Pirate's Gold," in which Montagu Love is starred.

William Farnum, the William Fox star, celebrated his birthday, July 4, in Hermit Creek Camp, Grand Canyon, Ariz., where he was at work on the picturization of Zane Grey's novel, "The Rainbow Trail," under the direction of Frank Lloyd.

No less than five Los Angeles newspaper representatives took part in the mob scenes in Douglas Fairbanks' "Bound in Morocco," and survived to write of their experiences.

A big ship fire scene will be one of the scenes in the next Alice Joyce picture, which is being directed by Tom Terriss. The story, which will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, is being made from an adaptation of "Brick Dust Row," by O. Henry.

As a story for the filming of her fourth Paralta picture, Louise Glaum has found one which is said to be her ideal film play. It is a drama laid in the Champagne district of France, with the war as a background, laid in three periods, each ten years apart. The story was written by Francis Paget.

"The Tears of the Angels"—what does that suggest to you? A number of things, perhaps, but Goldwyn says you will never guess its application to "Money Mad," newest of the Goldwyn Pictures in which Mae Marsh is soon to be seen.

Pathe announces this week that the title of the Elaine Hammerstein "special" to be released September 8, is "Her Man." This is the picture that was to have been released under the title of "The Woman Eternal."

So realistic was a fight which Victor Sutherland and Edward F. Roseman, members of the William Fox Company that staged "The Liar," starring Virginia Pearson, that Victor Sutherland is now going about in a surgeon's plaster, three of his ribs having been broken.

Toto, the Pathe-Rolin comedian, completed "The Great Water Peril," his newest one-reel comedy, in jig-time, and is now in vaudeville.

"The Bargain True," a "Saturday Evening Post" story by Nalbro Bartley, has been chosen as the next Universal starring subject for Ruth Clifford. Elsie Jane Wilson has been designated by Bluebird to direct Miss Clifford in this coming production.

In the role of Doris Morse, in "The Bonded Wife," Emmy Wehlen, tiring of the wealth of her father's home, and seeking to get away and lose herself in a happy-go-lucky crowd, unknown to any one, seeks a shore resort during the summer vacation period. Director Charles J. Brabin, therefore, selected Atlantic City as the locale.

One of the notable features of "The Prussian Cur," the William Fox dramatization of the German spy system in America, is said to be the fidelity to actual events which R. A. Walsh has observed throughout the picture.

Enrico Caruso, Whose Celebrated Voice Has Earned Him An Artcraft Contract

Famous Players Makes Haste with New Star

That within three months Lila Lee, the new Paramount star, who is now appearing in her first motion picture, "The Cruise of the Make-Believes," will be as well known as any star of the screen, is the promise of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"Within three months every man, woman and child in America will know who Lila Lee is, will know her story, will know what she is going to do in pictures," said one of the executives of the Famous Players-Lasky organization last week. "And not only will they know about her, but they will flock to the theatre that shows her photoplay. Over a dozen national magazines have already displayed her picture on the front cover, and last week her picture was on four different publications on the newsstands all over the country.

"A gigantic exploitation plans, details of which we are not in a position to give at this time, is now well under way for Miss Lee."

Gail Kane Completes First of New Series

Gail Kane has completed the first of her new series of productions for Mutual release under the title of "Love's Law," a story of life and love, and is at work on another not yet named.

The new Kane offering was written by Joseph F. Poland, the author of more than one hundred produced photoplays, who wrote the original "Stingaree" series, "Hesper of the Mountains," "The Cloud," "Patsy," and "Miss Nobody." The scenario was prepared by J. Clarkson Miller.

Included in the cast of "Loves Law" are Courtenay Foote, Reed Hamilton, Frederick Jones, who had an important role in "The Great Divide" and another in "The Girl Angle"; Mathilde Daring, who played the princess in "The Prince Chap" and Barbara in "East Lynne", and Emile La Croix, who was thirty-five years on the legitimate stage.

Efficiency, Goldwyn's First Watchword

EFFICIENCY, thoroughness and quality are the watchwords of Goldwyn Pictures' producing activities at its Fort Lee Studios, as is testified to by the personnel of the various departments which control the inner workings of this producing organization.

Goldwyn's producing and technical departments are directed by men whose accomplishments stand as the best proof of their ability to direct the destiny of their respective departments. The management of the Goldwyn studios is in charge of Abraham Lehr; Willard Mack, whose ability as a writer is voiced by some of the most successful photodramas that have appeared on the screen and one of the season's biggest hits in the spoken drama, "The Tiger Rose," is official editorial director for Goldwyn productions. To Mr. Mack falls the lot of selecting the stories for such stars as Geraldine Farrar, Pauline Frederick, Madge Kennedy, Mae Marsh, Tom Moore and Mabel Normand. His assistant in the scenario department is H. R. Durant, who prepares the continuity and supervises all the work in conjunction with the plays and stories submitted for the approval of the Goldwyn company.

In charge of the art department is found Hugo Ballin, whose work begins with the first conference held by all department heads when a story is first considered for reproduction on the screen. Charles De Soria is found in charge of the electrical department, assisted by fifteen practical electricians. Edward Wortham superintends the work of the scene builders. Percy Hilburn is head cameraman, advising the photographers in regard to any difficulty they may experience in taking the scenes. Emmett Flynn and Robert Kern are the film editors. Paul Bern is cutter. Henry Eckman is cashier and Joseph Cohen looks after the transportation. All of these department heads confer jointly with Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, for final decisions.

"Uncle Tom's Cabin" Reaches the Screen

The Paramount picturization of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was released July 15 with Marguerite Clark in the roles of Little Eva and Topsy.

To film the various scenes with historical accuracy and fidelity of settings Director J. Searle Dawley took his company thousands of miles. Not to mention a brief trip to Maine, the nearest place where floating ice could be found at that time for the filming of Eliza's flight before the bloodhounds, the entire organization took a journey down the Mississippi, going to a point near the mouth of the river opposite New Orleans, where the scene showing the rescue from drowning of Little Eva by Uncle Tom was made.

Rothacker Scores Again

The Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, has scored again in the matter of printing. Not that all of the work turned out by the organization is not excellent, but now and then some is so exceptional as to cause unusual comment.

The following letter from the Petrova Picture Company to Mr. Rothacker is self-explanatory: "Permit me to congratulate your organization on the excellent work done in the printing of 'Tempered Steel,' our fourth Petrova production. This print is beautiful in its smoothness and contains many fine examples of the art of tinting and toning."

Universal Explains Nature of "Brass Bullet"

Word that exhibitors were inclined to regard the "Brass Bullet" as a war serial has led Universal to take prompt steps toward dissipating this idea. In a recent letter to the managers of his company's branches, Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer and general manager of exchanges, has cautioned them against allowing the reports already mentioned to go uncontradicted.

"We are so proud of the unusual merit of 'The Brass Bullet' that we don't for a minute want the exhibitors to get a wrong impression as to its nature," declared Mr. Brandt when seen at his office.

"That a report falsely termed our new serial a war film had been given credence by the trade was brought to my attention during the recent Universal Convention at Chicago. Needless to say, I have taken steps to stamp this report as absurd.

"'The Brass Bullet' has absolutely nothing to do with the war, and the title has application only to the mystery surrounding the shot which takes the life of Homer Joy, the crabbed old miser who endeavors to complicate his wife's will and divert the major portion of the fortune she left. The story is a mystery romance, pure and simple."

"Over the Top" Pleasing Them All

Reports from exhibitors throughout the country who have run "Over the Top," Vitagraph's special production featuring Sargent Arthur Guy Empey, author of the book from which the picture was adapted, indicate that this picture is a big success.

The manager of Andrews theatre, New Bethlehem, Pa., which ran "Over the Top" as a July 4th attraction, wrote: "We have played, during the past two years practically all the big productions that have been released, but none of them seemed to arouse the enthusiasm and please our patrons more than 'Over the Top.'"

B. F. Arroson, of Arroson & Browne, Raleigh, N. C., was among those was joined the "Over the Top" boosters last week. He wrote: "I want to say that we ran 'Over the Top' yesterday and broke all records for attendance for our theatre since we have been in the picture game."

ARTISTIC TITLING FACTOR IN SUCCESS OF SHORT SUBJECTS

A great deal has been said about film titling, "in features," and we understand that fabulous sums are paid those fortunate enough to have caught the trick of clever, original, and witty captions that help the story along.

But quite unobtrusively the man responsible for editing the "educational" has been trying his hand along new lines. Or shall we say that new hands have been brought to the work, as producers realize the growing importance and possibilities of this form of picture for entertainment purposes. The old form of title still lingers—the "label" that tells only what the spectator could see for himself, or the long, heavily worded paragraph conveying information that the theatre patron does not want and probably won't even take the trouble to read.

There is a place for the title that states facts. The content of a picture is often such that the spectator's enjoyment will be heightened if he can learn "briefly and without effort" certain general conditions or specific information not carried by the picture, but having a bearing on it. Every now and then such a picture so titled is put out and is always well received.

But those who have been watching the short subject during the past year or two have recognized a new type. It is the scenic or nature study whose captions, in carefully chosen and often poetic language, bring out the implicit beauty, humor, or human appeal of the pictures themselves. Facts of matter are disregarded, while the fact of the spirit, grave or gay, is developed with a skill that places the film high in the ranks of art. Exhibitors have not always taken the trouble to analyze this, but the results from the producers' financial statements, are more than satisfactory. One more proof that the "best" is both an artistic and a box-office success.

PLEASANT PICTURE FOR A SUMMER'S DAY

Wherever May Irwin is, there is sure to be wholesome laughter and funny doings. This time Miss Irwin is on her celebrated farm on Lake Ontario, and she writes to the "Universal Screen Magazine" telling of her day's work, obligingly illustrating it with many amusing snapshots. A game of ball with friends put our heroine in trim for the duties of the day, which include milking, climbing a five-barred gate, and suchlike gentle diversions. Her herd of fine Jerseys is Miss Irwin's particular pride and source of revenue. We hope Miss Irwin will continue the illustrated correspondence she has so pleasantly begun.

From fat little calfs to fat little babies seems a natural transition, and the editor shows us the special work being done by the Child Welfare Department of the Women's Council of National Defense in keeping tabs on the condition of babies all over the country. "Weighing in" seems to bring tears to the victims, but the spectator is very likely to laugh sympathetically over their temporary plight.

Aristocrats of the Colonial Dog Mart, and pictures of some very curious insects give Mr. Culbertson an opportunity for witty titles that develop the human or humorous side of the unconscious actors.

A hint to a housewife shows her how to save by making an appetizing and economical salad of rice and tuna fish. Sam Lloyd, the puzzle expert, tests our guessing abilities by some clever cartoons.

KICKING A STICK FOR THE GODS

There is novelty, action and great pictorial charm in the Outing-Chester scenic shown at the Strand during the week of June 23, and announced for release by Mutual on July 21. It records something probably never shown before in films, the "Kicking Race" held once a year as a religious ceremonial by the Zuni Indians of New Mexico. The village is divided into two parties, representing the Elder and Young God of War, who challenge each other to kick a small stick across twenty-five miles of sagebrush desert. The event is preceded by a ceremonial supper of cornbread, and spirited betting of jewelry and blankets, which latter activity is kept up during the race itself by those not fortunate enough to own a horse to follow the runners.

The picture shows the women making the bowls and the bread for the ceremony; the spokesman of the gods, who utters the challenge from the housetops; the pledging of the family wealth on the event; and the race itself, with the gallery following on horseback. There are close-ups showing what happens when the stick, which must not be touched except with the foot, gets down a hole under a sagebrush root.

As usual, the apt titles, with their well-bred humor, add to the picture's value.

Short Subjects in Review

TWO ENTERTAINING SUBJECTS AND A CARTOON

More startling revelations of the manner in which the Metropolitan Life cares for its employees comprise the first half of this Pictograph. Those who develop the first symptoms of tuberculosis are immediately sent to the beautiful sanitarium maintained by the company. Here they receive every care, the best of food and are afforded opportunities to engage in all sports and outdoor work. The Metropolitan appears to be before its time in the co-operative plan as this picture and various others in the series demonstrate most interestingly.

Some scenes of tumbling brooks and waterfalls with bathers enjoying themselves in divers and sundry ways have been assembled under the title of "Nature's Shower-Baths." These make an ideal summer picture, pretty in the bargain, as the majority of the scenes have been artistically photographed.

Another one of Earl Hurd's amusing animated cartoons entitled "Bobby Bumps Becomes an Ace," closes the reel. Bobby, securing an airplane, downs five German fliers who come forth from a submarine, anxious to avenge their captain, who has been stung in the trousers by Bobby's slingshot. Subsequently he dubs himself an Ace, and gleefully watches the shattered submarine seek refuge by the "Mother ship." Bobby forgets his own mother, who straightway makes her appearance. She, however, proves a poor harbor of refuge, as Bobby realizes in the last scene when he is spanked. Mr. Hurd makes his cartoons amusing to both young and old, and the animation is developed to a state closely bordering on perfection.

A COOL FILM FOR A HOT DAY

Lest we grow tired of his charges at the Zoo, Mr. Ditmars every now and then gives us glimpses of life seen only by the seeking and patient naturalist. His present release pictures some of the queer little creatures that dwell under ponds and subterranean waters.

As if by way of contrast, the reel opens with a beautiful surf picture, which gives way to a quiet brook. Then follow studies of the reptiles and insects that live in and about the latter. The dragon fly is shown in the nymph stage, and later when he casts his shell and puts forth wings. A close-up of him devouring a mosquito indicates his value in the community. The water stick, looking just like a twig, and the water boatman, whose legs are planned on the lines of an outrigger, are amusing and interesting.

Introduced by two charming views of a falls whose waters seek and flow beneath the ground are pictures of an eyeless salamander and a blind and sluggish frog who dwell in the dark river.

The exquisite tone of the picture, a gray-blue extremely restful and pleasing to the eye, adds greatly to the attractiveness of this fine reel.

CELEBRATING THE FALL OF THE BASTILLE

One of the most interesting features of a diversified reel is the New York celebration of the fall of the Bastille at the Joan of Arc monument in Central Park. There are many other items of present-day importance, which embrace a visit to the trenches in France, where the noble services rendered by the Y. M. C. A. are amply dwelt upon; King Alfonso of Spain is seen witnessing a test of war planes; Governor Dorsey of Georgia is shown vehemently declaring that the "man with the hoe" would win the war. These, and many other subjects which now occupy the public mind are beautifully reproduced in Mutual's Screen Telegram, No. 40, which is scheduled for release July 21.

LAST INSTALLMENT OF "BRITAIN'S BULWARKS"

This, the last number of Charles Urban's pictures, showing the most entertaining features of warfare, is probably the best. It is entitled "The Canadians at Vimy Ridge," and shows this branch of Britain's great army in active duty either back of or in the front line trenches. There are scenes of exceptional interest which show the hauling of ammunitions to the front line trenches over newly-laid rails. Closeups of various types of German prisoners lend the number additional interest.

A LAND OF MARVELS AND DANGERS

"The Rainbow Bridge," the latest Newman Travel, to be released by the Educational, is so very interesting that we cannot help wishing it had been just a little better, and so on a par with the scenic and travel films that rank in the first class. Photographically, it is not what it should be, and we feel that Mr. Newman has missed an opportunity in not having obtained more views of the wonderful rock bridge as it must have appeared under different lights. But it may be that our quarrel is with conditions which made the taking of technically good pictures a practical impossibility.

Be that is it may, the film is of a most unusual character and vividly interesting in showing over what almost impassable ground the caravan had to travel to reach its goal. The Bridge lies in southeast Utah, and can be reached only from a trail starting in New Mexico. And the trail is so called by courtesy only. Frequently it leads over rock walls so steep that even the surefooted mules stumble and have to be led. There is a point—remarkable scene, by the way, in which mules and riders seem to disappear into the very walls of the canyon. It is, indeed, a nightmare country, a fitting set for an Inferno, and figures on the screen in a reel which is in many respects unique, and in every respect a most interesting addition to an evening's program.

WHEN THEIR WINGS GOT CLIPPED

There is no reason why you can't be chesty even if you can't swim. That is, if you are Mutt and Jeff and have a pair of water wings handy. Just put on a swimming suit, insert an inflated wing under the front of the Jersey, and you will be amply equipped to win feminine admiration, if not Carnegie medals.

But nothing works out as it is planned, even with the help of a Bradstreet kept handy for consultation before deciding on which of endangered damsels it might be most profitable to save. Poor Mutt gets nothing but embarrassment for his frantic efforts, while little Jeff, saved in the nick of time by the water wing on his chest, carries home the bacon in the shape of the long green.

THE FINE POINTS OF A $10,000 JERSEY COW

For a Jersey cow to bring $10,000 at public auction is some feat, but this is exactly what happened recently at Mt. Kisco, and Universal shows Prof. Hugh G. Van Belt pointing out the "beauty spots" of this $10,000 bovine. This, and the wonderful effects of snow and frost on the waters of Niagara Falls, and the trees on its banks form the main topics of Universal Screen Magazine. No. 84, set for release Aug. 17.

MRS. HEN DOES HER BIT

Theatregoers who are also supporters of Mr. Hoover will view with envy pictures in the "Screen Magazine," which show the model methods followed by the Department of Agriculture in raising chickens. Despite the unusual facilities possessed by the Department, the most modest poultry raiser can learn something from the subject as it is handled in the "Magazine."

Chauncey M. Depew, still smiling at the youthful age of eighty-four, gives his recipe for good luck and good spirits. The advice is shrewd, practical and optimistic, as we should expect from Mr. Depew's own success during and at the end of his long life.

Always there are devised new ways to help out the labor shortage. In house building it is no longer necessary to employ the carpenter and bricklayer to put up the frame. A new machine, well illustrated on the screen, makes in twenty-fours hours enough concrete blocks to build a fair-size dwelling.

Some queer little lizards, who can change their colors, and can and do shed their skin in the picture, interject a comedy note between the more serious parts of the film, and Willie Hopkins, in the most interesting picture he has yet made, models little heads out of lumps of clay held during the entire process behind his back.

Coming Program Offerings

Metro Names Four for August

"The House of Mirth" Heads List on Fifth of Month—Many Stars Named in the Productions

METRO will issue four All Star Series pictures during the month of August. The first is the picturization of Edith Wharton's novel, "The House of Mirth," with a cast including Katharine Harris Barrymore, Harry Kolker, Joseph Kilgour, Edward Abeles, Christine Mayo, and Lottie Briscoe. Miss Wharton's story, which was adapted for the screen by June Mathis and Albert Capellani, has been produced under the direction of Mr. Capellani

The three other August releases will be "In Judgment Of," co-starring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum, with a cast headed by Herbert Standing; "Flower of the Dusk," in which Viola Dana is starred, and "Shadow and Substance," starring Edith Storey. They will be released in the order named.

"The House of Mirth," which will be issued August 5, calls for scenes of luxury, and the heroine, Lily Burt, is the physical embodiment of the neurotic craving for luxury that possesses a certain class of society women.

"In Judgment Of," starring Anna Q. Nilsson and Franklyn Farnum, supported by Herbert Standing and an all-star cast, will be the August 12 release. George D. Baker, Metro's Western manager of productions, is the author of the scenario of "In Judgment Of." It is a tense drama, strong in its appeal to the emotions. Miss Nilsson has the role of Mary Manners, daughter of a political dictator, whose strange gift of telepathy is the means of saving her sweetheart, wrongly accused of murder, from paying the death penalty for another's crime.

Myrtle Reed's novel, "Flower of the Dusk," published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, will be the August 19 release, with Viola Dana as the star. John H. Collins, who adapted the novel for the screen, also directed the picture.

Rhea Mitchell, Now Leading Woman With Bert Lytell In Metro's "Boston Blackie's Little Pal"

Edith Storey's picture, "Shadow and Substance," which will be the August 26 Metro release, is a story of the great north woods by Lois Zellner. Herbert Blache directed the picture. In the picture Miss Storey plays the part of Nan McDonald, "the angel of a community of lumberjacks." Frank Mills, Lilie Leslie, Joseph Kilgour, George Stevens, Augustus Perry, Harry Linson, Ben Walker, John Cohill, Tomanoto, the Japanese actor; Mathilde Brundage, and Baby Ivy Ward give Miss Storey splendid support in the picture.

Artcraft Announces Releases for August

FOUR Artcraft prodoutions are announced for release during the month of August by Walter E. Greene, managing director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of distribution. The schedule includes two special productions of D. W. Griffith and Cecil B. DeMille, a Douglas Fairbanks feature, and a Thomas H. Ince production starring William S. Hart.

The initial releases of these productions are evenly distributed through the month, having been scheduled as follows: August 5, Douglas Fairbanks in "Bound in Morocco"; August 12, D. W. Griffith's "The Great Love"; August 19, William S. Hart in "Riddle Gawne"; August 26, Cecil B. DeMille in "Till I Come Back to You."

As the title, "Bound in Morocco," would indicate, the scenes of this latest Fairbanks Artcraft offering are laid in Africa. The story was written by Allan Dwan, who also directed the picture.

As the Artcraft release of August 19, Thomas H. Ince presents William S. Hart in "Riddle Gawne," a Western story said to be perfectly suited to the talents of the popular Western star. Charles Alden Seltzer is the author of the tale, which ran serially under the title, "The Vengeance of Jefferson Gawne."

"Till I Come Back to You," is the title of Cecil B. DeMille's special Artcraft production to be released August 26, and essentially a war picture, the scenes being laid in Belgium just prior to and subsequent to the Hun invasion. The story has until now been produced under the title, "Paths of Glory," and was written by Jeanie McPherson, author and scenarioist, whose talent was displayed in "The Woman God Forgot," "Joan the Woman," and other film spectacles. It has been interpreted by Cecil B. DeMille.

Universal Shows Red Cross Mysteries

The side of the American Red Cross which, Universal says, the average citizen knows little or nothing about, figures prominently in the 82nd issue of The Universal Screen Magazine by special permission to enter the closely guarded precincts of the plant in which are made the garments for the allied wounded and there make a photoplay record of this phase of the activities of the "greatest mother in the world."

Under the heading of "Our Animal Friends," are shown some of the animal oddities who make their home at the mammals house in the Bronx Zoo, New York City. Among the animals brought up close to the camera are the Dwarf Lemur, a native of Sumatra.

Mutual Releases Feature by Col. Selig

"A Hoosier Romance," by James Whitcomb Riley, produced in five parts by Col. William N. Selig, will be released by the Mutual Film Corporation August 18, according to an announcement from the offices of James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual.

"A Hoosier Romance" was directed by Colin Campbell, director of "The Spoilers," "The Crisis," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Garden of Allah," and other well-known Selig pictures. The cast is headed by Colleen Moore and Thomas Jefferson.

Mr. Campbell also staged for Col. Selig "The County Fair," which will be in six parts.

Pathe-Rolin Comedy Kans the Kaiser

Many theatres throughout the country are said to be using on an all-war program "Kicking the Germ Out of Germany," the Harold Lloyd comedy in which Harold does awful things to the German general staff, to say nothing of canning the Kaiser, according to reports from Pathe.

Lighter subjects, however, occupy Lloyd's attention in the summer program to be released by Pathe. The schedule as now drafted is: August 4, "That's Him"; August 18, "Bride and Gloom"; September 1, "Two Scrambled"; September 15, "Bees in His Bonnet."

"Bird of Prey" Stars Gladys Brockwell

Gladys Brockwell in a photodrama of Mexican border intrigue, love and retribution, "The Bird of Prey," is announced as the next William Fox Special Feature. In this production Miss Brockwell first appears as a vampire, and then, after many experiences with Mexican bandits, seeks revenge on a man who had wronged her, but instead falls in love and wins happiness. The play was written by Charles Kenyon and staged by Edward J. Le Saint.

Besides Miss Brockwell there are only three other principals in the cast, Herbert Heyes, L. C. Shumway, and Willard Louis.

"Here's This Horrid Sun Again and the Work Order Is In Force," Sighs Elinor Field, of Mutual-Strand Gloom Chasers

General Announces Features for August

What is said to be an unusually attractive list of Broadway Star Features is announced for the month of August by General Film Company. Three O. Henry stories and two Wolfville Tales are scheduled for the month. Included in the list is "The Marquis and Miss Sally," the first release, in which Patricia Palmer and William Lester have the featured roles.

Other O. Henry stories carded for August release by General are "Springtime a la Carte" and "A Bird of Bagdad," both featuring Edward Earle and Agnes Ayres. The two Wolfville releases are "The Jest of Talky Jones" and "The Widow Dangerous," both said to be exceptionally interesting Western stories.

Pearl White Heeds Call of the Camera

Pathe announces that Pearl White, serial star, cut short her vacation the other day in response to the urgent plea of George Brackett Seitz, director-general of Astra. Miss White is now making the first episode of her new Pathe serial which will be released late in the Fall. It is rumored that there are no Iron Claws, Hidden Hands, Hooded Terrors, Masked Mysteries, Veiled Villains, or Menacing Masks in the new one. If this statement is made with the idea of arousing curiosity, it ought to be successful.

Parsons Gets Three Roles

"Smiling Bill" Parsons, star of Capitol Comedies, distributed by Goldwyn, plays three roles in his newest production, "Bill's Opportunity," released August 26.

At the opening Bill appears as a poor, overworked department store bookkeeper attired in clothes that had fitted him much better ten years before.

"Playing three men in one play was new to me," remarked Bill, "though it was no more difficult than my work in any other Capitol Comedy. "But my, how that mustache did tickle!"

Program Glances

Probably no previous subject has been so admirably suited to bring out the full talents of Charles Ray as an artist of the screen as "A Nine O'Clock Town," the newest Thomas H. Ince production, featuring the young star which will be released on the Paramount schedule August 5.

"The Girl from Bohemia," to be released by Pathe August 25, means the retirement of Irene Castle from the screen for some time to come, it is believed. This is the last of the Castle series made by Astra for Pathe.

Gladys Leslie, working under direction of Frederic Thomson, is in the latter part of "The Nymph of the Foothills," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon feature, which will be released either in September or October. She will be seen on the August Blue Ribbon program in "Wild Primrose."

The third and concluding chapter of the series of motion pictures titled, "Helping Humanity to Be Healthy and Happy," which deals with the welfare work which the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company is carrying on among its employes, appears in No. 129 of the Paramount-Bray Pictograph, released July 22.

The new Baby Marie Osborne picture, "Winning Grandma," which is released August 18 by Pathe, will have extraordinarily valuable exploitation by reason of several articles appearing in important magazines.

Under the direction of Harry L. Franklin, assisted by P. Thad Volkman, "Kildare of Storm," Eleanor Morcoins Kelly's novel, the scenario of which is from the pen of Jere Looney, is rapidly being converted into one of the most anticipated of Metro's future releases.

Gladys Brockwell, who has finished "Kultur," a play of German intrigue and treachery, will begin work on "The Strange Woman" in the early future at the William Fox Hollywood Studios, and it is understood the play will be released some time in September.

"Her Blighted Love," the third Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, to be released during the month of July, has been scheduled for the 29th, and promises to be out of the ordinary as a comedy.

"Less Than Kin," Wallace Reid's latest Paramount picture, which will be released July 29, is a romance of Central America and New York, in which thrills and laughs are said to be equally distributed.

Claire McDowell, a player before the footlights since babyhood and for a number of years in film drama, has a character role in the cast supporting May Allison, Metro star, in Hale Hamilton's "The Return of Mary."

When C. Gardner Sullivan wrote "The Vamp" for Enid Bennett, Thomas H. Ince's star appearing in Paramount pictures, he is said to have had in mind the same person that Miss Bennett is in real life.

"The Man Who Wouldn't Shoot," an original story by Bernard McConville, will be used for Harry Carey's next Universal special production. Jack Ford will direct. The story concerns a "bad" man, who was thought yellow because he did not draw on the least provocation.

In May Allison's first picture made at Metro's West Coast Studios in Hollywood, "The Return of Mary," the winsome Metro star, has to play opposite a mustache. The wearer of the said mustache is Darrell Foss.

Peggy Hopkins is featured in the first Paramount James Montgomery Flagg two-reel comedy, "Hick Manhattan." Peggy Hopkins is remembered as the Bride in the former Flagg, "Girls You Know" series, and more recently starred in the feature, "The Woman and the Law."

The first of Elinor Field's pictures under her contract to appear in Strand-Mutual comedies will be "What Will Father Say?" Cullen Landis heads the supporting cast.

A real Indian princess, with an honorable heritage of the great out of doors, appears in support of Harr Carey in "Hell's Neck," the star's latest completed Universal photodrama.

One of the best known tricks of love making is cleverly applied in "She Almost Proposed," the Mutual-Strand comedy, release of July 29. The plot has to do with the troubled courtship of Billie and Cullen.

Alice Howell, Eyes, Hair, Neck-tie and All, in "Bawled Out," a Century-Universal Comedy

Triangle Features Casson Ferguson

It was announced this week that Casson Ferguson is the featured Triangle player of that company's releases for the week of August 4. The production in which he appears is "Alias Mary Brown, by E. Magnus Ingleton. Pauline Starke has the principal feminine role with Ferguson, and the story was directed by H. D'Elba and William Dowlan, with Elgin Leslie at the camera.

The first Triangle release of August 4 is "The Price of Applause," produced under the direction of Thomas N. Heffron, with Claire Anderson and Jack Livingston in the main parts.

September Brings New Fannie Ward Story

Pathe announces a late release date for "A Japanese Nightingale," said to be the most ambitious effort of Fannie Ward.

This picture will be released late in September, according to present plans. Fannie Ward plays the role of the Oriental heroine, and the support of Japanese actors and actresses and the employment of heavy sets, the represented streets in Japan, Oriental gardens and a really remarkable Oriental temple interior, are said by Pathe to auger well for the success of this picture.

Release Date Nears for Barriscale Feature

Paralta declared this week that photoplay fans who enjoy clean, probable screen offerings enacted by popular players will find much delight in Bessie Barriscale's newest Paralta play, "Maid o' the Storm," which is released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation the latter part of July.

The action of the play takes place on the rocky shores of Scotland and in London, and presents the star in what is said to be a delightful role of almost mystical qualities. "Maid o' the Storm" is a little girl cast away on the coast of Scotland.

"Tell the boys in the Small Towns"

—Says A. M. Sprague, Owner of the "Savoy" of Palmyra, Missouri—a small town.

"I showed 'The KAISER, the Beast of Berlin' to three packed houses—my house seats 400—our population is about 2,000, and to save my life I could not tell where all the people came from. It was the best business ever done here.

"'The KAISER' is certainly a wonderful picture and your rental price is O. K., as a fellow can make some good money off it.

"Tell the boys in the small towns that they can make a clean-up with this picture as well as those in the larger towns."

Kempner Gives Manx-Man Plans

Leon Schlesinger, General Sales Representative, Starts Campaign of Manx-Man Company—J. L. Kempner, Sales Director

THE "From - producer - to - exhibitor-direct" plan that W. W. Hodkinson and, more recently, S. S. Hutchinson came out strongly for, finds further endorsement from J. L. Kempner, the newly appointed sales director of the Manx-Man Company, who are distributing the famous Hall Caine photoplay through the Goldwyn exchanges. Mr. Kempner's first statement since joining the Manx-Man Company is:

"This company wishes to meet its prospective customers face to face. We want to study their local conditions and know exactly how our picture can fit in so that it will do the maximum amount of business for the exhibitors who play it. We want to be right on the firing-line ourselves, and to personally know the small-town exhibitor as well as the big city one. For this purpose, Leon Schlesinger, our general sales representative, who will be remembered for his work in behalf of 'Enlighten Thy Daughter,' will leave his desk in New York this week to tour the country and meet the theatre man right where he operates.

"Mr. Schlesinger will also confer with the managers of the Goldwyn branches in the territories through which he passes, and with their press representatives. He is especially interested in talking to the publicity men, as the publicity angle on the Manx-Man is a strong one, and exhibitors today buy pictures for their exploitation possibilities as well as for their quality. There is no doubt that as a result of the help of Anglo-American organizations and of newspapers friendly to them that the entire American people can be interested in seeing this film which surely goes to stimulate Anglo-American goodwill as actively as any other single method that either the British or American government could devise, since it brings a phase of English life and manners directly and genuinely to spectators. For instance, in Providence, R. I., we found a British-American society that offered to print its own invitations to the film, so interested were they in the picture and the chance for publicity for their own work. The Providence Journal, one of the leading newspapers of the country, gave the society, the picture and the exhibitors booking it no end of fine publicity."

Leon Schlesinger, General Sales Representative of the Newly-Formed Manx-Man Company

Mr. Schlesinger will first visit Middle West exhibitors, covering Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Michigan and Wisconsin. He will carry with him a condensed film version of the Manx-Man and complete plans of the publicity campaign. He will frequently call on editors and societies, but because of the amount of territory he wishes to cover, will usually leave that branch of the work to the exhibitors and Goldwyn representatives. The Manx-Man executive will give the publicity campaign in each territory such a start that its final success will be guaranteed.

Eleven States Sold On Griffith Picture

George Davis, manager of the Alcazar theatre, San Francisco, associated with Sol Lesser of the All Star Features Company, has purchased from D. W. Griffith the rights to eleven States west of the Mississippi for "Hearts of the World," it is announced. The territory included Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Missouri, Kansas, Iowa, Nebraska, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Wisconsin. It is said that Lesser and Davis paid Mr. Griffith $250,000 for the rights to these States.

Three weeks ago Mr. Lesser purchased the rights to the Pacific Coast and Intermountain States, including Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah, Nevada, Arizona and California. The amount invested by Mr. Lesser for the entire territory is $450,000. He announces that he intends to go ahead and exploit "Hearts of the World" with the same big orchestra and stage effects originated by Mr. Griffith. He says that the net profits for the first three weeks of the San Francisco engagement were $18,000.

"Order Out of Chaos"—Tourneur

"The motion picture can bring order out of chaos," is the opinion of Maurice Tourneur, whose first independent production, "Sporting Life," was completed recently. "I believe that it is possible to quickly bring order out of chaos in Russia, by means of the film," says Mr. Tourneur. "Recently returned travelers from Russia have been telling of the remarkable effect upon the peasants of an American-made film depicting the events leading up to the downfall of the Czar. A great percentage of Russians are completely illiterate, but they can understand pictures. That film enlightened them as they never had been enlightened before. The only other method of reaching the Russian people would be through big, crude, childish posters.

William Parke to Direct Educational

William Parke, who directed "The Yellow Ticket" for Pathe, has been appointed Director-General of the Educational Films Corporation's feature production, "When the Giant Wakes." Two units of "When the Giant Wakes" company are working in Charleston and Logan, W. Va., respectively. After a ten-day visit to the field locations for the picture, Vice-President and General Manager E. W. Hammons returned to New York this week.

W. H. Issues Booklet to Exhibitors

In order to enlighten every exhibitor in the United States and to assist the independent exchange men who are handling their product, W. H. Productions Company, in addition to their trade paper advertising, are issuing a booklet to all exhibitors in the United States for the purpose of informing them of the value of re-issues at this time and also to materially help develop the independent exchange man's business.

Approximately fifty independent exchange men in the country are handling W. H. Productions Company's re-issues. This conclusively shows 100 per cent. efficiency in distribution and the same comparative results are true with the exhibitors booking out of these exchanges, it is said.

Doris Kenyon Prominent at Boston Convention

Doris Kenyon, appearing in productions by her own company, releasing on the William L. Sherry Service, was one of the prominent picture stars in attendance at the Boston Convention last week. Miss Kenyon appeared in person at a number of the Boston theatres during her stay. Miss Kenyon was accompanied by Theodore C. Deitrich, president of De Luxe Pictures, Inc., of which Miss Kenyon is treasurer; William L. Sherry, head of the Sherry Service; Mr. Sherry's general manager, Norman J. Sennott, and sales manager Daniel J. Savage.

Company Formed to Handle Griffith Picture

The Hearts of the World Company of New England has been organized to exploit D. W. Griffith's feature, "Hearts of the World" in the New England territory. The offices of the company are located at 612-614 Little Building, Boston. Edwin Golden is general manager.

Cannibal Pictures Success at Rivoli

MARTIN JOHNSON'S series of pictures, "Cannibal Isles of the South Pacific," which opened this week for a week's run, as the featured number on the bill of S. L. Rothapfel's Rivoli theatre, have the distinction of being the first pictures of their kind to be featured on Mr. Rothapfel's program. It is reported that the offering is playing to big houses. Mr. Johnson gave a short lecture following each run.

In commenting on his experiences while taking these pictures, Mr. Johnson said:

"Probably no camera man has ever been forced to undergo more hardships than did Mrs. Johnson and myself in our 20,000 mile trip. Starting at San Francisco we traveled by one of the Pacific Mail steamships to Honolulu. Thence to Australia, where we transshipped, taking a small trading schooner to the New Hebrides group in the South Pacific. At Samoa we outfitted a small sailing vessel, taking a supply of bright colored calicos, knives, tobacco and trinkets and from there set sail into the little kingdoms of the South Seas, inhabited by millions of savages, who live in the most primitive state. Some of the hardships endured can be gained from the fact that in these regions the sun beats down with terrific force so that it is necessary to develop the negative immediately after it is taken. This was often being done by me on shipboard or on the sandy shores of the Pacific, hundreds of miles away from civilization, and with nothing but unclothed savages of primitive intelligence to act as assistants.

"While many of these pictures were taken among friendly tribes, still a great number of them were taken in the cannibal countries, and that these people really eat the flesh of man now stands as a fact that has not been successfully contradicted. It was often necessary for me to have a guard of native soldiers stand with guns pointed to keep some of the treacherous savages from turning on me while I was at the crank. The result of this being that we now have pictures that are thrilling and sensational in the extreme."

Anderson Feature Nears Completion

Under the direction of Jesse J. Robbins, the G. M. Anderson Company is rapidly approaching the completion of their first release, a five-reel Western production entitled, "The Son-of-a-Gun," featuring Mr. Anderson in the title role.

The story, written in collaboration by the star and Director Robbins, is said to be full to overflowing with the vivid action and the genuine heart interest characteristic of the original "Broncho Billy" pictures, with whose fame the name of G. M. Anderson is indissolubly associated in the minds of film fans throughout the country.

Joy Lewis appears in the leading feminine role, with Frederick Church as heavy, Harry Todd and A. E. Whitting in character parts, and Paul Willis in the role of juvenile.

No definite date has as yet been set for the release of "The Son-of-a-Gun," but it is generally understood that it will be some time in September.

Hayakawa Prepares for Third Picture

Sessue Hayakawa, star of the Haworth Pictures Corporation, is making preparations for the production of his third independent picture, the title to which has not been announced. "The Temple of Dusk," his second independent production, made under the direction of James Young, is nearing completion and Hayakawa will be ready to begin the actual work of production on the third picture immediately thereafter.

Corrected Statement

Through a typographical error in a recent issue of the News, it was erroneously stated that the Mid-West Greater Features Company, Denver, Colo., had acquired among other territory, that comprised by the State of Nevada, to the Brady production, "Stolen Orders." The territory purchased by this company included Colorado, Utah, Wyoming and New Mexico.

Missouri Exhibitor Comments on "The Whip"

H. D. Keefer, manager of the Palace theatre, Salina, Kans., in a letter to the Yale Photoplay Company, Kansas City, Mo., operators and distributors in the independent field, speaks in high praise of the business done by the Paragon production, "The Whip," adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama of the same title. The letter, which speaks for itself, follows in part:

"I wish to say that never have I yet offered my patrons a production that drew the comments this picture did. As a box office attraction it can't be beat. I showed this to over 2,700 people at 25c and it was a pleasure to stand back and see them fairly rise in their seats at the many exciting scenes that this production has, as it unfolds before your eyes. When it comes to a big production, it is not the big elaborate settings, nor the mammoth destructive scenes that really appeal to a person, but something that does or has happened in one's life that they like. You'll find this in 'The Whip' and I think that it will be a long time before the Salina folks will forget it or see anything its equal."

"Mickey," Big Sensation—Shepard

H. J. Shepard, of W. H. Productions, Tells Why Mabel Normand Picture Will Hit the High Spots

RELATIVE to the dramatic qualities incorporated in the production of "Mickey," distributed on the independent market by W. H. Productions Company, H. J. Shepard, of that company, makes the following statement:

"There are in 'Mickey' at least six big feature pictures woven into one perfect continuity. The elements that predestine the success of any picture are prominent in 'Mickey'—pathos, humor, love, adventure, incident and detail.

"The sad and melancholy incidents make the greatest demand upon Miss Normand's artistry. In these her methods are natural, simple and unaffected and each one of the supporting company is apparently impelled to follow the perfect example she sets.

"'Mickey' is full of fun and frolic and laughter—these are the elements which constitute its humor and they run through it as colored threads in a piece of cloth, giving it pattern and texture and richness. The variety of the humor is so great and its introduction so frequent, that it effectually prevents the play from ever growing tiresome or dreary and the full seven reels seem shorter in the seeing than the usual small feature production.

"It has been said that no story is entirely satisfactory unless it has 'heart interest.' That element and its development to a final happy consummation is perfectly achieved. Though the incidents that attend 'Mickey's' courtship are unusual, they are in no sense unreasonable and never strike the observer as being impossible or far-stretched. The courtship starts in the early scenes and the interest is sustained until at last a happy ending is attained. In detail and totality, the love theme is unsurpassed.

"Probably no photoplay has yet been produced that is so filled with adventure and thrills as 'Mickey.' Every thrill—and 'Mickey' is filled with thrills—is remarkable both on account of its novelty and intensity. The imagination of our best comedy director, Mack Sennett, is in 'Mickey.'

"We predict that 'Mickey' will be one of the biggest sensations that has ever been shown to the motion picture public throughout the world."

In the Gaumont News Weeklies

OWING to the increased demand of independent buyers and exhibitors for Gaumont independent news reels, Gaumont News and Graumont Graphic, the company announces that it has doubled the number of prints prepared for distribution. Printing and shipping facilities have been enlarged and speeded up so that now the company is in a position to take care of twice the business heretofore done on its news reels.

Tuesdays and Fridays are days of hustle around the Gaumont plant. On these days the employes assemble at an unusually early hour. At nine o'clock the last mail of the morning is received, the latest minute news negatives are rushed through the developer, the reels are assembled, a corps of inspectors project them to see that every scene is correct and in order, and then they are quickly packed and addressed, and rushed to the depots by auto.

The studios and laboratories of the Gaumont Company are located in Flushing, Long Island, in Greater New York, and just across the river from the Manhattan section, where the depots are located.

While transportation just at this time is subject to delay because of war conditions, the company announces that the postal and express officials realize the necessity of "speeding the news" and are cheerfully doing all they can to facilitate the rushing of these important carriers of important news events.

The Gaumont News and Graphic, shipped at midday each Tuesday and Friday are the only independent news reels on the market. Gaumont Graphic No. 16, shipped July 12, shows the funeral services for Major John Purroy Mitchel. This issue of the Graphic also shows the launching in San Francisco of eight destroyers and nine freight-carrying vessels. Among the other subjects in this issue, Official War Pictures show our boys handling heavy howitzers and coast artillery somewhere in France; Edward V. Rickenbacker, famous auto racer, who is now an American "ace"; the seizing of a big New York evening paper, said to be owned by the German Government, and many other news events.

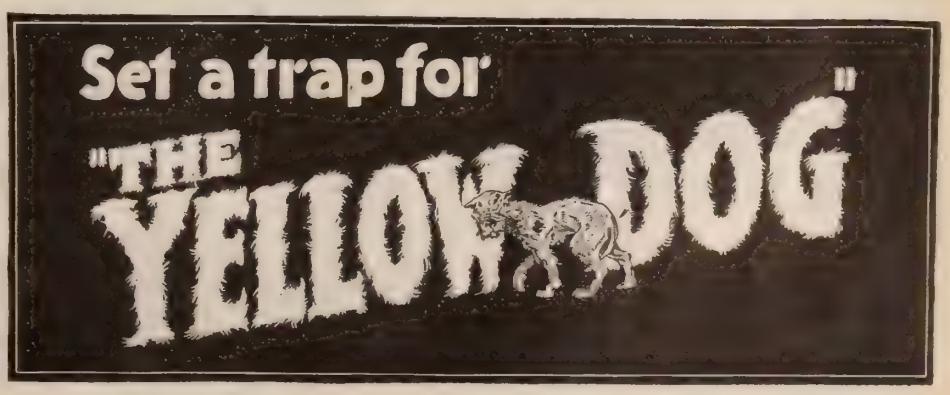
Gaumont News No. 17, shipped on July 16, pictures the annual convention of the B. P. O. Elks at Atlantic City; the enormous wheat crop of 1918; the visit of Dr. Naon, Argentine Ambassador, who wishes to secure a loan of $40,000,000 from our Government; the presentation by the Government to the city of San Francisco of a service flag commemorating the 33,487 sons of liberty of that city who are now fighting in France, and many scenes showing the activities of our womanhood, etc., etc.

Hoffman Recovering from Operation

M. H. Hoffman, who severed his connections recently with the Foursquare Pictures, to act independently in the exploitation of independent productions, is reported to be on his way to recovery from a surgical operation performed at Mt. Sinai Hospital, where he has been confined for about two weeks. Before undergoing the operation, Mr. Hoffman announced the purchase of the rights to Crest Pictures, "The Grain of Dust," starring Lillian Walker, for the territory of Greater New York and northern New Jersey.

Sherman Due with Print

Harry A. Sherman, Sherman Productions, is due to arrive in New York this week, with a print of Sherman Productions first independent production, "The Light of the Western Stars," featuring Dustin Farnum, adapted from the work of Zane Grey. Winifred Kingston has the leading feminine role.



In This Group Are Major-General March, U. S. A.; John Sunderland, Actor; Newton D. Baker, Secretary of War, and Ex-Senator Chilton of West Virginia. They All Appear in the Educational Subject, "When the Giant Wakes"

Selznick Gets "Stolen Orders"

Louis J. Selznick Buys New York State Rights to Brady Production — Distributed Through Select Pictures

LEWIS J. SELZNICK announces that he has purchased the New York State rights to William A. Brady's production, "Stolen Orders," adapted from the Drury Lane melodrama of the same title, and featuring Kitty Gordon, Carlyle Blackwell, Montagu Love and June Elvidge. Mr. Selznick will distribute the feature through the Select Pictures Corporation, of which he is head.

"Stolen Orders" completed a successful run at the Park theatre, New York, recently and moved from there to the Lyric theatre, where it met with equal success. Recently it opened for a week at Poli's theatre, Washington, D. C., and played to crowded houses for a week in the National Capital. It tells a story which is timely and emphasized by repeated thrills and, according to reports received by Mr. Brady from localities where "Stolen Orders" has run, it has been greeted with a hearty welcome by the public.

In addition to the sale of the New York State rights to Mr. Selznick, Mr. Brady announces the closing of a contract with W. E. Drummond of Knoxville, Tenn., covering the rights to "Stolen Orders" for Tennessee and Alabama. Mr. Drummond, who handled "The Whip" most successfully in these territories, said he has an even bigger box office attraction in "Stolen Orders."

Raver's Novelty Successful at Strand

Harold Edel, managing director, Strand theatre, New York, has written Harry Raver, complimenting him on the successful run Mr. Raver's three-reel feature, "Outwitting the Hun," had at the Strand during a week's run recently. The letter follows:

"This is the first opportunity that I have had to write you relative to your picture which we ran here last week, 'Outwitting the Hun.' Without question it was one of the most delightful novelties that I have ever had the pleasure of running at the Strand and was enjoyed immensely by our audiences. I considered it the outstanding feature on the bill."

Educational Organizes Distributing Company

To facilitate the wider distribution of Educational subjects, the Educational Distributing Corporation has been formed. The president of this new film company is Charles A. Dean, a promoter and capitalist. The offices are located in the Godfrey Building and a staff of executives is being organized. The exclusive business of the new concern will be to handle the output of the Educational Films Corporation of America, and to that end a dozen new exchanges will be established throughout the country. President Dean went to Chicago this week, where Vice-President Hammons of the parent company had already entered into preliminary arrangements for a branch office. Due to the recent great expansion of the demand for Educationals, it is estimated that the distributing company within the next six months will handle more than twice the output of prints now being used.

Associated Plans Rounding Into Shape

Messrs. Herbert Lubin and Arthur N. Sawyer, associated with Ralph Ince in the Associated Pictures, Inc., producing pictures under the brand name of "Ralph Ince Attractions," announce that the plans of this recently formed company are rapidly materializing and that the scenario for the first production by this company has been chosen. Work on same will be started as soon as Mr. Ince completes his contract with Metro to direct Ethel Barrymore and Hale Hamilton in two pictures. Louis Joseph Vance, the author, is production analyist for Associated Pictures.

Complete Advertising Line for Gaumont Serial

One, three and six-sheet posters have been prepared by the Gaumont Company to assist the buyer and exhibitor in the proper exploitation of its new twenty-reel serial, "The Hand of Vengeance." Each episode of the ten which constitute the completed serial, is illustrated with slide, photographs and lithographs. A special one-sheet on heavy calendared paper in the nature of a "hanger" has also been issued.

SILVERTIP

THE STANDARD DIRECT CURRENT MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives a light source that is hard to beat. The Silvertip is a quality product that has received the stamp of approval of the best operators in the country.

The Columbia-Silvertip combination gives:

1. High current carrying capacity. The Silvertip is heavily plated, making it capable of carrying the heavy currents used in projection without harmful heating.

2. Pure white light. The light of the Columbia-Silvertip arc approaches daylight in color value and brings out gradations of tone in the picture.

3. A strong, flexible light. The arc can be varied at the will of the operator, according to the density of the film within a reasonable limit of the rated amperage of the combination used. No two films are of the same density, and therefore, true artistic presentation of a picture requires a flexible light source.

Note: Silvertips are for direct current only.

The Operator Question

In last week's issue we published on this page a statement made by Mr. L. G. Dolliver, assistant president of the International Theatrical Stage Employes and Moving Picture Machine Operators which you should read, if you have not already done so, as it is of interest to the entire industry.

The question as to whether the operator occupies an essential position in the community is one which is evident on its face, for as long as picture theatres are allowed to remain open the presence of an experienced man in the projection room is absolutely necessary. Is it safe at any time to allow a novice to enter a hazardous occupation when there is the least danger to any individual or individuals? This is the case in the picture industry today—as long as the theatre stays open the man at the machines must know his business.

The Operators' union has now gone on record with the statement that all theatre men in the country may rest easy, for they need never fear the lack of competent men to project their picturs. This is a consoling thought to say the least, and if it can be carried through we will all rest easy. The trouble is that even in the past and at the present time the individual members of the organization are far from 100 per cent competent.

We find in various of the larger centres groups of intelligent and progressive union operators forming clubs for the advancement of their own knowledge. The members meet regularly and have addresses by the leading optical and mechanical authorities; in fact they are continually striving to gain additional knowledge. These local clubs are distinct from the local branches of the union and those identified with them, aside from carrying the same card, have next to nothing in common with the rest of the operators' fraternity. Why should they? These men are progressive, want to learn and deserve promotion; the others are holding down jobs because they are members of the union, but yet, from the point of view of ability and knowledge, they would make far better janitors.

This condition would be greatly improved were the operators graded in classes based on actual knowledge and ability proved by examination, and when the salaries would vary in accordance with their classification. In this way the industry would feel a sense of protection not existing today. We have advocated this step before and suggest it again at this time, so that the lowest class might be filled up at this time. Then when they are needed to take actual charge of a projection machine they would have had the needed apprenticeship and have passed examinations qualifying them for the responsibility which they must assume.

There is no reason as we see it for the theatre men to combat the Operators' union providing they can provide the men necessary to fill all vacancies, unless it is on the ground of incompetency. This is the greatest weakness today, and therefore we advocate that the locals themselves start schools of instruction within themselves and force all those who fail to pass the required examinations to attend or resign and seek other occupations. Co-operation can be had from all the machine manufacturers and trade papers. They will be only too glad to help in every way. The Projection Editor of Motion Picture News will be glad to do all in his power to help now whether the courses are started or not, but should these courses be started there is no end of valuable assistance available from many quarters.

The outside schools run for monetary gain or operated by interests other than those controlled by the operators themselves are wrong except as a last resort. The gross number of operators ready to go to work should be limited to the natural law of supply and demand. Were schools opened promiscuously the field would be flooded with half-baked novices which would only add to the number already in our midst. This would be a backward step. It will be time enough to consider a move of this kind when there is an actual shortage.

As far as women in the projection room are concerned we agree with Mr. Dolliver there may be exceptions, but in general we are against their attempting to break into this line of endeavor. From the point of view of temperament they are not suited for the work. It is not often that actual fire breaks out, but should it occur the person who must deal with it must have a cool head and not be incumbered with extra clothing or extra hair which under these conditions would ignite almost instantaneously.

One of the greatest troubles which we have noted among the operating fraternity is their extreme tenderness of feeling when it comes to showing their ignorance or asking for help. There is no reason to be ashamed because you are seeking information. The man who comes out and says he does not know and asks for co-operation and help is the man who gets ahead, learns and proves that he is interested in his work and wants advancement. There seems among operators to be a sense of bashfulness at seeking advice. This should not be. Motion Picture News is equipped to serve you by answering your questions—any and all of them. We will do this by letter or through the department. Your name and address need not and will not be published if you so desire. This service is for all operators—big and small. There is no charge and no obligation.

Promoting Advertising

It is interesting to note the methods employed by some manufacturers in handling the follow-ups for their trade advertising. Mr. H. H. Cudmore of the Argus Lamp & Appliance Company recently made the statement that one of the hardest problems that confronted him was making the dealers handling his products realize that he was doing trade advertising.

He makes it a rule that whenever a piece of advertising matter appears in any trade paper it shall be sent out at the same time to the entire trade. He does this by having it dressed up in some attractive way, and stating on the folder exactly where the advertisement has appeared.

In following out this plan he has taken the double truck which appears in the Motion Picture News, had it mounted on attractive blue stock and on the cover reproduces a statement as to where the advertising appeared and when. He also states that when the folder is read carefully it will help to sell the equipment which it promotes. He absolutely refuses to allow his dealers to overlook any of his advertising, for he claims that it is essential to them in promoting his goods to know how and where he is spending his money.

It is our hope that this suggestion may be of benefit to other manufacturers.

Open the line switch or circuit breaker.

Type SK Direct-Current Motor

When a starting rheostat is used, open the line switch or circuit-breaker. Never force the starter handle to the "off" position, but allow it to return automatically. If the motor is to be shut down for a considerable period, open the line switch or breaker.

Reversing Motor-Generator

The rotating element of the motor-generator should revolve in a clockwise direction as observed by viewing the generator end of the set. If this is not the case when the motor is started, then the wiring connections for the motor must be changed.

Type CS Polyphase Motor

To reverse a two-phase, four-wire motor, the two leads of one phase should be interchanged. To reverse a two-phase, three-wire motor, the two outside leads should be interchanged. To reverse a three-phase motor, any two leads are interchanged.

Type AR Single-Phase Motor

The direction of rotation is determined by the position of the brushes and is indicated by a scale on the rocker ring and a pointer on the front bearing bracket. The scale consists of three lines marked RR, M and RL, respectively. When the rocker ring is turned so that the pointer is opposite RR, the motor will run in a right-hand or clockwise direction (facing the commutator); and when the pointer is opposite RL, the rotation will be left-hand or counter-clockwise. N is the neutral point; the armature will not turn if the pointer is opposite this line. To reverse the motor, therefore, loosen the rocker ring set-screw and turn the rocker ring until the pointer is opposite the line for the reverse direction of rotation.

Adjusting the Equipment

After the set is running properly, gradually adjust the generator field rheostat until the potential between the generator terminals, as indicated by a reliable voltmeter, is approximately 75 volts.

For single-light equipments (see Figs. 7 and 8) the control switch, if one is used, should always be opened before striking the arc. After the arc is struck and the carbons have been separated, close the control switch and then readjust the carbons until the potential across the arc is between 50 and 55 volts, as indicated by a reliable voltmeter, the terminals of which are connected directly to the carbons in the lamp. If, under these conditions, the current through the lamp, as indicated by a reliable ammeter, is less than required, and not greater than the full load rating of the generator, then the wire connected in terminal 7 on the ballast resistor should be shifted to terminal 6 or terminal 5, and so on, until the proper current does flow, when the arc potential is between 50 and 55 volts. If, when terminal 1 is tested, the current is less than required, then the nuts at either end of the ballast resistor should be loosened and terminal 1 should be shifted to a position between the proper grids, which will allow the desired current to flow, after the nuts have been properly tightened and the arc potential is between 50 and 55 volts.

For two-light equipments (see Figs. 9 and 10) the control switch connected to the ballast resistor in the circuit of either lamp, must always be opened before striking the arc in the lamp.

With lamp No. 2 cut off the circuit, open control switch No. 1 and strike the arc in lamp No. 1. After the carbons have been separated, close control switch No. 1, and then readjust the carbons until the potential across the arc is between 50 and 55 volts, as indicated by a reliable voltmeter, the terminals of which are connected directly to the carbons in lamp No. 1. If, under these conditions, the current through lamp No. 1, as indicated by a reliable ammeter, is less than required or less than the full-load rating of the generator, then the wire connected in the terminal 7, on ballast resistor No. 1, should be shifted to terminal 6, or terminal 5, and so on, until the proper current does flow, when the arc potential is between 50 and 55 volts. If, when terminal 1 is tested, the current is less than required, then the nuts at either end of ballast resistor No. 1, should be loosened and terminal 1 should be shifted to a position between the proper grids, which will allow the desired current to flow after the nuts have been properly tightened and the arc potential is between 50 and 55 volts.

With lamp No. 1 cut off the circuit, open control switch No. 2 and strike the arc in lamp No. 2. After the carbons have been separated, close control switch No. 2, and then readjust the carbons until the potential across the arc is between 50 and 55 volts, as indicated by a reliable voltmeter, the terminals of which are connected directly to the carbons in lamp No. 2. If, under these conditions, the current through lamp No. 2, as indicated by a reliable ammeter, is less than required or less than the full load rating of the generator, then the wire connected in terminal 7, on ballast resistor No. 2, should be shifted to terminal 6, or terminal 5, and so on, until the proper current does flow, when the arc potential is between 50 and 55 volts. If, when terminal 1 is tested, the current is less than required, then the nuts at either end of ballast resistor No. 2, should be loosened, and terminal 1 should be shifted to a position between the proper grids, which will allow the desired current to flow after the nuts have been properly tightened and the arc potential is between 50 and 55 volts.

Operating the Equipment

After the adjustments, specified for a single-light installation have been made, the equipment is operated in the usual manner, which needs no further explanation. After both ballast resistors have been properly adjusted, as specified for a two-light installation, and the crater of the positive or upper carbon in each lamp is properly formed, the entire equipment is ready for operation as hereinafter given. Insert reel No. 1 in machine No. 1, open control switch No. 1, strike the arc in lamp No. 1, and then separate the carbons, close control switch No. 1, adjust the carbons properly and then project pictures in the usual manner. Reel No. 2 should be inserted in machine No. 2. About one minute before the end of reel No. 1 is reached, open control switch No. 2, strike the arc in lamp No. 2, adjust the carbons properly. A few seconds before the end of reel No. 1 is reached, close control switch No. 2, and if necessary make a final adjustment of the carbons. At the proper time, as the end of reel No. 1 is reached, begin projecting pictures with machine No. 2 and cut lamp No. 1 off the circuit. Reel No. 3 should be inserted in machine No. 1. About one minute before the end of reel No. 2 is reached, open control switch No. 1, strike the arc in lamp No. 1, and adjust the carbons properly. A few seconds before the end of reel No. 2 is reached, close control switch No. 1, and if necessary, make a final adjustment of the carbons. At the proper time, as the end of reel No. 2 is reached, begin projecting pictures with machine No. 1, and cut lamp No. 2 off the circuit. This cycle of operations may be carried out indefinitely at the rate of three, four or five 1,000-foot reels per hour, without injury to the electrical equipment, provided each lamp does not require more than the full-load rated current from the generator operating at the potential of 75 volts.

Repair Parts for Motor-Generator

Repair parts for these motor-generators should be obtained from the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company. When ordering give the name of the part wanted and the serial number of the unit on which the part is to be used. The serial number will be found plainly stamped on the end of the shaft and on the name plate. The omission of the serial number from your order will positively cause delay.

New bearings to replace those worn out can be obtained by application to the nearest district office of this company. It is advisable to have spare bearings on hand. If the bearings overheat, the cause is probably one of the following: (1) Poor lubrication, which may be owing to poor grade or insufficient quantity of lubricant or failure of the oil rings to revolve; (2) poor alignment or leveling, causing excessive end thrust or binding; (3) rough bearing surface; (4) bent shaft. If a bearing becomes hot, feed a heavy lubricant copiously. If relief is not thus afforded shut down the motor-generator, keeping the armature revolving slowly until the bearing is cool, in order to prevent sticking or "freezing."

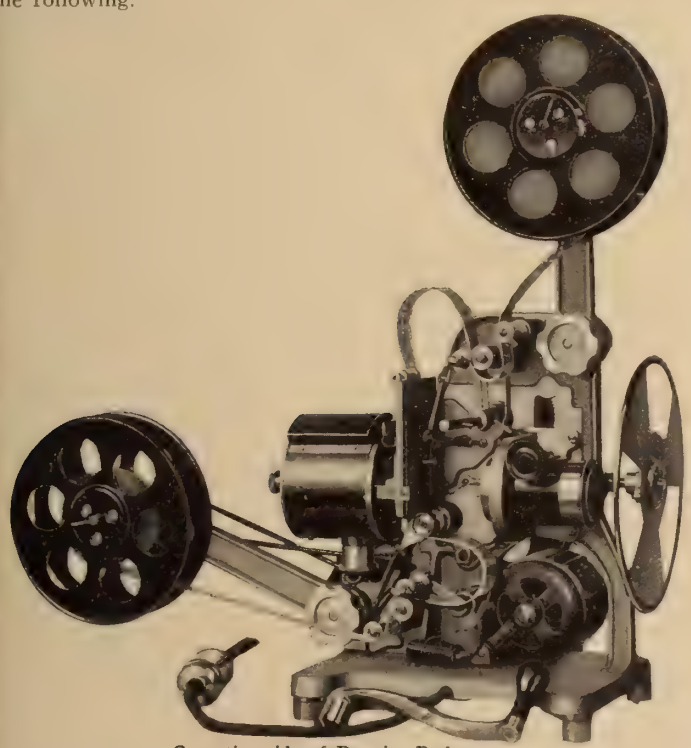
The Premier Pathescope

MOST readers are doubtless acquainted with the small projector known as the Pathéscope, which has been on the American market for some years, and is distinguished from other portable projectors now available by the fact that it employs a film of smaller dimensions than standard cine strips—this reduced-width film being also provided with mixed perforation, i. e., three perforations per picture on one side of the strip and one perforation per picture on the other side.

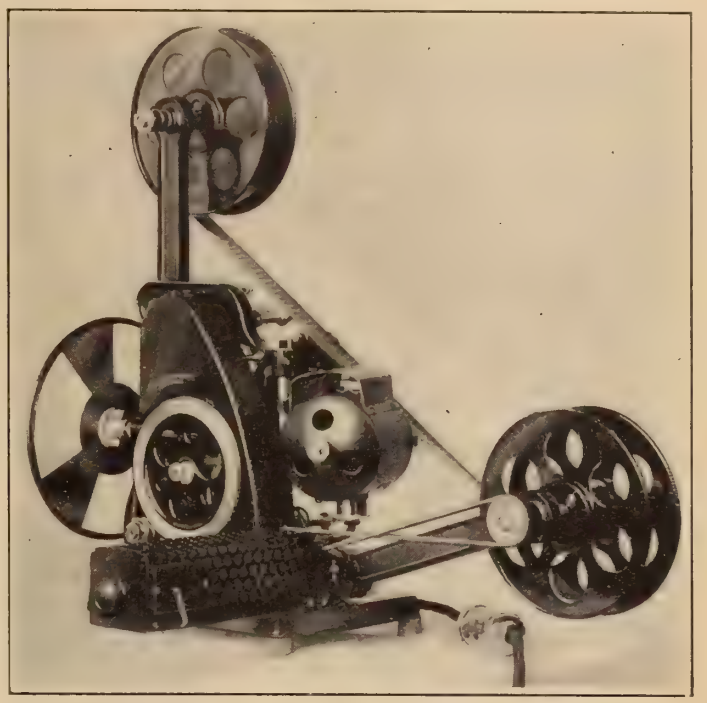
The original Pathéscopes were all imported machines, being made in France, but as imports have largely ceased since the commencement of the war, the Pathéscope Co. of America found it necessary to manufacture their machines in this country, and when this step was decided upon, the Pathéscope Co. also undertook to bring out a projector of entirely new design, which is termed the Premier Pathéscope and will be briefly described in the following.



Operating-side of Premier Pathescope

The Premier Pathéscope is a portable machine in the truest sense of the word, its complete weight being 23 pounds, which is achieved by making the frame and supports of the mechanism of cast aluminum. The gears are of bronze and steel with helical teeth, while the shafts are all of steel and run in long bearings. Especial accuracy has been taken in machining the bearings for the star and cam shafts which are reamed and lapped to .0025 inch of the prescribed size.

All Premier Pathéscopes are motor-driven by a universal motor which operates on both A. C. and D. C. supply circuits of 110 to 120 voltage, the machine being readily connected to a lamp socket by a plug and flexible cable in the usual manner. A special switch receptacle containing push buttons is inserted in the connecting cable, and the operator, holding this in his hand, may start or stop the machine at pleasure by simply pressing the proper button.



Premier Pathescope Ready for Rewinding the Film

The original imported Pathéscope projectors were provided with an intermittent movement of the claw type, but in the Premier Pathéscope the movement is a star and cam of special type in connection with an intermittent sprocket. The special intermittent used on the Premier Pathéscope consists of a four-slot star with the slots placed obliquely, instead of radially as is usual, the cam being of the customary one-pin variety. A special analysis of this type of intermittent will shortly appear in the Projection Department, but before leaving the subject of the Pathéscope movement we must add that the intermittent sprocket has three times as many teeth on one side as on the other, which is in conformity with the Pathéscope system of mixed perforation. Threading the Premier Pathéscope is carried out in much the same manner as with the usual large-sized projector, and the picture must be threaded in frame before the aperture, which is facilitated by the special system of perforation. The early Pathéscope had no framing device whatsoever, and while the model now being described will not frame the film to the extent of a complete picture-space, it is provided with a small amount of adjustment which serves to center the picture before the projection aperture.

The highly efficient screen illumination of the older Pathéscope, derived from a very small incandescent lamp, was always a source of admiration on the part of students of projection, and the same is true of the Premier model for the same reason, i. e., the use of an efficient condenser system.

The light source used is a 14-volt, 2-ampere, argon-filled incandescent lamp, with special rheostat control, mounted in an adjustable socket which permits the height of the filament to be centered with respect to the optical system. The socket is so arranged that when the lamp is installed it is horizontally centered with the condensers. A spherical mirror in a focussing mount is placed behind the lamp, while in front is a highly efficient condenser system composed of a meniscus and two plano-convex lenses. These are very small (about 1¼ inches diameter) and are mounted close to the projection aperture, this being the reason for the high efficiency with which the light-source is utilized in the Pathéscope projectors. It is claimed that 62½ per cent of the available light is utilized by the Premier Pathéscope, which could be still further increased some 8 per cent if two lenses instead of three could be used in the condenser combination and still maintain the short E. F. required. The objectives by which the pictures are projected are standard M. P. tubes in the usual focussing mounts, and may be secured in any desired E. F.

The machine possesses many other niceties of design and arrangement, and folds up compactly for purposes of transportation. The limits of space prevent a more complete description, but it will be appreciated from the above that sound and modern principles are embodied in this latest model.

A Correction

WE have to thank Mr. Edwin S. Porter of the Precision Machine Company, co-designer of the Simplex projector, and a pioneer in film production, for pointing out a misstatement relating to the properties of a five-slot star, which appeared in a recent article on the Power intermittent movement (NEWS of July 6th, page 126). It is there stated that with a five-slot star the period of movement of the film is represented by an angular distance of 72 degrees, which would make it appear that a five-slot star was a faster movement than the usual four-slot, or 90 degree Geneva movement.

This is a misstatement, however, as a five-slot movement must necessarily be slower than that produced by the four-slot star, and we are at loss to recall how a misstatement of such elementary character could have gotten into the article in question.

As a matter of fact, the more slots which a star wheel possesses the slower will be the movement of which it forms a part, and the period of movement of a five-slot star wheel will have an angular value of 118 degrees, instead of 72 degrees, as erroneously stated in the July 6th issue.

Mr. Porter also takes issue with our statement that if the four-slot star is trimmed down to produce a faster movement interval than 90 degrees, the locking of the star by the cam will not be complete during a certain fraction of the period of the star's rotation, but this is a legitimate statement in general, as a study of many so-called "improved movements" has convinced us. However, a 5 to 1 movement comprising a four-slot star, which is sometimes supplied as special equipment with the Simplex projector, was put in evidence by Mr. Porter as an example of what can be accomplished along the line of speeding up a four-slot Geneva and still maintaining a perfect locking of the two members. This movement has no perceptible position where the proper locking relationships are not maintained, but the cam-pin deviates from a strict radial entry, as we pointed out must be the case in our earlier article. The deviation from a strict radial entry is only 9 degrees, however, in the case of the 5 to 1 Simplex, four-slot Geneva, and Mr. Porter advises us that these faster movements have held up for over a year under continuous use in theatres, and even then showed no signs of excessive wear.

Mr. Porter also feels that the statement (in the article cited) that with a 72-degree movement the shutter blades may be narrower, thus admitting more light to the screen, would tend to create mistaken ideas as to the relative merits of various intermittent movements. As the article criticised by Mr. Porter deals with an intermittent movement, the question of shutters is hardly open to debate in connection therewith, but we are nevertheless disposed to concede the correctness of Mr. Porter's contention that narrower shutter blades (letting more light reach the screen) are, in themselves, no special advantage unless the blades are so proportioned that flicker is also decreased at useful projecting speeds. Mr. Porter has demonstrated to us in a most straightforward and interesting manner that an alteration in the blade dimensions of customary three-wing shutters such that the altered shutter transmits only 1 per cent less light than the varieties commonly met with, will eliminate flicker at 84 crank revolutions per minute, whereas some other commonly used three-wing shutters transmitting only 1 per cent more light to the screen require projecting speeds as high as 104 to 112 crank revolutions per minute to make flicker vanish. These tests we carried out by observing discs of white light projected upon the screen. The improved shutter mentioned is now part of every Simplex projector sent out by the factory.

Has Trouble Due to Improper Handling of D. C. Arc

Mr. Philip Frahm, Storm Lake, Ia., writes: "I am using 45 amperes D. C. from a motor generator with a panel switch. Will I obtain a steady light by using a rheostat? When I feed my carbons close they will sputter for a second or so, and it is beastly hard to keep a round spot. I have no trouble if I burn my carbons quite a ways apart. I have a good light, but as I say, when I feed my carbons together they will sputter a couple of times then stop. My spot will be perfectly round at the bottom but the top will not remain that way. It appears to me as though it is in the top carbons, for as long as I have a round spot they do not sputter. I am using 5/8-inch cored top and bottom."

In reply: It would be difficult for us to advise as to the effect of a rheostat on the performance of the correspondent's projection arc, because he has neglected to mention the make and type of the motor-generator used, but it appears from the description of his difficulties that the fault is not necessarily with the generator set, but is more probably due to the fact that the correspondent is just gaining his first experience with a D. C. arc.

We are aware that our correspondent has previously been working on A. C., and it is apparent from his remarks that he is carrying too short an arc with the D. C. supply, prompted, no doubt, by his previous experience on A. C. He will quickly find, however, that a greater carbon separation is necessary with D. C., if a quiet-burning arc and a perfect spot are to be maintained, and he will also discover that by frequent and careful feeding the D. C. illumination may be maintained even and free from flutter for hours at a stretch, provided that the generator set delivers unfluctuating voltage.

The carrying of too short an arc on D. C. will account just as readily for the shape of the spot noticed by the correspondent as it will for the sputtering of the carbons just after a feed, for if the arc is trimmed in the proper D. C. fashion (with the lower carbon tip slightily in advance of the upper one), and the carbon tips are too close together, then the lower part of the positive crater will be shaded by the negative carbon tip, and this shading will be apparent at the top of the spot. A like condition results if the lower carbon tip is too far in advance of the upper one.

Two cored carbons of the same size is certainly not the best D. C. trim in these enlightened days, and we recommend that the correspondent use a solid negative carbon of not over 5-16-inch diameter, preferably of the metal coated variety now generally in use. These small metal coated negative carbons, when used with cored positives of the proper size, yield an arc which is brilliant and easy to control, while the small size of these negative carbons reduces the shading of the crater to a minimum. We believe the correspondent will find some useful information in the article on page 416 of the NEWS of July 20.

Local 306 Elects New Officers

AT a meeting of Local 306, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., held June 5, the following were elected as officers of the organization: John F. Stevens, president; Richard E. Weis, vice-president; Morris J. Rotker, recording secretary; Harry I. Sherman, financial secretary; Will C. Smith, treasurer; Samuel Goldfarb, first business representative; Harry Mackler, second business representative; Charles N. Jawitz, trustee; Max Feinberg, Executive Board member; Harry Scherl, sergeant-at-arms.

In recognition of his work in behalf of the organization the retiring president, Mr. Sam Kaplan, was requested by the membership to run again, but, although the pressure of his regular work obliged him to decline renomination, Mr. Kaplan pledged his future support to the continued upbuilding of Local 306. Ex-president Kaplan was presented with a gavel bearing a suitably inscribed silver plate, the speech of presentation being made by Will C. Smith.

The June 5 meeting of Local 306 marked a departure on the part of the organization from their custom adhered to for many years, of meeting at 12 o'clock midnight. This hour was formerly thought to be the most convenient to the majority of the members, but, following the example of the June 5 meeting, all future meetings will be called at 10 o'clock a. m. at the organization's regular meeting place, 12 St. Mark's Place, New York City.

IN the examination of photographic objectives with the Nutting lens testing bench, the appearance of the antipoint is still the criterion, but for this class of objectives the appearances have to be studied over a wide field. Starting at the center of the field, with the testing apparatus exactly central, one can proceed to investigate the imagery at increasing angular distances away from the axis by rotating the pillar which holds the objective being tested. As one proceeds outwards from the center of the field, it will be found necessary to alter the position of the observing microscope in order to bring the image (or diffraction disc) into sharp focus, because no photographic objective has a perfectly flat field except in the immediate vicinity of the axis. As the testing bench is graduated in every direction of movement, the amounts of the focal changes of the observing microscope can be noted, and when these readings are tabulated for the extent of the field explored, and plotted as ordinates on a diagram with angular distances from the axis as abscissae, a curve is secured which represents the character of the image-field. Since, moreover, residual astigmatism is also encountered at some distance from the axis, when exploring the image-field of a photographic objective, there are consequently two fields to be examined when the point is reached where ray union no longer exists, these being the primary and secondary image-fields. These are distinguished by the fact that an astigmatic antipoint will only be sharply delineated in one meridian, and assuming that the field for which the antipoint is focussed in the vertical meridian, has already been plotted, one has next to measure the foci (at successive angular distances from the axis) which give sharp delineations of the disc in a horizontal meridian, these values, then, giving the curvature of the secondary astigmatic image-field. The mean curvature, i. e., primary minus secondary curvature, is, by custom, designated the "curvature of the image-field."

To ascertain the extent to which the antipoints formed by a photographic objective are afflicted with coma, it is necessary to examine the appearances of the images (of the point source) formed by various isolated zones of the objective, proceeding outwards from the axis at succeeding distances of a few millimeters. The various zones of the objective may be brought individually into play through the use of a zone-plate, or by other known means, and the antipoints formed by the outer zones of a lens are sometimes of startling appearance. The form of these diffraction patterns showing severe coma may be described as having the appearance of series of twisted and distorted loops, and it is interesting to note that these comatic effects were displayed digramatically by Adolph Steinheil as long ago as 1889, the attention of present-day photographers having been drawn to these phenomena by Professor Sylvanus P. Thompson (Photographic Journal, 1902).

If the equivalent foci of the various zones of the objective are measured, while examining the coma patches, and the difference between the E.F.s of the various zones and the axial E.F. are plotted on a diagram having distances from the axis (in mm.) as abscissae, the resultant curve shows the zonal variations of the E.F. for the objective being examined, and if, further, this curve is compared with another showing the points at which rays refracted from the various zones intersect the axis of the system (in the vicinity of the focal-plane), the deviation from fulfillment of the sine condition can be estimated. Another method of depicting the deviation from fulfillment of the sine condition is to plot a curve showing the difference between the curve for zonal variations of the E. F. L. and the curve of spherical aberration. This method, suggested by Harting, yields a straight line coinciding approximately with the focal-plane, in the case of a coma-free objective.

The microscopic examination of the diffraction-discs representing luminous points, as formed by compound optical systems, for instance, photographic objectives, affords a sensitive means of ascertaining whether a system is accurately centered, this being a valuable feature of the Nutting lens testing bench. The antipoint formed by an accurately centered optical system will be perfectly symmetrical on the axis, and capable of being sharply focussed all over its area, whereas if any component of the system is not perfectly centered with respect to all of the other components, the antipoint will be unsymmetrical in form, or will not appear sharply delineated throughout, when examined with the observing microscope. From the unsymmetrical or partly obscure appearance of the resultant diffraction-disc an experienced observer can therefore tell immediately just what component of a system is decentered, and can also determine the direction of the deviation, so that the necessary adjustment for correcting the faulty performance may be readily and exactly prescribed. All of the interesting effects observed visually with the Nutting lens testing apparatus, may be readily recorded photographically, by attaching a camera to the observing microscope in the usual manner.

Although the experimental and investigative work carried out in the various divisions on the third floor of the Kodak Research Laboratory is of an immediately practical nature, and in fact the practical side is kept prominently in view in all investigations undertaken at the Laboratory, the second floor of the institution is entirely given up to scientific work of a more abstract nature, and we find here the physical and physico-chemical laboratories.

All photographers are aware of the dominant part played by chemistry in their favorite art-science, but the chemistry or photochemistry of the average text book hardly gives one an adequate idea of the complex problems which have to be studied and mastered in the attempt to improve photographic materials and processes, and in pointing the way for further advances in the future. These important questions bearing on the chemical properties and reactions of photographic materials and processes, respectively, have nowadays to be looked at from the viewpoint of physical chemistry, and the chemistry sections consequently form an important integral of the Research Laboratory, the investigation of chemical problems representing a large share of its activities. The equipment of these chemical laboratories, therefore, is second to that of no other department in completeness and costliness.

While the physico-chemical laboratory proper is on the second floor of the research institution, there is a specially equipped room on the third floor, opposite the process studio, where some important work has been undertaken. This department is equipped with thermostats and other apparatus necessary in the study of photographic development, and experiments have been undertaken on the measurement of the "reduction potential" of developers, which may be considered as a measure of the latent ability of a developer to reduce silver bromide. The reduction potentials of various developers are determined by measuring the voltage of a hydrogen electrode when placed in various developing solutions, thus if we take the potential of hydroquinone, for instance, as unity, definite values may be assigned to other developing reagents, as a result of comparisons, and it is consequently possible to classify developers in this way. Sensitometers are installed in this department, and some useful data has been secured and published on the sensitometry of photographic intensification. The published results of this latter investigation will be again referred to in due course.

When we consider the huge part played by colloids in photography it is apparent that here is a vast and important field for exploration, and we turn next to the physico-chemical laboratory, on the second floor, where fortunes are represented by the equipment necessary to the quantitative investigation of the properties of the colloid substances used in photography. The physico-chemical laboratory is in charge of Dr. S. E. Sheppard, who, it will be recalled, is co-author with Dr. Mees of "Investigations on the Theory of the Photographic Process." The experiments carried out in the physico-chemical laboratory are frequently of very intricate nature, and a large part of the apparatus used is of individual design and specially manufactured for the Research Laboratory, so that it would be impossible from our own observations to give an adequate description. Dr. Sheppard, however, has kindly written for this article a description of the more interesting phases of the work undertaken by his department, which will give an idea of its importance. Dr. Sheppard writes:

"The physical chemistry laboratory is concerned with those interrelations of physics and chemistry which bear on photographic manufacture and processes. In particular colloid chemistry forms the nucleus of this activity, and the Laboratory has developed special apparatus and technic in this direction.

"Viscosimetry, the measurement of the internal friction of fluids, is of importance for collodions, gelatines, gelatine emulsions, and for the 'dope' from which film support is made. For less viscous materials such as collodions and gelatine sols, capillary tube viscosimeters calibrated under constant pressure are used, while a large precision instrument has been constructed, taking greater quantities of liquid, in which a rotating cylinder is driven at constant speed about an inner suspended cylinder, the deviation of this being measured as with a galvanometer. For very viscous materials, such as dope, the fall of uniform spheres is utilized; a paper on the conditions for obtaining absolute values in this way has been published by the Kodak Research Laboratory.[10] Electrically controlled thermostats are used to secure the different constant temperatures required.

"Kindred properties to viscosity are: surface tension, cohesion and the strength (elasticity) of gels. Since not only gelatine jelly but collodion and film are colloid gels, it has been necessary to devise apparatus for determining jelly strength, and this is done by measuring the force necessary to just rupture a uniform cylinder on twisting at a steady rate.

"The swelling and drying of such colloids as gelatine, film, etc., offer many problems. Expansion under a small load when wetted is measured by recording instruments. For very minute expansions or swellings a sensitive instrument termed a micro-odometer has been devised. In this instrument the small swelling just tilts one arm of a sensitive counterpoised balance. This tilt is compensated by moving the balance pivot on a micrometer until equilibrium is reached, the deflection being made differential by reflection of a fixed scale from mirrors at the ends of the balance arms, and these reflected images further being suitably magnified. Investigations have also been made on the permeability to water of colloids and fabrics, and a paper on the physical chemistry of the reticulation of gelatine is in preparation.

"Centrifugal separation is of great importance in the analysis of colloids, and the Laboratory is provided with centrifuges working up to 40,000 r.p.m. Many practical problems in manufacturing recovery have been solved on these lines. The opposite to centrifugal (or mechanical) separation is emulsification, and the principle of the laboratory is, what cannot be dissolved can be emulsified.

"There have also been prepared varnishes for wet-plate collodion and for lantern slides.

"Besides this type of work, touching mostly manufacture, and therefore little amenable to publicity, many features of photographic processes are only comprehensible by way of colloid chemistry. The sensitive silver halide starts life as a colloid in a colloid—it may relax to the crystal line state in negative emulsions, but in any case receives a colloid latent image, and forms a colloid upon development, and all other photographic images are colloidal. Now the reactivity and stability of these images, as well as their texture or "graininess," are largely determined by the influence of electrolytes. These relations and the retention of electrolytes are studied not only by direct chemical methods, but also electrically by measurements of electric conductivity and potential.

"Besides the electrical properties of colloids, their dispersity or subdivision is of chief importance. The units of colloid chemistry are not invisible atoms and molecules, but just perceptible ultramicroscopic particles, which aggregate in different ways to microscopic granules and grains. The Research Laboratory is provided with a Siedentopf-Zsigmondy slit ultra-microscope, as well as various dark-field illuminators, which are used to standardize inorganic hydrosols—solutions of colloidal metals such as gold and silver, and of oxides, halides, etc., which are of use as colloid chemical reagents.

"At a coarser microscopic level, blood-corpuscle counting methods, with the haemacylometer, have been adapted to counting the grains in emulsions, while nephelometers and turbidimeters have been devised for analytically determining the amount of suspended matter from its light scattering power.

Colloid chemical investigation of the composition and constitution of the developed image incidentally revealed the fact that iron plays a catalytic part in persulphate reduction."[11]

Rivalling in interest the physico-chemical laboratory are the various departments of the physical laboratory, which are likewise on the second floor of the research institution. The first of these divisions to claim our attention is the spectroscopic laboratory where the relationships of visible radiation and photography are investigated with the view to increasing the already extensive use of photography as a means of recording the physical data which interest the astronomer, the spectroscopist, and a wide circle of investigators in other branches of science.

The spectroscopic laboratory is equipped with a large selection of precise and up-to-date instruments for this class of work, the largest being a diffraction spectrograph of the Littrow auto-collimation type equipped with a Rowland grating. In the auto-collimation type of spectrograph the beam of light to be analyzed proceeds from the slit to a lens, which renders it parallel, and then falls on the grating, which reflects it back through the lens so that the spectrum falls upon the photographic plate placed just below the slit, thus producing the desired record.

For work in the invisible ultra-violet region there is a large spectrograph equipped with a prism and lenses of quartz that transmit those short waves to which glass is opaque, while two other spectroscopes are specially designed for measuring the sensitiveness of photographic materials to the spectrum, and for determining the absorption of light of the various colors by colored solutions or light-filters.

While the Kodak Research Laboratory is mainly supplied with 220- and 110-volt direct current, the spectroscopic laboratory is also supplied with alternating current, which is required for the vacuum tubes and for the production of spark spectra. This alternating current is generated by a rotary converter and stepped up to the required potential by high-tension transformers.

Much important work has been accomplished in this department of the Research Laboratory, but space prevents us from dwelling at length on the various investigations conducted along this line. Particularly interesting, however, is the paper describing the use of "A Compensating Filter in Spectroscopy"[12] of which some mention may be made here.

In many special investigations it would be desirable to have a photographic emulsion which would yield equal densities in the developed negative over a wide spectral region at one and the same exposure, when the light source being analyzed gives a continuous spectrum. Although an emulsion possessing this desirable characteristic is not available, it was found by several investigators that if the spectrum of the light source used was first photographed on a panchromatic plate of the brand to be used, exposing through the glass, and the resultant negative placed in contact (film to film) with another plate of the same variety, this initial negative would act as a filter giving the desired compensation in the final spectrum exposure, or in other words it will yield equal densities throughout the range of the spectrum recorded, in the second exposure. Although, as previously mentioned, this method of equalizing the intensity at various wavelengths had been described on several occasions, no discussion of the photographic laws controlling its action was published until the appearance of the paper cited.

In the laboratory's explanation of the action of this type of comensating filter for use in spectroscopy it is pointed out that the photographic requirements of the case will be satisfied when:

$$D\lambda = \gamma\lambda \ (log\ I\lambda + log\ S\lambda)$$ provided $\gamma\lambda = 1$ for all wave-lengths and $S\lambda$ is the same for both the plate on which the filter negative is photographed and for the plate which is exposed behind it. In the above equation $D\lambda$ represents the photographic density produced by the radiation of intensity $I\lambda$; γ is, as usual, the development factor or contrast in the resulting plates (determined by development and to some extent by the color of the exposing light) and $S\lambda$ is the speed of the emulsion.

As the toe and the shoulder, i. e., the under- and over-exposure portions of the H. and D. characteristic curve, of a plate do not satisfy the equation above, it is apparent that these portions cannot be used in making a correctly performing filter of the type now being considered, but from the preceding in it seen that a correct filter will be secured (other things being right) if the filter and the record plate (exposed behind it to the spectrum) are of the same emulsion; if the negative deposit comprising the filter is of a neutral color; if all the densities comprising the filter lie on the straight-line portion (period of correct exposure) of the plate curve, and lastly if the gamma is unity for all wave-lengths.

If the spectral transmission of a colored filter is now measured by exposing a plate behind such a compensating filter, and if all the conditions laid down are complied with, the reciprocals of the transmissions of the plate are proportional to the transmissions of the colored filter, thus the densities of the record plate at the various wave-lengths are in close enough agreement with the extinction-coefficients of the colored filter for the same wave-lengths to recommend the use of these compensating filters in quantitative work.

Leonard's Motor Grease Becoming Widely Used

THE introduction of motor-drives on projectors relieved operators of a very onerous burden, but many operators do not treat their faithful servant, the motor, with all due consideration.

The character and quality of the lubricant used on a motor will greatly influence the efficiency of its performance, and the injudicious use of vaseline, graphite and light oil have been responsible for the ruination of many projection machine motors.

This fact was long ago noted by Mr. L. A. Ruess, chief electrician of the Nicholas Power Co., who has charge of the repair work on all electrical apparatus issued by that firm, and who attributes the majority of small motor troubles to improper lubrication.

Mr. Ruess, accordingly instituted a series of experiments with motor lubricants, as a result of which he evolved a special compound of oils, greases and powders, which he decided to market under the name of Leonard's Motor and Gear Grease.

This compound has proven very suitable for the purposes intended, i. e., the lubrication of projection machine motors and the gears of motion picture machines, and the preparation is now being handled by more than 200 motion picture supply houses. The sales of Leonard's Motor and Gear Grease have mounted to about 100,000 cans in the past year and a half, which apparently indicates that the compound is making good in its field.

Queen, Corpus Christi, Texas, Uses A. C. Arc for Projection

THE management of the Queen theatre, Corpus Christi, Texas, advises us that instead of their using Mazda lamps for motion picture projection, as was recently stated in the advertising pages of the NEWS, they are using carbon arcs, the current being A. C., and satisfactory results secured through the use of White A. C. Special carbons.

Music for Indian Pictures

THE time when Indian pictures were predominating the market of American film manufacturing is past. Years ago when film manufacturing was in its infancy, Indian pictures were an every-day feature, but today the short subject, the one and two-reel picture is not the main part of the performance, it is booked in most cases to simply fill the program.

A topical review, a five-reel feature, a short one or two-reel subject and a comedy is the most popular theatre program today. The five-reel picture is always the feature of the day, and the theatre management as well as musicians always concentrate their best efforts on that subject. Indian features, five or six-reel pictures of Indian character, are a rarity in these days, but when it reaches your theatre don't forget it is the most important part of the program, it is the feature of the day, and the first thing you will be looking for is Indian Music. You cannot fake the American in this field; every American knows the sound of Indian music, you cannot fake your way through a five-reel or full hour performance, and it is to your advantage to own a representative amount of Indian music, as note the following:

1—Four Indian Love Lyrics, by Amy Woodfords Finden.
1. The Temple Bells (4/4 Allegretto).

Send Instruments to Camps

THE Fosdick Commission of the War Department, through the National Federation of Musical Clubs, has sent an urgent appeal for the surplus music and spare musical instruments to assist in recreational activities in the great training camps throughout the country. There is much music that one throws away every year, and there is nearly always a discarded instrument or two about the house or in the studio that might well be given to the soldiers and sailors. All kinds of songs have been asked for—good popular and classical songs, familiar ballads and "home songs," college song books, comic and light opera scores, men's choruses, etc. Every kind of instrumental music, both popular and classical, is in demand for piano, violin, mandolin, guitar, banjo, ukulele, etc. All kinds of instruments in usable condition are wanted by the boys in training—violins, mandolins, guitars, banjos, cornets, clarinets, etc.

Ince Writes Lyrics for a Song

Simultaneously with the release of "Claws of the Hun," a Paramount picture starring Charles Ray, Victor Schertzinger, Mr. Ray's director, finished composing a song apropos to the story. It will be known as "I'm Giving You to Uncle Sam," and no less a personage than Thomas H. Ince, the producer, is responsible for the lyrics. This is not the first time Mr. Schertzinger and Mr. Ince have collaborated. The former, who achieved an enviable reputation as a musician before entering the directorial circles of filmdom, composed the incidental music and the famous "Peace March" for the great Ince spectacle, "Civilization," and Mr. Ince furnished the words; and, likewise, they were associated in writing the song, "Peggy," which was published at the time Billie Burke made her screen debut under Mr. Ince's direction in a drama of the same name. Their new effort, which bids fair to become one of the most popular of wartime melodies, was sung for the first time at Grauman's New Million Dollar theatre, in Los Angeles, this week, where "Claws of the Hun" was presented as the feature attraction.

New Allen Theatre Opens in Brandon

STILL another handsome new theatre was added to the Allen chain in Canada with the opening of the Allen at Brandon, Manitoba, on July 14. The house was completed within ninety days from the time work started, a really remarkable achievement, especially when one considers the scarcity of material in war time.

The new house, which is under the management of A. J. McKelvie, occupies a plot 50 by 120 feet at 113 Eighth street, in the heart of the business section. The house is constructed of brick, with a pressed brick and terra cotta front. There is a large tiled vestibule and corridor and a roomy carpeted foyer with ladies' room, smoking room, etc. It seats 768.

The lobby of the theatre is finished in hardwood, marble and tile, the color scheme harmonizing with that of the interior of the house, which is in rose, white and gold, with the ceiling in flower design. Exits are artificially arranged so as to be in keeping with the general style of the house.

The blower system is used for ventilating and steam from the central heating plant will be used in winter. The lighting of the house is indirect. Two Powers 6-b machines are used for projection of ninety feet to a plaster screen, which is set in an artistic stage effect.

In the lobby there are cases for the display of photos built in the walls of the vestibule, while brass frames are used for the paper displays. Automatic ticket seller and cash register system is used.

There are three changes of program a week at the Allen, four shows of eight reels each being given daily. Admission prices are five and fifteen cents in the afternoon and ten and twenty cents in the evening. Paramount, Artcraft and Select pictures are used.

Manager McKelvie is banking a great deal on the real service that he is giving his patrons. Such things as checking parcels, supplying ice water and careful attention to all the patrons' comforts are made most important.

An overture or a musical selection is being featured with each show, with the whole lighting effects to harmonize. There is a four-piece orchestra, together with piano and organ.

Kansas City Theatre to Seat Over 2,000

WORK will be started in a few days on the third theatre of Frank L. Newman in Kansas City. It will not only be the handsomest in the Missouri city, but it will rank among the finest in the whole country.

The new theatre will be fireproof, of steel and concrete construction and as high as a six-story building. The general design will be along the lines of the Italian Renaissance. The exterior will be in stone or terra cotta with a colonnade treatment across the entire front. There will be 2,000 extra wide seats and two rows of loges with large lounging chairs.

The interior design will be of the Renaissance period and marble and tile will be extensively used. The color scheme will be in old gold, old rose, old blue and brown.

The building was designed and will be erected under the supervision of H. Alexander Drake, the architect who planned the other Newman theatres.

It is expected the theatre will be completed in time for a grand opening Christmas week. The orchestra of the new playhouse will be extra large, to accommodate a 35-piece orchestra, which Leo F. Forbstein is organizing.

Mr. Newman intends to spare no expense or trouble in heating, ventilating and cooling the theatre. There will be elaborate rest rooms and a nursery. And between the first floor and the balcony will be a large mezzanine floor promenade which will be furnished as salon for both men and women. There will be a fountain and many other features.

According to Mr. Newman, the theatre will occupy the most expensive site of any motion picture theatre in the country.

Parkview, Johnstown, Remodeled

JOHNSTOWN, PA., has a handsome theatre in the Parkview, which was remodeled and reopened during the latter part of February. It is owned by the Grand Amusement Company, in which George and Peter Panagotacos are the principal stockholders.

The theatre is located in the heart of the business district, at No. 536 Main street, and occupies a plot 132 by 38 feet. It seats about 800. The building is fireproof in construction, the interior being constructed of steel lath and plaster. The interior is plainly finished in two shades of maroon, while there is an elaborate setting for the screen.

The building is heated by steam, with the blower type of ventilating system. The lighting system is direct. Two Simplex machines are used for a throw of 120 feet to a Minusa screen. A three-piece orchestra furnishes the music.

In the lobby gilt display frames furnished by Menger and Ring are used. The lobby is 27 feet wide and 15 feet deep.

The Parkview changes its program three times a week, using about all of the services, since the Grand Amusement Company also controls the Nemo, Grand and Victoria theatres and is able to interchange services. There are from seven to nine shows each day, starting at 10.30 a. m.

Newspaper is the chief means of advertising. Billboards are used for pure house advertising and occasionally on some special attraction.

"Better materials for exploitation of pictures, particularly cuts for use in newspaper advertising," is the chief improvement asked by the Parkview of the producers and distributors.

Frank Houston is manager of the theatre and L. W. Barclay advertising manager.

In and Out of West Coast Studios

By J. C. Jessen

Vitagraph News Bits

Stephen W. Smith, father of Albert E. Smith, the Vitagraph president, paid a visit to his other two sons, W. S. Smith and David Smith, at the company's Hollywood plant. The former is manager of the studio and the latter is directing Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendon in a Blue Ribbon feature, "The Changing Woman."

William Duncan's company has been working until midnight for several recent nights making tunnel scenes for the Vitagraph serial, "A Fight for Millions." The Pantages vaudeville houses of Los Angeles and the West Coast cities and Northwest have booked "A Fight for Millions," directed and starred in by Duncan.

Larry Semon is planning to take his Big V comedy company to the Big Bear district to make a feud picture. "All the serial companies go up there, so why not us?" calmly asks this comedy director. As there is no reason to compare a serial and a one-reel comedy, so also there is no reason to try to tell Larry Semon why the Big Bear country is not good for the making of comedies. In fact, this country should offer Mr. Semon big opportunities in the way of new nature sets and new Semon comedy thrills.

A set comprising six connecting rooms is one of the impressive objects of interest at the Vitagraph studio. One would immediately suppose that so imposing a set was made for use by one of the dramatic companies working on the lot. On the contrary, however, the set is built especially for Larry Semon's use in a Big V comedy.

The Montgomery and Rock comedy company, which makes one-reel Big V offerings, is working on location in Chatsworth Park. Director Howe and his comedians have just completed the beach picture, to which they gave the euphonious title of "Peaches and Parades."

Live Triangle Items

There is to be a material increase in production at the Tirangle studio if one may judge from the number of directors engaged. Henry Otto, E. Mason Hopper and Jack Conway are among those contracted during the past week to begin work July 22. Mr. Otto is to be remembered for a number of highly artistic subjects, including "Undine" made for the Universal, and also subjects for other well known companies. Mr. Conway, up until a few weeks ago, was a member of the Triangle directorial staff, but more recently has been directing Earle Williams and Grace Darmond in a subject for Vitagraph. E. Mason Hopper goes to Triangle upon the completion of his subject starring Bert Lytell, which he is now making for Metro. Mr. Mason also was formerly of the directorial staff at the Culver City studios. The fourth new director to begin work about July 22 will be Lawrence Wyndham, who will arrive from the East during the coming week, accompanying Taylor Holmes, recently signed by the Triangle.

Harry Mestayer, seen in a number of Selig subjects made about two years ago, who has since been on the speaking stage, is again to work in pictures, and has been engaged by the Triangle.

The first film to be made under the direction of Henry Otto will be titled "Wild Life," and feature William Desmond, with Josie Sedgwick playing the opposite lead. This is a western subject and the supporting cast will include Ed. Brady, Dot Hagar and Curly Baldwin.

The Cliff Smith-Roy Steward Company of seventeen people, is back from spending a week at San Juan Capistrano, where scenes were filmed for the story of California life titled "Untamed," which is by Kenneth B. Clark, author of "Until They Get Me."

At the Ince Plant

All of the Ince companies are at work on new productions, which means activities on this lot are far above normal, inasmuch as all departments are decidedly busy. None of the new subjects now in production has been named, with the exception of that adapted from the Louis Joseph Vance story, "False Faces," which will be issued under that title.

Charles Ray is working in a story by C. Gardner Sullivan, with Victor Schertzinger as director.

Fred Niblo continues as director of Enid Bennett, who takes the role in another story of the type of "Naughty, Naughty!" which has to do with the experiences of a little actress who takes the role of Little Eva in an Uncle Tom show playing the small towns.

Irvin Willat and Jerome Storm are to be co-directors of the company headed by Henry Walthall in "False Faces." This it is definitely announced will be a special Paramount or Artcraft release.

Dorothy Dalton has arrived home from her vacation trip to New York with an array of new gowns, a number of which are to be introduced in her next film, which is to be an adaptation from the H. H. Van Loan story titled "The Cross of Shame" (working title), continuity of which has been written by C. Gardner Sullivan. Edmond Lowe has been selected as leading man for Miss Dalton, and R. William Neill is the director. This play will introduce a new child actress, seven years old, Clarice Duncan, an Australian girl, who has had considerable theatrical experience, but who has never played for the screen.

The F.P.-Lasky Studio

Mary Anderson is to take the part of Ruth, the servant girl, the featured feminine role in the second Fred Stone play now being directed by Donald Crisp, "Johnnie Get Your Gun," adapted from the stage play of the same name. Originally it was announced Ella Hall would take this role, but Miss Anderson was engaged and has now played in a number of scenes. Another important role is that of Bill Burnham, which will be played by Hart Hoxie, Burnham being the cowboy pal of Johnnie Riggins. Raymond Hatton is cast for the role of the heavy.

The first Ethel Clayton Paramount story is completed, and has been titled "The Girl Who Came Back." In addition to Elliot Dexter, as leading man, Theodore Roberts and James Neill play important roles in this Americanized version of the Polish play.

Vivian Martin and Wallace Reid are still on their vacations, and no name has been given for the coming Cecil B. De Mille subject now in production, it has been announced.

About Metro Players

With her first Western made subject, "The Return of Mary," completed, May Allison, within the next few days, will begin work in "The Testing of Mildred Vaine," in which Darrel Foss will continue as her leading man. This, as well as her first picture, will be made under the direction of Wilfred Lucas. The new photoplay was written by Charles Turner Dazey, and has to do with the influence or effect of the living on the dead, the story being based on the occult theory that the dead suffer the same as the living.

No decision has been reached with reference to what picture Bert Lytell will next appear in. He is now working in the final scenes for "Unexpected Places," which will be the last one directed by E. Mason Hopper.

Universal Newsettes

Universal City is in the hands of a new man, but not to remain so permanently, for Henry McRae, manager of production, is merely on a vacation. In his absence, Thomas Nash, for seven years manager of Selig Productions made in the West, is serving as substitute for Mr. McRae.

Eliot Clawson, author of a number of highly successful stories and photoplays for Universal, including "The Kaiser, Beast of Berin," and who also prepared the continuity for the Henry Dodge story, "The Yellow Dog," has been named manager of the continuity department at Universal, which is a new office. Mr. Clawson has been identified with the film industry for more than five years, and has served some of the biggest producing organizations of the West Coast, in addition to writing more than a score of continuities and many original plays for the Universal.

"A Billion in Beans" is the present title given an Edith Roberts photoplay, written by Rex Taylor, recent addition to the Universal scenario forces. The title indicates it might be a patriotic story in which some one attempts to aid Uncle Sam produce the unpopular portion of army food, but such is not the case. The play is a comedy drama. William E. Lawrence, former leading man for Fannie Ward in Pathe subjects, will play opposite Edith Roberts, and Jack Dillon is the director.

Fritzi Brunette is next to be featured in an F. McGrew Willis adaptation, "Bendetta's Daughter," which will be filmed by Douglas Gerrard. This is from the story by Edith Bernard Delane, of the Italian quarter of a large city. Cast has not been selected.

Mae Murray has begun work on what will be her last subject under her present contract with the Universal, which is named "The Scarlet Strain." Only the preliminary scenes have been made by Director Robert Leonard, and as yet no definite cast selection has been made. The authors of this story are Lorraine Fountaine and Cathrine Robbins.

Here and There

William S. Hart has begun work on the first picture for his second year's appearance on the Artcraft program, and after spending several days in the mountains, has gone to San Diego with his entire troop, where they will spend ten days filming scenes in which the 159th Infantry at Camp Kearny, known as Bill Hart's Two-Gun Men will take part.

A number of changes have been made in the Hart producing plant which provide for the manufacturing of all stills and the editing of his pictures there. Le Roy Stone, who has "cut" practically all of the Hart subjects, will be at the head of this department. A number of other improvements have been made at the studio, which provide commodious quarters for several departments.

The Mack Sennett Studios, making comedies for Paramount, is to materially change its policy of production, and a new organization for the scenario department is being affected. Just what changes will take place has not been made known, but it was reported by officials of the studio this week, that Hampton Del Ruth, who has been editor and production manager, affiliated with the Sennett organization for five years, together with John Grey, who has been his principal assistant, have tendered their resignations. Who the successors of these men will be is not announced, nor has Mr. Del Ruth made any statement as to his future affiliation.

There are several changes in the personnel of the Sennett stock company. Myrtle Lind, who was formerly seen in Sennett Comedies, has returned to this studio, as has also Harry McCoy. McCoy will play juvenile leads in future Sennett Comedies instead of wearing comedy make-up as he did in the two years he was with this producing company before.

Miss Polly Moran, who has for three years played in Sennett Comedies following a successful career in vaudeville and on the stage, has completed her contract and leaves the Sennett organization July 22 to return to vaudeville.

Rollin Sturgeon, who made a name for himself in the production of outdoor stories for Vitagraph, is to film plays of this description for the Universal, and his first will be that in which Monroe Salisbury is starred. It is titled "Hugon the Mighty," and will have an atmosphere of the Canadian Northwest.

Carmel Meyer will arrive in Los Angeles the coming Sunday, and everything is in readiness for the filming of "The Duchess of Dark Entry." Continuity for this has been prepared.

AUGUST 3, 1918 NEWS MORE NEWS

JUST TO PROVE THE SURFACE HAS NOT BEEN SCRATCHED

May Allison arrived in town one morning at nine o'clock from New York, and an hour later had make-up on, and was working in front of the camera. May kept right on doing this for two weeks, and in all of that time she never had a moment to use for shopping. But this week the last scenes of May's picture were taken, and she went right out and shopped, and shopped and shopped.

The mail brung this lone piece of publicity under three-cent postage when two would have done, all the way from the office of a high-salaried P. A. in Hollywood. Words fail us, say them yourself.

"Who wants a dog—Alaskan malamute—formerly of Colonel Peary's Sled Team, apply Douglas Fairbanks, Hollywood California." The above appeared in the last week's want ad columns of a Los Angeles paper. To help clear matters, allow us to explain that Douglas bought two Alaskan dogs, "Rex" and "Bob." For some reason or other they don't get along. Fairbanks presented "Bob" to Charlie Chaplin and two days later he came home. Bill Hart wouldn't have him because the dog insisted upon walking into dramatic scenes.

A new order must prevail this season, for no publicity pertaining to the spraying devices used at a certain Hollywood studio has been sent out. It may be that the entire studio has been screened in, which leads to the conclusion that such a move would not be bad. Surely it would prevent flies from annoying the waiting actors and actorines who bask in the California sunshine.

Metro may or may not wish to lay claim to the circus atmosphere, but at least some efficiency man long ago caused the big top to be spread over the entire stage and there held in place by a poleless arrangement.

NEWSY ITEMS FROM THE STUDIOS

Pauline Frederick, Star in Goldwyn Pictures

Alec Budd Francis is again supporting Mae Marsh, this time in the role of a physician, in "Hidden Fires." Mr. Francis, in the last few months, has become a much hoped for character whenever a new Goldwyn picture is released.

The funny part of it is that Rod La Roque is that actor's own perfectly good name. His father was a Frenchman, voila—La Roque. Despite the fact that he is only nineteen and that he has just made his debut on the east coast in "The Venus Model," he has appeared in numerous Essanay pictures in Chicago, among them "Efficiency Elgar's Courtship."

Milton Sills, accompanied by Thomas Santschi, will join the Geraldine Farrar-Goldwyn company in Cody, Wyoming, where most of the scenes for "The Hell-Cat" are to be located. Mr. Sills has been in Los Angeles playing opposite Clara Kimball Young for the last few months, while Mr. Santschi is a well known coast actor.

Lou Tellegen having completed his tour in "Blind Youth," is accompanying Miss Farrar to Wyoming, where he will vacation while she works.

Normand Lusk of the Goldwyn office is traveling with the Farrar company as special publicity representative.

Mabel Normand is greatly elated, as she just received word that brother Claude landed safely in France.

Madge Kennedy and company have spent some time at Lake George, filming scenes for "The Kingdom of Youth."

George Irving has nearly finished his second Goldwyn picture, "Hidden Fires," in which Mae Marsh is the star.

Corrinne Barker, who made her first Goldwyn appearance in "Money Mad," is now supporting Mabel Normand in "Peck's Bad Girl."

So changed was Dell Boone by the wig which her part in "The Turn of the Wheel" called for, that many of her Goldwyn studio friends didn't recognize her at all while she was supporting Geraldine Farrar in this picture.

Tex Charwate has furnished two as different scenarios as one can imagine, in "The Turn of the Wheel," Farrar's starring vehicle, and "Peck's Bad Girl," Mabel Normand's newest picture.

Earle Foxe, of Pathe serial fame, plays the lead opposite Mabel Normand in "Peck's Bad Girl." His big blonde six-foot self makes an attractive contrast to Miss Normand's dark slender little self.

Edward Jose will direct Caruso in his first film for Paramount. It is quite fitting that Monsieur Jose should be entrusted with this production, as his is the background of a continental study of music, which can not fail to put him in greater sympathy with his star than a director who lacked this training. Monsieur Jose has also directed such celebrities as Antoine and Mme. Bernhardt in Paris, before he came to America.

Carolina White will appear opposite Caruso. She is an opera and concert singer of note, who has never been seen on the screen.

Florence Malone, featured in the serial, "The Yellow Menace," is playing with Louise Huff in her second World picture, "The Sea Waif." Miss Malone is particularly well known on the stage for her work in H. B. Harris productions.

"We Can't Have Everything," Cecil De Mille's latest Artcraft, shows on the screen three of the most attractive girls in pictures, all of whom are finished actresses in the true sense of the word. They are Kathlyn Williams, Wanda Hawley and Sylvia Breamer. Each is a distinctive type and each will appeal in her own way.

Roy Sommerville, it is rumored, has branched out into the directing end of the game and has started on a propaganda picture.

William Dangman, formerly connected with Vitagraph, has just completed a ten-reel serial, "The Secret Tube," with Grace Davison in the leading role.

Anita King, now a Plaza Picture star, who Constance Talmadge Doesn't Display the Hosiery In This Closeup from Select's "A Pair of Silk Stockings," But—Who Cares?

gained all sorts of fame for driving from California to New York alone, in her motor, with a message from the mayor of San Francisco to the mayor of New York, is reported to have another stunt of similar nature, which she is going to pull off in the near future.

Ricca Allen, "Buyer from Indiana" in "Our Mrs. McChesney," has a niece in the Red Cross Service in France who was torpedoed on her way over. Her letters remind Miss Allen of the times she herself was traveling in Africa in the time of the Boer War.

Famous Players' publicity bureau have doped it out that the titles of the most successful pictures of the year have begun with the letter H.

John Bowers will play opposite Louise Huff in her next World picture, "The Sea Waif." Exteriors are now being taken for it down on the Jersey coast.

Fifteen young women of Wilmington, N. C. will make their picture debut in the World picture, "Pirates' Gold," featuring Montague Love. They were added to the cast in the scenes which were taken at Cypress Swamps near Wilmington.

Guy Coombs, after finishing with Viola Dana in "Flower of the Dusk," started work with Catherine Calvert in her next F. A. Keeney picture.

Harry C. Browne, one of the two leading men in "The Inn of the Blue Moon," Doris Kenyon's second picture, is appearing in the musical comedy, "Oh Lady, Lady." Last week a theatre party was given in Miss Kenyon's honor, to all the principals in the cast of this picture, at the Casino theatre, where "Oh Lady, Lady" is being presented.

Sergeant Guy Empey has been made a captain in the U. S. Army. It is believed that he will first be assigned to duty as a recruiting officer because of his experience as a fighter and as a lecturer.

Ralph Ince's contract with Metro has been extended to include the direction of Hale Hamilton in "Five Thousand an Hour," the adaptation from the novel by George Randolph Chester.

Lillian Walker's new picture, "The Embarrassment of Riches," by Louis Anspacher, has been started at the Thanhouser studios in New Rochelle. Edward Dillon is directing.

Paul Everton, one of the principals in the Wharton war picture, "The Eagle's Eye," will appear in support of Madge Kennedy in "Friend Husband."

Rockcliffe Fellows, that well-set-up young Canadian, is leading man for Madge Kennedy in "Friend Husband." His splendid work opposite Ethel Clayton in her many feature pictures has made him one of the most popular of the stage stars who now devote their time to pictures.

E. K. Lincoln is spending a few weeks vacationing on his New England estate, having finished "LaFayette, We Come." Both he and Dolores Cassinelli will appear in the next Leonce Perret picture.

Mabel Turner Gordon is becoming one of the most familiar screen society women on Broadway. She was seen the same week at the Strand in "The Service Star," and, at the Rivoli in "The Danger Mark," and at another house in "The Ordeal of Rosetta." Her type of aristocratic looking, stunningly gowned gray-haired woman is demanded in nearly every society picture and is always delightfully portrayed by Miss Gordon.

Only too brief a glimpse of Nadia Gary is given in "The Death Dance.' She is an elfin-like child, whose golden curls, piquant face and vital little body are a real joy on the screen.

Here is proof that Tony Cerlo's famous make-up is as good for character parts as it is for straight parts. He was standing around waiting for a scene to begin out at Amaganset, L. I., where they were on desert location for "The Unveiling Hand." A woman came up to him, and said that she and her friends were trying to decide whether his beard was a fake one or his own, but now that she had seen him at close range she knew that it was his own. As he left her to join a group of extras, real Arabs, engaged for the picture, one of them addressed him in Arabic.

Charles Ray in Comedy-Drama, "A Nine O'Clock Town"—Ribbon Clerk to Manager

(Paramount Five-Reel Production)

Charles Ray, whom all admire for his excellent characterizations on the screen, is coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in his latest picture for the Paramount program, "A Nine O'Clock Town," written and directed by Victor L. Schertzinger, who has been identified with Mr. Ray, as director, in his biggest successes on the screen. Mr. Ray is one of the cleverest leading juvenile actors on the screen and won a berth in the list of Paramount stars because of his ability to "put over" a characterization before the camera. In "A Nine O'Clock Town," he is given opportunity to enact some real, live comedy, as manager of a drygoods store in a small city, after he had graduated from the men's scarf counter in one of the big metropolitan department stores. His graduation was premature because he insisted upon showing up in the morning late and with little pep. He commences his new duties as manager of the small-town store with all the vim and ginger he could muster and starts the ball rolling by employing a very smart little corset model, and starting a sale. But the vampire lady, who has been the cause of his downfall in the big city, appears on the scene and tells him that if he will go to the hotel that night to see her, she will return the watch of which she relieved him. He goes there and is met by the vampire lady's husband, who demands a few thousand to keep the matter quiet. Then the little corset model steps in and recognizes the vamp's "husband" as her honest-to-goodness husband and the tables are turned.

Doug. Fairbanks Is Back with Us Again —This Time "Bound in Morocco"

(Artcraft Five-Reel Production)

Now comes Doug. Fairbanks' latest comedy thriller, "Bound in Morocco." Doug. needs no introduction to the patrons of the ——— theatre or to the patrons of the thousands of theatres scattered throughout the United States and Europe. He is as familiar as the Bible and as welcome in one of his inimitable screen dramas as "the flowers in May." Allan Dwan is both author and director of this, Doug.'s latest screen work, and Director Dwan has certainly turned out a commendable brand of work, both as to originality and interest sustaining entertainment on the screen. Mr. Dwan will be remembered in the directorial lines, for his production of "A Modern Musketeer" and "Mr. Fix-It." Mr. Fairbanks' recent works. "Bound in Morocco" is no less worthy the praise of press and public than these two. Doug. will please as he always pleased—with stunts, the million-dollar smile and all the dramatic ability that is the boast of our biggest star of stage or screen. In his support in his latest work are seen Pauline Curley, Edythe Chapman, Tully Marshall, Frank Campeau, Jay Dwiggins and Fred Burns. Miss Curley will be remembered for her work in support of Harold Lockwood in some of his best pictures. Tully Marshall is an old favorite and Frank Campeau has been seen in all of Fairbanks' successes. The action of "Bound in Morocco," as the title indicates, is laid in Africa, where Doug. finds a beautiful American girl held in bondage by the owner of a harem.

Ben Turpin, Polly Moran and Marie Prevost in Sennett Comedy, "She Loved Him Plenty"

(Paramount-Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

Get ready to "laugh your head off," as the slang expression goes. Ben Turpin, Charles Lynn, Polly Moran, three of Mack Sennett's best funmakers are coming to the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week, in the latest Paramount-Sennett comedy, "She Loved Him Plenty," produced in two reels, under the direction of Richard Jones. Marie Prevost—we can't name the cast without mentioning her name because she is one of the most popular comedy-beauties working before the camera. Yes, Marie is in the cast—very much in it, and so is Ed. Kennedy, who has handed out a whole lot of laughs to the American public, via the screen. Polly Moran, known as Becky O'Brien in this picture, conducts a pawn shop with Ben Turpin and Charles Lynn as her appraisers and clerks. Ben is her sweetheart and Polly sure does love him, but Ben is not quite so enthusiastic, excepting when the cash register is made to tingle, then all his love is for Becky. Marie Prevost, a gypsy girl, is chased into the pawn shop by a murderous looking gypsy. The would-be murderer is driven away by the willing clerks and Marie is given refuge in the pawn shop. This doesn't make a hit with Polly or Becky, as you will see, and the fun starts. Jealous? No, Becky isn't jealous—she just likes to have a little gypsy girl take her Ben away from her.

Alma Rubens, Triangle Star, in "False" Ambition"—Impersonates Dual Role

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Alma Rubens, considered as one of Triangle's best screen actresses, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week in her latest work before the Triangle camera, "False Ambition," written by Ed. Magnus Ingleton and produced for the Triangle program by Golbert P. Hamilton. Miss Rubens has a dual role in this offering and she puts it over with a dramatic bang. In the supporting cast are seen Peggy Pearce, Alberta Lee, Edward Peil, Walt Whitman, one of the oldest actors working before the camera; Iris Ashton, Alice Crawford, Myrtle Rishell, Lillian Langdon, Lee Phelps, Ward Caufield and Lee Hill. Miss Rubens has the role of Judith, a temptuous child in love with the blacksmith of a little fishing village. She obtains a hundred dollars from David, the young blacksmith, under the pretense of obtaining a trousseau for her wedding with him. But having obtained the money, she runs away to the city and establishes herself as Zariska, the fortune teller, to society. She keeps her identity a secret by always appearing before her patrons and in public, naively veiled. Zariska makes a rousing success of the art of fortune telling and for a time succeeds in holding the affections of a wealthy young man whom she does not love, excepting for his money. A chance meeting occurs between her and David whom she had left in the little village, and he exposes her identity.

Mabel Normand in "Back to the Woods" Comedy and Thrills Make This Best Yet

(Goldwyn Five-Reel Production)

Mabel Normand's latest combination of comedy and thrills, enacted before the camera and produced for screen presentation, "Back to the Woods," was written by J. Clarkson Miller and produced by Goldwyn Pictures under the direction of George Irving. The production is in five reels and it contains enough comedy and thrills to please and entertain the most sedate patron who comes to the ——— theatre for entertainment via the screen. Herbert Rawlinson, T. Henderson Murray and Arthur Housman are seen in the principal supporting roles and they justify the reputation they have gained for excellent work before the camera. "Back to the Woods" is a picture that every man, woman and child will enjoy and one that they will think about long after leaving the ——— theatre where it is to show ——— week. Mabel has the role of Stephanie Trent, who has tired of the society whirl and the vapid men who surround her. She wishes to meet some real red-blooded men and she gets the consent of her father to send her as a school teacher under an assumed name, to a small village near one of his logging camps. It is here that Stephanie meets Jimmie Raymond, a young man of the camp. Then the fun and thrills start and Miss Normand, in her new surroundings, gets many new surprises, principally the one which tells her that she has fallen in love with no less a personage than Jimmie. But the path of true love is often rugged, as Stephanie testifies to in "Back to the Woods."

Alice Joyce in "The Highest Bidder," a Fascinating Drama of Comedy and Pathos

(Vitagraph Five-Reel Production)

Alice Joyce's late picture on the Vitagraph program is "To the Highest Bidder," written by Florence Morse Kingsley and produced for Vitagraph under the direction of Tom Terris. In the supporting cast with Miss Joyce are seen Walter McGrail, Percy Standing, Edna Murphy, Jules Cowles, who is famous for his characterization of the negro; Mary Carry, Stephen Carr and Frank Norcross. Miss Joyce takes away the honors of this picture with flying colors and she is deserving of all the credit and praise given to her by the critics when this picture was shown for review. The story is unique. It is different, and because it is different, and has a new twist here and there to its plot, it holds a certain fascination that compels, by virtue of this uniqueness. Miss Joyce has the role of Barbara Preston, a beautiful young girl who has been left a profitable farm heavily mortgaged, by her father and mother before their death, but which has not been kept up. Stephen Jarvis holds the mortgage and presses Barbara for payment, threatening to take the farm away from her unless she pays. He tells her that if she will come as his housekeeper he will cancel the mortgage. Rather than do this, Barbara conceives the plan of offering her knowledge and service to the "highest bidder." Jarvis arranges to be the highest bidder but delays demanding Barbara's service after the auction has been held. Barbara waits patiently for her "master," but in the meantime, Jarvis has a change of heart and by his manliness, succeeds in winning her love.

Gloria Joy in Late Number of Oakdale Series, "No Children Wanted"—Strong Drama

(General Five-Reel Release)

"No Children Wanted" is the late number of the Oakdale series of five-reel dramas released by the General Film Company. Gloria Joy, Ethel Ritchie, R. Henry Grey, Edward Jobson, Neil Hardin, Mrs. Kahler, H. E. Archer, Daniel Gilfether and Ruth Lackaye are seen in the principal roles. "No Children Wanted" was directed by Sherwood McDonald. Dot Jarvis is the daughter of a father aspiring to literary honors and a mother who is society mad. She is tolerated in the household as a necessary evil and ignored by both father and mother. Her attempts to show affection toward her parents are rewarded by indignation on the part of both and she is sent off to bed without supper for her insistance in attempting to gain recognition by her parents. When she reaches the proper age she is sent away to boarding school, more with the object in view of getting rid of her than of giving her an education. The parents wish to be alone and so take an expensive apartment which bars children. During the course of events a change comes over the lives of the parents who have neglected their child and this change is brought about by Dot, who unconsciously saves her father from serious trouble. "No Children Wanted" works to a striking climax and the results obtained more than suffice for the actions of the parents toward their own child.

Edith Storey and Strong Metro Cast in Screen Version of Novel, "The Demon"

(Metro Five-Reel Production)

One of C. N. and A. M. Williamson's most popular works of fiction has been adapted to the screen and produced for Metro, under the direction of George D. Baker with Edith Storey in the stellar role. "The Demon" is the title and it presents on the screen the most popular work of these two gifted writers of contemporaneous fiction. In the supporting cast with Miss Storey are seen Lewis Cody, Charles Gerard, Virginia

Chester, Molly McConnell, Laura Winston, Fred Malatesta, Frank Deshon, Alice Howland and Ann Shaefer, one of the strongest supporting casts ever assembled by the Metro Corporation for the production of a picture. The production is in five reels and there is actionable drama every foot of the reelage. It tells the story of a young New Yorker who unexpectedly inherits the fortune of a cousin, Harold Brooks. There is no positive proof of the cousin's death. He had been living in the interior of Africa. Jim leaves New York with his tutor for Africa to discover proof, if any, concerning the disappearance of his cousin. He establishes the fact of Brooks' death. Arriving at one of the Moroccan slave markets he notices a young and beautiful girl, described as the daughter of a princess, for sale, and buys her. He learns, later, that she is the daughter of his cousin, Brooks. He informs her that all the money that he has rightfully belongs to her. She accepts on condition that he will allow her to purchase him as he had her.

"Her Moment" with Anne Luther Featured—Powerful Drama with Star Cast—Seven Reels

(General Release in Seven Reels)

"Her Moment," a powerful dramatic screen version of Samuel London's best novel, produced by Authors' Photoplay Company and released on the General Film program, features Anne Luther, the beautiful star of former Triangle features. The picture was made under the direction of Frank Beal. In the supporting cast are seen Alida Jones, William Lowrey, one of our most talented character men; Bert Hadley, another popular character actor; J. L. Franck, Anne Schaefer, Leon Kent and Murdock McQuarrie, known to millions of picture patrons for his excellent work in character roles. "Her Moment" tells one of the most appealing and fascinating stories ever produced for review on the screen. It is in seven reels and there are seven reels of powerful dramatic exposition. The action in the initial reels is laid in a small rural town of Roumania, here Katinka and Jan, sweethearts, live. Jan is an ambitious young fellow and gives all his time to the reading of books. He is recommended for a scholarship to one of the American universities and graduates as an engineer. Katinka has been left behind in the little Roumanian village. Her father is an habitual drinker and bargains with an unscrupulous trader for his daughter. Katinka is taken to another country as a maid to a gambler's wife, presumably. In reality, she is his mistress. Years pass and Jan has become a successful engineer. He is sent to Arizona to open a mine. Katinka's master has been driven from the country and after traveling in many lands, arrives in Arizona, where he makes a living by gambling. Katinka sees Jan for the first time in many years, under peculiar circumstances. Her master is killed by a friend of Katinka and she goes to New York, where Jan has gone, to find him. They are united.

Charles Murray with Support of Famous Sennett Comedians in "Her Blighted Love"

(Paramount-Sennett Comedy—Two Reels)

Charles Murray, Wayland Trask, Vera Stedman, Alice Davenport, Edle C. Kenton, Harry Booker and Al. McKinnon—say! what a bunch of comedians to be cavorting before the lens of a motion picture camera. But every one of them—all Sennett comedians—are seen in "Her Blighted Love," a Paramount-Sennett comedy, produced under the direction of Walter Wright. This is some comedy—take it from the management of the ——— theatre. A laugh with every foot of reelage (and there are two thousand feet of reelage, therefore, mathematically there are two thousand laughs). This statement is not exaggerated. The comedy is a scream from start to finish. Charles Murray's reputation as a fun-maker is known from coast to coast and from one end of the pole to the other end—North or South, it doesn't make any difference which. Charlie is known, nevertheless. And those in support of this famous Sennett comedian, are comedians of the first water. They all have their funny characteristics and they put them to a good use in this late offering, "Her Blighted Love."

Alice loses her fortune, and on that day she gets the greatest disappointment of her young life—Charles has dropped her as he would a hot coal. He has fallen for a beautiful heiress whom he has seen bathing in the surf. But Alice is made of stern stuff and she will not take "no" for an answer. She takes her troubles into court. We will see whether Charlie will spurn her love.

SCRAPING IT OFF

There's No Veneer of Uncertainty in These Ad Talks

IF you have been reading the views of the members of the Advisory Board, you know that one of the principal complaints made is that the advertising of the producer doesn't tell the exhibitor enough of what the picture is about. The exhibitors want a line on the productions before they show them.

These Ad Talks are especially valuable to the theatres that show the pictures after the first run has been finished. They are important to the man who is changing his bill often because he doesn't have to wade through a lot of matter to get at the real facts that he wants. And in addition to that they are a ready prepared reading notice for your newspaper.

Read these and see how much better showman you are after you are fully familiar with the production.

Edna Goodrich, Noted Stage Beauty, in "Her Husband's Honor"—David Powell

(Mutual Five-Reel Release)

Edna Goodrich returns to the screen of the ———theatre on ——— of ——— week in a five-part drama titled "Her Husband's Honor," written by Mabelle Justice Heikes and directed for the Mutual Film Corporation's program by Burton Kink. Miss Goodrich, who is one of our most accomplished stage beauties as well as one of the big stars of the silent drama, is supported in her latest work by David Powell, who has been seen as Mary Pickford's leading man in many of her biggest successes; Thomas Tommammato, a Japanese actor, and Beatrice Allen. She has the role of Nancy Page, wife of Richard Page, who is confidential secretary for David Davenport, a wealthy contractor. Davenport had secured Richard's endorsement on several checks of large amounts, and when he fails in business, he goes to Richard and deceives him into believing that everything will be all right when he has obtained the contracts from the Japanese government for a number of light houses which are about to be erected. Davenport's wife is young and pretty and before Richard's marriage to Nancy, he had paid court to her. Nancy believes that Davenport's young wife is still in love with Richard and she makes it her business to learn the truth. She learns of her husband's financial troubles and also that the contracts, if secured, will save him. She picks up a flirtation with the Japanese commissioner and persuades him to sign the contracts and give her a certain amount of money, that she might save her husband. The Jap keeps the contracts, which results in Davenport's ruin and Richard's salvation.

Wallace Reid's Latest Success, "Less Than Kin"—Story of a Man's Double

"Less Than Kin" is Wallace Reid's latest on the Paramount program. And it's a "knock-out." Full of surprises from the start to the finish of the story, "Less Than Kin" affords Mr. Reid a vehicle on which he can ride direct to the hearts of his audiences. It was written by Alice Duer Miller, novelist and playwright, who is responsible for "Come Out of the Kitchen," the stage play in which Ruth Chatterton made such a decided "hit" on Broadway, at the Cohan theatre, a few seasons ago. Miss Miller has certainly put some dramatic punch in her work for the screen and Marion Fairfax has made the screen version with none of Miss Miller's ideas left out. Donald Crisp, who directed Mr. Reid's "The Firefly of France" and "The House of Silence" is responsible for the direction of this one. Henry Kotani, a Japanese cameraman, turned the crank. In the supporting cast with Mr. Reid are seen many of Paramount's best character-actors, including Raymond Hatton, Gustav Seyffertitz, Noah Berry, James Neill, Charles Ogle, Jane Wolff, James Cruze, Guy Oliver, Clavert Carter and J. Herbert. Ann Little, who has been seen in the leading feminine role in nearly all of Mr. Reid's pictures, has the leading role in support of this picture. The story tells of the adventures of a young American in South America, who discover that he has a double and that his double has not been to his home in America for fifteen years. His double dies and Wally takes his place in the home of his father in America. Now comes the surprise.

Jewel Carmen in Adaptation of Gouverneur Morris Novel, "The Fallen Angel"

(Fox Five-Reel Production)

Jewel Carmen, the little girl who rose from extra girl in the "movies" to one of William Fox's biggest stars, as the result of her excellent work in her first picture, will be seen on the screen of the ——— theatre on ——— of ———week in "The Fallen Angel," adapted from Gouverneur Morris's popular story, "You Can't Get Away with It." Miss Carmen has proved that she is entitled to every bit of confidence placed in her by the producer when he featured her in the silent drama. She proved versatile to the extreme, handling emotional roles with the same finesse as she handles the comedy situation and lighter parts of dramatic work. Her pictures have proved one of the most popular series on the Fox program and her late picture, "The Fallen Angel," presents her in one of the best roles she has yet undertaken to impersonate before the camera. In the supporting roles are seen Charles Clary, L. C. Shumway, Herbert Heyes, Daisy Robinson, and Levine Monsch. In the role of Jill Cummings, who is reared in an atmosphere of luxury and refinement. But the large fortune which her father possessed, slips away from him, and Jill wakes one morning to find herself without a father and without money. She accepts employment at a department store and attracts the attention of George Hemingway, the proprietor who is unhappily married and who is willing to give Jill everything that she has been accustomed to, if she will give herself to him. She chooses the "easiest way."

Roy Stewart in a Red Saunders Story, "By Proxy"—Good Comedy and Western Drama

(Triangle Five-Reel Production)

Roy Stewart swings through the western country and takes a hand at love by proxy, in his latest Triangle feature, "By Proxy," written by Henry Wallace Phillips and produced for the Triangle program under the direction of Cliff Smith, a former cowpuncher himself, and one who knows the "ins and outs" of the cowpunching business and every detail that goes to make for typical western atmosphere. In the cast with Mr. Stewart are seen Maude Wayne, Walter Perry, Wilbur Higbee, John Lince and Harry Yammamoto. "By Proxy" is one of the "Red" Saunders stories, sizzling with the red-blooded action of the western plains, its strength of action sharply contrasted with the love element which has been cleverly injected into the plot by the author, Mr. Phillips. The cowpunchers on "Red" Saunders' ranch lose "their shirts" as the slang expression goes, to Ah Sing, the champion poker player of the western plains. In order that they might get them back, the boys have to guarantee exorbitant interests to Ah Sing. Aleck, one of the boys, falls madly in love with Lindy, and "Red," in order that he might facilitate matters and assist the bashful Aleck in his courtship, takes a hand in the matter and wins Lindy over "by proxy." Aleck has seen the girl of his dreams but hasn't the nerve to approach her. He and "Red" take the night stage to Cowtown and "Red" promises that he will bring her back. On the way they run into Ah Sing and take him along. But "Red" gets the wrong girl and is obliged to marry her himself.

"The Marquis and Miss Sally," An O. Henry Subject—Typical O. Henry Climax

(General Two-Reel Release)

The latest O. Henry to come to the screen of the ——— theatre is titled "The Marquis and Miss Sally," produced in two parts and adapted from one of the author's best works. Patricia Palmer, William Lester, Robert Burns and Tex Allen are seen in the principal roles. An O. Henry subject always proves of interest when adapted to the screen. It loses none of its entertaining qualities. As a matter of fact, its interest is heightened by the animated action which tells the story in pantomime instead of words.

"Mickey"

(W. H. Productions—Seven Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"MICKEY" has been exposed to critical gaze at last and any accumulated fears with which the reviewer approached the projecting room, caused by a full year of "Mickey" advertising, was completely banished as one after another its seven reels skipped across the screen. Mabel Normand "struck twelve," so to speak, in "Mickey." For under the direction of Mack Sennett, that master of comedy who first saw her possibilities in a bathing suit, she attained the heights as a comedienne. In her role here Miss Normand does some real acting that makes one sit up and take notice. The title of the picture implies the type of her part. She is a pranky, tomboy girl, whose adventures both in the mining district and in the ranks of a certain sort of society, thrilling that many of them are, are filled with comedy of the kind that only Mack Sennett could create. It is that quick, spontaneous style of comedy that gives the impression that it was evolved on the spur of the moment from the players' ability to sense the situation. It is this style of comedy that always has been and always will be the most popular. And there is an abundance of it here. Miss Normand, and her supporting cast as well, never permit a point to fall short of the spectator.

One is put in the best of moods by Miss Normand's novel entrance into "Mickey," and subsequently there is a regular whirl of fine comedy introduced. The general store, that locale of so much of the world's humor, is utilized again in "Mickey," put to an original purpose. Here Mickey enters with her dog and the proprietor objects to the dog. And the dog objects to the proprietor. There is a grand mixup that contains laugh after laugh. And later when Mickey is introduced into the home of her rich aunt there is a further supply of comedy of an unusually high order. First she is received royally because her hostess believes she owns a gold mine. And then she is reduced to the rank of servant because her gold mine proves worthless. But in both stations Miss Normand gets excellent results.

The story of "Mickey" has been written with the element of surprise ever in view. One can truthfully say that plain and straightforward as the plot itself is there are many times when the story takes an unexpected twist. This, of course, serves to ever stimulate the interest. After one crisis in the story is completed attention is immediately commanded again because the unexpected happens.

But where Sennett shows his versatility as a producer is in the fact that the humor of "Mickey" results from human incidents and situations. The comedy is built upon reality. Beneath every hilarious laugh there is the feeling that it is natural. And therefore the laughs are sincere. And this is the case with each of the picture's elements. For of course there are other ingredients besides comedy. Sennett is too wise a producer to offer such an abundance of footage offering a single type of entertainment. There is pathos, just a little of it, romance in a pleasing quantity, and thrills enough in a wonderful horse race and a quick and realistic fight, followed by a sensational rescue of Mickey, to institute a powerful line of suspense at the finale. In producing these two episodes, the race and the fight, the director has shown his appreciation of the technique of building up the suspense. In both there is thrill upon thrill, each one just a little bit better than the last, until at their climaxes the two episodes fairly bring the spectator to his feet out of sheer excitement and enthusiasm. The race, with Mickey "up," is constituted of various flashes of the girl urging her horse forward, intermingled with long and fairly close shots of the actual race. It is played to its fullest worth. And it ends with a breath-taking fall. The horse stumbles and Mickey is hurled headlong over the track.

The fight, which puts an ideal melodramatic climax on the story, is handled with equal skill. The scene of action is an old country place with winding stairs. The villain has pursued Mickey to the roof, a slanting peek. Here she barely manages to hang. Below the villain and the hero wage one of those exciting, smashing combats which, in its handling and the manner in which suspense has been built up, calls to mind some of Fairbanks' best scraps. But this fight has not the conventional finish. As the men combat, Mickey slowly looses her grip on the top edge of the roof and begins to slide down. There is a sheer drop of a dangerous height which she seems unable to avoid. And when the villain apparently triumphs and sends the hero falling down stairs the cause of virtue seems about to be dragged about in the dust. But instead the hero dashes to the window and grabs Mickey inside to safety just as she is about to fall from the eaves to the ground so far below. These fight scenes alternating with flashes of Mickey in her hazardous predicament on the roof afford some of the finest thrills imaginable.

The story, with its comedy, its romance and its wonderful thrills, is of the simplest sort. And simplicity is always greatness. Particularly when simplicity has so many enjoyable things about it. The modern-day audience, surfeited with war films and spy melodramas, will welcome "Mickey." It is simplicity itself, it is humorous, human and thrilling and pleasing every minute of the way. It was built by a master of his craft. Interest in it rises as a wave and culminates in a thrilling crash, like the wave beating the sands.

As for the details of the production, these are appropriate in every instance. From the village setting in the early part of the picture to the contrasting shots in the home of Mickey's aunt there is ever an atmosphere of reality maintained. The lighting is effective and the photographic work excellent from every angle.

Miss Normand's supporting cast was well chosen. Each player is perfectly fitted for his part. Wheeler Oakman is a fine hero. Lewis Cody an equally fine villain. George Nichols was aptly cast as Joe Meadows, Mickey's guardian. Minnie, the old Indian who has appeared in so many pictures, never gave a better performance than in "Mickey." Minta Durfee, Laura La Varnie and Tom Kennedy complete the cast.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Mickey (Mabel Normand) has been brought up by a miner, Joe Meadows (George Nichols). She is a tomboy and is the trial as well as the love of the old man's life. The only mother that Mickey has ever known is Minnie, an old Indian, who dutifully cares for her and worships the very ground she walks on. One day Joe decides that Mickey must go to her aunt's in the city to receive a proper education. Before she leaves she meets Herbert Thornhill (Wheeler Oakman), a mining engineer, who is doing some surveying in the neighborhood. In the city Mickey is introduced into the home of her socially ambitious aunt, Mrs. Drake (Laura La Varnie). Mrs. Drake hasn't enough money to pay the electric light bills but she has the will to attempt to marry her daughter, Elsie (Minta Durfee), to Thornhill. Thornhill doesn't quite know his mind. Mickey is at first welcomed because it is believed that she is the possessor of a gold mine. But on discovering that her mine is worthless her aunt relegates her to the kitchen. Thornhill finally proposes to Elsie and places the ring on her finger. Then he sees Mickey again. She has arrayed herself in some of Elsie's finery. Straightway Thornhill regrets the proposal and the acceptance. His lawyer and friend, Tom Rawlins (Tom Kennedy), manages matters perfectly by informing him that his fortune has been swept away. Then Elsie breaks the engagement. At this time it is discovered that a rich vein has been struck in Mickey's mine and that she is rich. So straightway Reggie Drake (Lewis Cody) starts suit for her hand. But Mickey much prefers Thornhill. Reggie informs Thornhill that if he can get hold of five thousand dollars and place it on his (Reggie's) horse, he will win back his fortune. Thornhill gets the money and the bet is made. Thornhill tells his jockey to pull his horse and lose the race. Mickey overhears and takes the jockey's place. She is winning the race when the horse stumbles and throws her. She is severely hurt but recovers shortly afterwards. Reggie presses his suit with more vigor than ever. Out riding with her one day he traps her in an old country house and starts to attack her. Thornhill, who has followed, comes to her rescue but it is only after a long and furious fight that he succeeds in so doing. And after that they are married, and to make matter ideal, Rawlins informs Thornhill that his fortune was never really lost after all.

"To the Highest Bidder"
(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

ALICE JOYCE in her portrayal of the featured role in Florence Mores Kingsley's "To the Highest Biddler," produced by Vitagraph under the direction of Tom Terriss, takes every advantage offered by the prominence of this role with the result that she gives one of her most appealing characterizations. Miss Joyce is given the front seat in the cast and she never once is called upon to vacate it, in deference to another. The author's foresight in playing up this role as she has, saves her from being adversely criticized by those who would sit in judgment. We admire Miss Kingsley for the nerve she displayed in striking out with the new and original in her creation of the episode of "the auction block." She is saved from a denial of her right by the fact that no one can lay down a hard and fast rule governing the right or wrong, the probability or the improbability of this occurrence. This may all happen some day—but we hope not and we feel so assured that it won't, that we will wager a few cents on it. How are we going to prove it? It can't be "did."

The uniqueness of the general theme "To the Highest Bidder" carries a certain fascination that no one can gainsay. It is new and therefore is wrapped in a freshness of exterior or ulterior garment that adapts itself rapidly to interpretation through the medium of the silent drama. In brief, the story tells of a young girl who has been disappointed in love, is the owner of a large farm, is facing poverty and has the alternative of losing her home or selling herself for money. She does neither but conceives a plan which points the way out of her difficulties, which is unique to say the least and serves an excellent advantage. She places herself in charge of an auctioneer and demands that he offer her services to the highest bidder, stipulating that she is intelligent, a good cook and an excellent governess. She goes to the highest bidder who is the man who threatened to foreclose the mortgage on her farm if she did not consent to his wishes. And right here, the man who she had loved and who had been missing for years, turns up and is a spirited bidder at the auction but loses out for the want of funds.

This is why we say that "To the Highest Bidder" offers something new in the way of a theme for the silent drama. And because of its newness it is going to be received with open arms by the public and especially the followers of Miss Joyce, for she gives a most finished and appealing characterization of the girl who offers herself "to the highest bidder."

Director Tom Terris has given this picture a good production with one possible exception. He attempted a reproduction of a county fair with such poor results as compared to the actual scenes, that the staging of this episode proves almost a joke. It would have been far better to have ignored that episode in the script and have substituted something more simple of reproduction than to have carried this one out in such a half-hearted and cheap way.

Walter McGrail is seen in the part of Miss Joyce's leading man but Percy Standing has the big male role in the character part of Steven Jarvis. And Percy puts it over with a bang. Edna Murphy, Jules Cowles, who does his usual good work in a character role, this time as an aged farm-hand; Mary Carry and Stephen Carr, a bright little youngster who screens like a winner and acts like a good bet for the future, are seen in other supporting roles.

"Back to the Woods"

GOLDWYN presents Mabel Normand in "Back to the Woods," a five-reel picture in which comedy is striven for and not attained. It is quite a pity that the producing company should have wasted the efforts of the star and of the director and of the entire production force which worked on "Back to the Woods," when the picture hasn't a single leg to stand on in the story provided by J. Clarkson Miller. They fool around in the beginning with a lot of ball-room scenes and considerable cheap wit is introduced into the subtitles. The audience sits patiently awaiting the plot, but when the scene shifts back to the woods it is still loathe to raise its head and invite attention. The hero comes in and proceeds to play a joke on the heroine and then she turns about and gives him tit for tat and then they both go back to the city and meet again—in an elevator. The elevator being a contraption somewhat original in pictures there is about a reel of the handsome hero guiding it up and down in the tall building until the heroine becomes car sick and accepts his proposal. Of course she was going to accept all along.

The audience at the Strand on Monday afternoon of this week didn't take to the picture kindly at all. It was a hot day and it got hotter trying to discover the plot and the reason for the picture. There were a couple of laughs, it must be said, brought forth by the jokes, but these were more or less in self defense.

The picture has a number of pretty scenes and is well photographed. Miss Normand is supported by Herbert Rawlinson as hero. Arthur Housman has a comedy part which he handles well in the short space allotted him. But all the cast works under a handicap because of lack of material. George Irving directed.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Stephanie Trent (Mabel Normand), daughter of a lumber king (T. Henderson Murray), flees to a lumber camp in Maine to get away from a brace of foolish suitors and poses as a school teacher. She meets Jimmy Raymond (Herbert Rawlinson), a novelist, who becomes attached to her. One day he proceeds to lock her in his cabin and attack her, informing her afterwards that he just wanted to see how she would act under the circumstances. (Note: Novelists must get their realism first hand.) So Stephanie, rather peeved, hits back and has Jimmy kidnapped by some of the lumbermen. He escapes, is shot at and wounded. Stephanie nurses him back to health. Back in the city he publishes his story. Stephanie starts injunction proceedings and has it held up. On their way to the hearing they meet—in the elevator. Jimmy ejects the elevator boy and proceeds to take possession of the car and of Stephanie.

"Less Than Kin"

(Paramount—Five Reels)

PARAMOUNT has supplied Wallace Reid with another fine comedy in "Less Than Kin." From the comedy viewpoint it is in every respect a worthy successor to "Believe Me Xantippe." Alice Duer Miller, one of the most prolific authors of the present day, wrote the story upon which it is based and Marion Fairfax made the adaptation. The humor arises from the close resemblance of two men, Robert Lee and Lewis Vickers, both characters played by Mr. Reid. In Central America Lee dies of drink and Vickers, longing to return to his native land, yet realizing he is liable to arrest for murder, takes his place. Now Lee's father was loving, that much Vickers knew, and furthermore he has a ward who holds forth promises of romance, so Vickers believes he has hit upon a pretty soft scheme. And with this mistaken conclusion he lands in the midst of the Lee household to discover that he has inherited a past full of crime and a secret marriage. The comedy runs thick and fast in this portion of the picture, the various predicaments which Vickers finds himself in owing to Lee's wild past resulting in humorous situations of a genuine, original order.

The adaptor made excellent use of the material provided her by the author while Donald Crisp in the directing has overlooked no opportunities. The utmost in comedy is derived from each situation that presents itself. Mr. Reid has a pleasing opposite in Ann Little, Raymond Hattan is a funny conventional business man, Gustav Seyffertitz appears to good advantage as the father and James Cruze gives another of those tough portrayals, tinged with a shade of comedy, that are lifting him to the first rank of character leads. Charles Ogle, Jane Wolff, Guy Oliver and James Neill are others who appear.

The photography is the work of Henry Kotani and is of the usual high Lasky standard. The cry these times is for comedy so "Less than Kin" should be seized upon with avidity and heralded as one of the best, as it certainly is.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Lewis Vickers (Wallace Reid), a refugee in Central America, discovers that he has a double, Robert Lee, who is drinking himself to death. And death comes soon. Vickers longing for a sight of his native land again decides to go back to New York as Lee. A murder he committed in defense of a woman is what keeps him from returning under his own name. Back in the Lee household Vickers meets Endicott Lee (Gustav Seyffertitz), his supposed father, and Nellie Reid (Ann Little), his ward. He learns among other things that he has robbed Nellie of her fortune, contracted numerous debts and absconded with bank funds twelve years before, or rather these were Lee's crimes which he inherited. However, he bears it all until Maria (Jane Wolff) and two children appear claiming that he is the missing head of the family. Vickers becomes slightly peeved. He manages to tell Nellie that he is not Lee, but she won't believe him. To make matters worse, she vows her intention of marrying James Emmons (Raymond Hatton), a bank official. Vickers keeps silent as to his real identity in order not to shock Endicott Lee, who is seriously ill. But the shock comes when the Lee barn burns and the old man dies. This fire also shows Emmons up as a coward, and Vickers as a hero, for there are puppies to be rescued. And then appears Peters (Guy Oliver), a man who is acquainted with Vickers' own past, but he is saved from the law when justice at last takes the right course.

BESSIE BARRISCALE, who it appears must needs favor the abbreviated "of" in the majority of her pictures, here takes the role of a foundling cast up by the sea, who, attaining womanhood runs away to London and becomes a dancer. Her object is to captivate the heart of an English gentleman, Franklin Shirley, and her manager makes the bargain that if she fails in this she must come to him. Luckily for the cause of Virtue she does not fail. J. Grubb Alexander and Fred Myton prepared this story for Miss Barriscale and in itself it appears to be a rather trite and drawn out affair. Miss Barriscale's sincerity and appreciation of the few possibilities of her role, however, serve to make it mildly interesting from start to finish.

"Maid o' the Storm" sometimes shows poor development. The high lights of the story were neglected. They are run over in practically the same key as the minor action. The production given the picture by Raymond West is good in all other respects.

George Fisher is seen as Shirley and Herschel Mayall appears to advantage as the theatrical manager. The supporting cast embraces an array of character portrayals that are commendable.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Ariel (Bessie Barriscale), who when a baby, was found on the shore after a storm by Andy MacTavish (Joseph J. Dowling), runs away to London when she becomes of age. Her object in so doing is to gain the education necessary to place her on an equal footing with Franklin Shirley (George Fisher), a Londoner, who had recovered at the MacTavish house after an aeroplane accident. She encounters two old musicians (Howard Hickman and Nick Cogley), before whom she dances. Impressed with her ability they take her before Abe Strohman (Herschel Mayall), a theatrical power. He puts before her the bargain that he will place her on the level of any man if at the time of her success she will come to him providing Shirley does not love her. And so after a few years she blossoms forth a success as a dancer. She learns that Shirley is engaged to one, Elaine Shackleford (Lois Wilson), but just the same, she attempts to win him, and he capitulates to her charms. Nevertheless when Mrs. Shackleford (Helen Dunbar) comes before her the next day and pleads with her to give up Shirley for the sake of Elaine, she agrees, and, on the telephone, tells Strohman that she will come to him. But Elaine takes matters into her own hands by eloping with the man she really loves (Clifford Alexander). So Shirley makes all haste to Strohman's office where the theatrical magnate proves himself a good sport, and resists not when Ariel chooses to become the wife of Shirley.

THEDA BARA'S reappearance in William Fox's 1918 version of Adolphe D'Ennery's world-famous play, "The Two Orphans," produced under the direction of Herbert Brenon, will be more than welcomed by the patrons of the silent drama. Miss Bara is seen in the plaintive, appealing role of Henrietta, one of the two orphans. This picture is considered one of the best in which Miss Bara has appeared under the Fox banner. She has a straight role with none of the vampire characteristics to portray. This work was done when Miss Bara first began to attract an unusual notice on the screen. She is seen in her best straight role.

The picture affords real, sound entertainment. All the attractiveness of the author's work has been faithfully recorded by the camera. It is as human and as true-to-life as the genius of the French writer could make it, and his genius has been transferred to the screen director and cast with every appreciation and understanding of the author's wishes.

The 1918 version, as reissued by William Fox, is in five reels, the same as when shown to the public at its initial appearance. It carries the same appeal, is just as interesting and loses none of its attractiveness and power to give enjoyment by virtue of the fact that it is a re-issue. The public will see it the second time and many of them the third time. It is the work of an author and of a producer who have labored to create fascinating entertainment. Jean Sothern, Herbert Brenon, William E. Shay, Gertrude Berkley, E. L. Fernandez, John Daly Murphy, Sheridan Block, and Mrs. Cecil Raleigh have the principal roles. Miss Sothern has the role of the blind orphan. Herbert Brenon, who since his appearance in the role of the cripple, Pierre, in this production, has become one of our best directors, gives a remarkably fine characterization of the crippled boy.

CARMEL MYERS has a vehicle which gives her another boost toward stardom in "The Dream Lady" and which offers light romantic entertainment of the highest order. The title role is that of an enthusiastic young girl, full of the joy of living and secure in her own happiness because of her efforts to make others happy, and Miss Myers plays this part for its full worth, getting the most from it in her every scene.

The picture, an adaptation by Fred Myton from a novel entitled "Why Not?" by Margaret Widdemer, presents an exceedingly pretty romance, enhanced by some genuine comedy and a little streak of melodrama that provides just the right amount of suspense. Furthermore, it is laid in delightfully pretty locations, all of which have been well photographed. Director Elsie Jane Wilson has handled the subject with real understanding. Never once does she allow the commonplace or the merely material to enter, but keeps the picture constantly buoyed up to the heights of prettiness and sprightliness, the mark for which is set by the charming little star.

Thomas Holding, late of the Petrova company, is seen as the old young bachelor into whose life the Dream Lady brings happiness, while an extremely clever little girl, Elizabeth Janes, plays an important role. Kathleen Emerson, Harry Meter and Philo McCullough contribute good support.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Rosamond Gilbert (Carmel Myers), on the death of her crabbed old uncle and guardian, takes the small legacy he left her and buys a cottage on the edge of the woods not far from a summer resort. Her mission is to make the "dreams of dreamers" come true because she has found so much happiness in realizing her own dreams. A little girl, Allie (Elizabeth Janes), is adopted by Rosamond and into her life there comes a long-absent happiness. John Squire (Thomas Holding), a young man growing old before his time because he never associates with young people, meets Rosamond and she starts to mold him over into something of a human being. Jerrold (Philo McCullough), a swindler, convinces Rosamond that he has a great invention in his turbine engine and she in turn urges Squire to invest. She discovers how she has been duped when Jerrold himself tells her and urges her to elope with him. She is saved from further embarrassment, however, when Squire puts in an appearance and completely clears the horizon of the villain.

"Out of the Night"

CATHERINE CALVERT'S latest starring vehicle on the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation's program, "Out of the Night," is an adaptation from E. Lloyd Sheldon's work of the same title. Its predominating theme is a discussion of the sex problem, revealing the temptations placed in the way of a young girl who has been thrown upon the world and who makes the greatest sacrifice that she might do good unto others. Then follows the story of the young girl's battle with the world to regain her rightful position in society and her victory over great obstacles placed in her way.

"Out of the Night" was produced under the direction of James Kirkwood. A good bit of the action of the story takes place on grounds surrounding a summer estate, and Director Kirkwood has selected some beautiful locations for the shooting of these scenes. The fact that he has secured these beautiful locations for the staging of much of the action of this play serves to raise an otherwise ordinary picture above the average. The story is most too "sexey," if we coin the expression. To those who like a free-for-all discussion of the sex problems, for and against, "Out of the Night" will appeal with all the magnetism of this class of the drama.

At times the author was obliged to resort to the far-fetched situations to keep his plot moving toward the inevitable climax—a happy ending—and because of this there is a certain unnatural trend to the plot throughout the later reels. The picture could be improved by cutting. A full reel could be eliminated with good results, as this procedure would quicken the plot action. The story runs particularly slow in the initial reels.

Director Kirkwood has opened with some night scenes, showing one of our city thoroughfares during a heavy storm. These have been put over with striking realism. The photography, especially that devoted to exterior work, is of the finest standard, although the print shown for review gave evidence of poor development in spots. The sub-titler has been a bit too anxious to accentuate the sex element by suggestive phrases, but, barring these few exceptions, the titles have been done with care. "Out of the Night" will give the utmost satisfaction to the patrons who desire a discussion of the sex problem on the screen.

Catherine Calvert gives a credible exhibition in the featured role and Herbert Rawlinson, who is seen in support, does well with a not-too-important role, excepting for the times that he does a bit too much posing. The other members of the cast are Frederick Esmelton, Emmett King, Harry C. Meyers, Ida Darling, Bessie Stinson, Eldean Stuart, Harry Lee, Dan Malloy, Barney Gilmore, William Jerald and Thomas Brooke.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Rosalie Lane (Catherine Calvert) is an outcast from society. She sacrificed her dearest possession for the sake of her sister. While alone in the city she meets Ralph Evans (Harry Meyers), an artist, and he engages her to pose for a picture ordered by the Magdalene Home to illustrate the fallen woman. Richard Storrow (Frederick Esmelton) and Henry Tredwell (Emmett King), trustees of the Home, give the order. Not until the picture has been completed does Rosalie learn that it had been ordered by Tredwell. Tredwell is the man she accuses of causing her downfall. She goes to the Magdalene Home with the artist when the picture is presented and faces Tredwell. To make recompense for the wrong, he takes her into his home as governess for his child. There she meets Bob Starrow for the second time and they fall in love. The father sees that his son has taken an unusual interest in the governess and he tries to persuade him not to be too intimate with her. Rosalie, when Bob proposes, writes him a letter explaining that she has a "past" and that she doesn't feel worthy of him. She leaves the letter under the door of his room and the following morning leaves. Bob learns her intentions and follows, bringing her back.

The father, seeing that his son is in earnest, raises strenuous objections to the marriage but the two are united, despite the objections. They are finally forgiven.

"SCANDAL MONGERS" is none other than Lois Weber's vastly successful production "Scandal," which was first released four years ago. Seen today, little of its force and compelling interest is lost because of passing time. The treatment of the topic is most dramatic and the skill with which it is developed is marked. It deals with the damage wrought by idle gossip and how innocent actions are contorted and made vile by those who are ever on the lookout for a "scandal" to retail to their neighbors.

The cast includes the Smalleys themselves, Lois Weber appearing as Daisy Dean, the stenographer, and Phillips Smalley carrying the role of her employer, William Wright. Rupert Julian has a strong part as Robert Gordon, in which he gives a sustained and powerful characterization, while Adele Farrington as one of the chief gossips completes the cast of principals.

The print exhibited for review was not in particularly good shape, but otherwise the picture can compare favorably with the output of the present day, while its theme, so realistic and wide in appeal, would indicate unusually interested audiences.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

William Wright (Phillips Smalley) takes his stenographer, Daisy Dean (Lois Weber), home in an automobile after she has sprained her ankle and therewith the gossips start. Particularly when he calls for her in a car to take her to work, preferring to go to this trouble rather than trust his private correspondence to another secretary, do idle tongues start to wag. And eventually Mrs. Wright, convinced that her husband has an affair with Daisy, secures a divorce. Daisy, hurt by the scandal, marries the first man that presents himself, Robert Gordon (Rupert Julian), more for protection than for love. They are happy for a time and when the baby arrives their world seems to be complete. Gordon departs on a business trip and his sister Susan (Adele Farrington) comes to stay with Daisy. It happens that Daisy's old sweetheart spends much of his time near the Gordon home, visiting his fiancee. He renews acquaintance with Daisy and the narrow-minded Susan believes there is trouble brewing. Daisy joins this man and his friends on an automobile trip. Unlooked-for accidents make their return late. And when Daisy at last appears she discovers Robert, in a jealous frenzy, awaiting her. He denounces her, shoots and kills the other man and is cast in prison to await his doom.

"Miss Innocence"

(Fox—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

HARRY MILLARDE, with a rather commonplace script to work from, has fashioned one of the best photodramatic offerings in which June Caprice has appeared on the Fox program. To begin with, the authoress, Hazel Corker, furnished him a story, the adaptation of which was made by Thomas Fallon, that called for unlimited detail work in its reproduction for enactment on the screen. Much of the detail, although unimportant to a certain degree, was necessarily left out if the picture was to be shown in five reels, as it is. Together with the unimportant details, much of the important detailed work had to be left out, and the action that should have been seen on the screen was substituted by very flowery and lengthy sub-titles, greatly to the detriment of the story as a dramatic revelation. The picture was cut, obviously, to meet the demands of a five-reel program feature, and in making this sacrifice much of the work accomplished by Director Millarde in the making of this picture has been eliminated and sub-titles substituted. Because of this "Miss Innocence" does not present the strength of the drama that it otherwise would have.

The story was not the most suitable that could have been obtained. Much of the work depended upon the psychology of its teachings, and the average audience is not going to stop to figure this out. There is a mighty fine lesson involved in this offering, and if it gets across William Fox can expect some pretty good reports on this offering. Director Millarde has brought out the salient points and guided Miss Caprice through the scenes with a master's hand. Mr. Millarde has demonstrated by his work with Miss Caprice that he has a strong faculty for bringing out the best that is in an unseasoned actress or actor. Miss Caprice is inclined to overdo a scene if given her own way, and in the emotional scenes she represses her action, almost to exaggeration. In her later work she has given herself more freedom, dropped the effectiveness of her former work and resumed the natural. In some of the emotional scenes of this picture the little star does some finished work and in the lighter parts she skips through with the assurance of proper direction.

The story is the weakest point in this production. It is artificial in its construction and never leaves the impression that it was inspired by the natural course of events or the natural in everyday life.

Marie Shotwell, an old favorite on the screen, is seen in a strong character role and registers in every scene in which she appears. Robert Walker, opposite Miss Caprice in the leading male role, gets over some good work in a not-too-prominent role. Frank Beamish does splendid work in a character role. Carlton Macey and Mrs. Garrison are seen in minor roles. The photography is clear and the exterior scenes are beauties. A nicely appointed interior set, showing the home of wealth, deserves special mention for its completness and detailed finish.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Fay Gonard (Marie Shotwell), having gone the pace on the Gay White Way, leaves her infant child on the doorsteps of a convent and disappears. The child, Dolores May (June Caprice), is reared within the seclusion of the convent and as she nears majority, develops a longing to get away from her seclusion and have pretty clothes and a good time.

Henry Grant (Robert Walker), accompanying his mother (Mrs. Garrison) and his father on a visit to the convent, meets Dolores. Later Dolores escapes from the convent and is found by the roadside by a party of joy-riders who take her to their home, and here Dolores sees the phase of life for which she has longed—the gay life. She leaves here and goes to the home of Grant and is taken in and given a home. She and Robert renew their friendship which soon ripens into love. But the old longing for the gay life seizes her and she goes back to the friends she had met. A party is given and during the carousal, Robert, in his search for Dolores, finds her in the midst of a drunken crowd. He takes her back to his home where she repents of having run away.

Dolores' father (Frank Beamish) has been released from prison and kills the man who had ruined his wife and himself. The murder was committed on the night that young Walker found Dolores in the carousal party, and the man who was giving it was the man killed. Young Grant is tried for his murder and is found guilty, but Dolores' father confesses to the murder and is released on the ground that he was justified in so doing. Dolores and Robert are united.

"The Plunderer"

(Fox Big Six Re-Issue—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

WILLIAM FARNUM has met with a number of undisputed successes on the screen, none of which is entitled to more deserving credit than "The Plunderer," the 1918 version of which is to be released in the series of William Fox's Big Six re-issues. In the role of Bill Mathews, a prospector and miner, he gives a characterization that hits the high lights of the drama with the impersonator's every action and makes "The Plunderer" one of his strongest dramatic offerings to his long list of screen successes.

"The Plunderer" is one of the red-blooded brand of the drama that never fails to grip the hearts of an audience, especially when we have such an artist portraying the featured role as Mr. Farnum. He makes the character of Bill Mathews a real, live specimen of the days when half of the East rushed to the gold field of California. He and his partner, Dick Townsend (Harry Springler), hit the West with all the assurance of two men who know their strength and are ever ready to put it to a crucial test. In the person of Bully Presby (William Riley Hatch) they meet the bully of the West and the one who is making his millions from the land that is rightfully theirs. Bully's daughter, Joan (Claire Whitney), serves the proper love element and is seen to fine advantage in this role. W. J. Gross, George De Carlton, Henry Armetta and Elizabeth Eyre all are seen in deserving roles and to the best advantage.

In the final reels there is shown a Western gambling hall, and this scene has been staged with all the realism of the devil-may-care spirit that invaded these places of amusement, common during the days of the gold rush. Much of the action occurs in the open and the exteriors that have been shot are ideal Westerners. "The Plunderer" can be booked at any theatre with the assurance that any class of patrons will thoroughly enjoy every foot of its reelage.

"She Loved Him Plenty"

(Paramount-Mack Sennett—Two Reels)

IMAGINE Ben Turpin and Charles Lynn, as pawn-shop clerks, quietly commencing their morning duties by slightly burning and wetting the pile of clothes on the counter—just as if it were the most natural practice in the world—so that they may hang out the "Fire Sale" sign. This is only one of the many laughable incidents in "She Loved Him Plenty," for Turpin is never tiresome and Lynn and Polly Moran with Marie Prevost and Ed Kennedy on the side render top-notch support.

"A Gentleman's Agreement"

(Vitagraph—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Joseph L. Kelley

"A GENTLEMEN'S AGREEMENT" is the latest program offering coming from Vitagraph's Western studios. Nell Shipman and Alfred Whitman are co-starred. David Smith directed. The story is from the pen of Wallace Irwin and, although its plot action is oftentimes held together by incidents happening outside the realm of naturalness and everyday life, its general theme treats of an interesting subject and one that offers excellent opportunities for Miss Shipman and Mr. Whitman to shine in their respective roles of equal importance.

Director Smith has reproduced the ideal atmosphere, has obtained the best that was in the script, and has played up his two stars to a degree that shows them off to the best advantage. Like all of these two stars' pictures, this one contains plenty of action and just the right proportion of the Western atmosphere. It presents a better offering than some that these two have done and can safely be placed in the list of good program features.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Allen Spargo (Alfred Whitman), a young mining engineer, is in love with Theresa Kane (Nell Shipman), who promises that upon his return from the West with his fortune made, she will marry him. Allen makes for the West. An associate of Theresa's father, Lemuel Antree (Juan de la Cruse), wealthy and cold of heart, is persuaded by his mother to win Theresa's hand.

In the West Kate Leonard (Patricia Palmer) becomes infatuated with Spargo while he is recovering from injuries obtained in the course of his duties and she intercepts letters sent by Theresa to Allen. She finally writes Theresa that Allen is dead. Weeks later, Theresa promises to marry Antree. Meantime, Allen recovers, and disturbed because he has received no letters from Theresa, hurries East to learn the reason. He finds Theresa the wife of Antree. Antree is convinced later that Theresa loves Allen and intentionally upsets a boat in which the three are riding and is drowned.

"The Death Dance"

(Select—Five Reels)

Reviewed by Peter Milne

"THE DEATH DANCE," Alice Brady's most recent picture, is, if past performances count, a subject which will find great popular favor. Miss Brady is provided with a role that permits the full play of her excellent emotional acting, while the story itself has received the benefit of skilful construction, which serves to bring out its many high lights with a degree of exceptional force.

The whole handling of the picture calls forth the highest praise. While it has a number of situations of the sort that have become the regular thing in Miss Brady's pictures, they have been presented in good taste. Paul West made a smooth running scenario from the story, by Marie Eve, and Director J. Searle Dawley handled it judiciously in the production. Even such familiar details as an auto smash-up and the misplaced papers have been introduced effectively.

The only fault from the viewpoint of construction is that the picture is divided into separate episodes, two in number. It takes half the picture to plant the heroine in the predicament and then a new love interest is introduced. However, the whole is done so skilfully that this break is not to be noticed.

Miss Brady receives support of a high order. H. E. Herbert and Mahlon Hamilton hold down the heroic honors with ease. Robert Cain gives an excellent performance as the dancer. Helen Montrose is sufficiently worldly as the woman of the world, while Rita Spear, Charles Slattery and Nadia Gary complete the cast.

The dance, which forms the climax, is well staged. It possesses a number of dramatic moments that are highly sustaining, due to the spectator's knowledge that behind its care-free abandon murder is contemplated. Miss Brady's dancing is all that could be desired.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Maitland (H. E. Herbert) discovers that his wife, Cynthia (Helen Montrose), is faithless. At her studio, where she would have him think she studies art, she gives wild orgies, her honored guest being M. Boresky (Robert Cain), a cabaret dancer. Maitland secures this evidence through his detective (Charles Slattery). He dislikes the idea of divorce when he thinks of his little child (Nadia Gary). He goes to the cafe where Boresky dances, intending to kill him. Boresky does not appear. Maitland meets a friend with whom he dines. The wine going to his head, Maitland wagers with his friend that every girl has her price. His friend defies him to discover the price of one of the dancing girls, Flora (Alice Brady). The wager is written down. Boresky's wife (Rita Spear) collapses that night and dies. It is through this catastrophe that Maitland meets Flora. In time he grows to love and respect her and asks her to put herself under his patronage that her voice may be developed. Then one night when Maitland is on his way to visit her he is mortally hurt in an automobile accident and breathes his last in her apartment. Cynthia discovers the wager and some of Flora's bills among her husband's belongings. When Flora has completely captivated the heart of Standish (Mahlon Hamilton), Maitland's partner, Cynthia goes to her and in her jealousy declares she will proclaim her relations with her late husband unless she dismiss Standish. But as Flora is in possession of the evidence against Cynthia and Boresky, gathered by the detective, this plan fails. Flora arranges a dancing act with Boresky and Cynthia goes to her old love, and playing upon his jealousy of Flora, makes him agree to stab her during the dance. The occasion will present itself when he is supposed to stab her as part of the act. However, Standish is present and he, quicker than Boresky, realizes what is about to happen and rescues Flora. Boresky, beaten, stabs himself.

"Waifs"

(Pathe—Five Reels)

IN "Waifs" Gladys Hulette is awarded the type of role to which she is best suited. She is the young, impetuous lady who insists on having her own way and who dives headlong into romance without meaning it. She is benefited by a good comedy story furnished by Grace Sartwell Mason, the full possibilities of which were realized in the scenario contributed by Frank Leon Smith and subsequently ably transferred to the screen by Albert Parker, the director. It has a genuinely amusing central situation and the development of it discloses a number of humorous incidents that make the entire five reels quite enjoyable.

Miss Hulette has as her opposite Creighton Hale, who is likable as Fitzjames Powers, a reporter. Walter Heirs, he who is fat and funny to look at and who is possessed of a true comedy sense besides, has an important role and gets the most from it. J. H. Gilmour as the girl's father gives a skilful performance, as is to be expected from an actor of his years of experience and exceptional reputation. It is a pleasure to see him live through the whole five reels instead of being shot in the second or third.

THE STORY AND PLAYERS

Marjorie Whitney (Gladys Hulette), is locked up in her room by her father (J. H. Gilmour) because she refuses to marry the man he has picked out for her. She climbs out of the window and departs for the city. But Mr. Whitney puts a detective on her trail and discovers that she has taken refuge in an out-of-the-way boarding house. The man of his choice is Elmer Poindexter (Walter Heirs), son of his old business partner. The two men put their heads together and decide that the best thing to do is to introduce Elmer into the boarding house and abduct the landlady. Then the two young people will be thrown into each other's company and then—marriage. But all things go against Elmer. To begin with Marjorie has been attacked by a burglar and Fitzjames Powers (Creighton Hale) has come to her rescue, and when Elmer comes along he is rudely evicted for not ringing the bell. Elmer tries to get in a number of times but without success. Finally the burglar comes back to get some hidden swag and there is a fierce fight between this gentleman and Powers. And when it's all over Elmer has summoned his father and Mr. Whitney to the scene and explanations are in order. Mr. Whitney realizes that Elmer was never meant for Marjorie and he abdicates in favor of Powers.

"On Her Account"

THIS single reeler is a skit on the long exploded fallacy of a woman's manner of handling a bank account, and is a nicely conceived piece of work, but surely Scott Sidney knows better than to have Jack appear in a court of justice and conduct a case without uncovering his head. Even comedy does not permit of this.

Concerning "The Great Love"

who were to have been the guides found themselves in the hands of the British police. Mlle. Gabrielle was called to make the baron guide the ships of death.

Calling him at his apartments, she lured him to her home, where, crazed by her beauty and the wine of rash proposals, he agreed to ride with her down the outer roads of London, with lights flaring upward to the sky, defiant to law and blazing the trail for the engines of destruction that lurked, unseen, above.

Jim, in an automobile, by chance, discovered them as they sped down the road toward the great arsenal. Realizing the disaster that would follow their success, he put the chase, and mile after mile he followed the slender stream of light that served to guide the air fleet on its raid. The gain was slow, but almost at the spot where the baron was to stop and let the light shine still for half a minute, Jim came within the range and striking with his cane, smashed the searchlight on the racing car.

Shouting to a policeman to follow the baron, Jim turned, and with his own light thrown against the clouds raced through the meadow bordered lanes and stopped before a vacant field. A moment later the earth rocked with the concussion of the exploding bombs that had been menat for Worlich arsenal.

The baron, pursued by Jim and the police, sought refuge in the house of his wife. But surrounded, and with the knowledge that he could not escape, did the only honorable thing of his career. He shot himself.

The war became reality to the Baroness of San Marino, and even the Reverend Josephus came to realize that there are more important things to talk about than the evils of divorce.

In a hospital, on her knees and scrubbing, Susie became once more the Susie of the past, while at her side, with equal ardor, worked the ladies of the court of St. James.

And once more James Young, of Youngstown, came to call. This time a woman who had known and loved and suffered met him. She told him of a love that is greater still, a love of service and of sacrifice, and it was not until a long time later that they walked, down by the tumbling sea, telling again the old sweet story that is ever new and ever young and ever welcome to ears of youth.

Saginaw Editors Notice Picture Accomplishments

MOTION pictures have now even reached the editorial page of the Saginaw daily press, which recognizes the importance and value of the screen, particularly in presenting patriotic subjects. The following editorial on "War Work of the 'Movie'" was printed in the Saginaw "Courier-Herald" Tuesday morning, June 25:

"Supercilious critics still sneer at the 'movies' as art, although highly artistic effects have been achieved in the more developed dramatic productions. But nobody can belittle the screen as a medium of useful war publicity and the promotion of the war spirit. The newspapers are ahead in carrying the daily news, but the screen stands alone in vivid exposition of the war's thousands of activities at home and abroad. Though its work is literally done in the dark, it brings the whole subject into the limelight of publicity, pictures before our very eyes the war in all its phases, and thus stirs and inspires while it informs. No wonder the greatest governments are using it as a means of arousing patriotism, boosting war loans and forwarding practically every undertaking.

"Uncle Sam himself has now become one of the greatest film producers, rightly regarding moving pictures as one of the most successful of all means of depicting war conditions, showing the necessity of the country's great undertaking, and inviting universal support. It has been very pointedly remarked that as a 'movie' producer our Government has the world for a stage, the heavens for a proscenium arch, and many millions of soldiers and the navies of several countries as actors and participants. This, by the way, is a very good description of the scope of the Government's picture, 'Pershing's Crusaders.' Other productions which are successfully performing a similar service, each in its own way, include Griffith's 'Hearts of the World,' 'Kultur,' 'The Beast of Berlin,' 'My Own United States,' 'The Slacker,' 'Lafayette, We Are Here,' etc., to say nothing of hundreds of picture dramas of the ordinary one-hour length giving some war scenes, inspiring patriotism and strengthening devotion."

Detroit Majestic Contemplates Change

IT SEEMS to be the general impression in film circles in Detroit that the Majestic theatre, now undergoing extensive alterations, will adopt a strict open booking policy of selecting its pictures when it reopens the latter part of August. M. W. McGee, managing director, has some big plans in view for the coming season and he expects to introduce some distinct novelties and innovations in the way of presenting his attractions.

"The price of a feature or of a picture does not count if it is worthy of being shown at the Majestic and if we think it is the kind of a picture our patrons want," said Mr. McGee. "What we consider first is—will it please our patrons—the profit side we consider last. That's the principle we have followed from the very beginning and it's not only my principle but that of our officers and directors."

Racine Palace Also Tries "Community" Singing

TO the Palace theatre, Racine, Wisconsin, belongs the credit for starting a praiseworthy movement in motion picture theatres in that city.

Manager Blumberg and Arthur Friedman, the owner, got their heads together and as a result community singing was started in the Palace the week of June 24.

Miss Lillian Watts, one of the leading musical directors of Racine, was secured to lead the singing, and between the showing of the pictures the words of patriotic songs are thrown on the screen and the organ and orchestra strike up the music of "The Star Spangled Banner" and "America," and the audience stands and sings.

The idea was well received by Palace patrons, as everyone likes to sing. The plan is in line with a national movement to popularize community singing of national and patriotic airs, and Friedman and Blumerg have received congratulations from many prominent citizens on conceiving and carrying out the idea.

Wm. Jenner Comes Back to the Kleine Fold

WILLIAM JENNER, for four years manager of the Chicago branch of the George Kleine system, and more recently manager of the Chicago branch of the Fox Film Corporation, has been made assistant general manager of the Kleine system, having resigned from the Fox staff to accept the position tendered him by General Manager Merl Smith.

Speaking with the authority of his long experience in various branches of the film business, Mr. Jenner predicts one of the greatest seasons in the history of motion pictures, and is laying plans to capture for the Kleine product its full share of that business. A specialized selling campaign for use in the twenty offices of the concern, with concentration as its watchword, has been evolved by Mr. Jenner, and will be put into effect under his personal supervision.

He will leave Chicago shortly for a tour of the branch offices to explain sales helps of various kinds prepared by the home office to the branch managers and to instill the spirit of optimism concerning the firm's prospects which exists in the executive offices in the minds of managers and salesmen.

Springfield Exhibitors Look for Big Fall Business

SPRINGFIELD motion picture managers look for good business this fall, starting in at State fair time, August 9, and continuing all through to next spring. The increased railroad rates will keep many theatrical companies off the road, cut down the number of travelers, and give the theatres a chance to make up for the dull summer months. As the interurban rates have not been advanced and Springfield is a hub for interurbans, many will visit this city by this mode of transportation. It would not be at all surprising if there were some mighty big film plays running in Springfield in the next two months.

Lansing Exhibitors Compete with Daylight

THEATRICAL managers of Lansing are discovering that the combination of the new time, the summer season and pleasant weather, does not improve attendance. It remains light now until about 9 o'clock, and when people stroll forth to enjoy the twilight and the fresh air they do not begin to think of motion pictures until it grows dark. Then they notice how late it is and start for home. However, this condition is only temporary and the managers do not blame the public a bit.

Disease Closes Dubuque Theatres

ALL theatres in Dubuque, Iowa, have been reported closed on account of the infantile paralysis now raging. This will work considerable of a hardship to the exhibitors not only from the financial standpoint, but the mixup of their bookings.

Saginaw Short Notes

SAGINAW, MICH., Shriners were provided with a treat in the display of the films of the Sugar Island pilgrimage held some time ago. Through the courtesy of Past Potentate E. C. Forrest, Charles Q. Carlisle, and Harry E. Oppenheimer, the pictures were presented at the Mecca-Palace theatre July 18, 19 and 20. Admission was free to the Shriners with the presentation of their Shrine card and payment of the war tax.

NOT even Ringling Bros. Circus could detract from the motion pictures in Saginaw. The outdor shows were in Saginaw July 17, and while they did an immense business the local film houses reported that their attendance was as large as ever.

C. W. LAWFORD, a well-known theatrical man of Sharon, Pa., has assumed the management of the Franklin theatre. He succeeded A. E. Denman of Chicago, who has been acting as manager for a short time since the resignation of A. J. Moeller.

UNDER the management of Mr. Lawford the Franklin theatre is promised the same vigorous and up-to-date policy which has characterized the previous managements. He has booked D. W. Griffith's great production, "Hearts of the World," for the week of July 21, which marks the beginning of the new management.

HEADED by D. W. Griffith's spectacle, "Hearts of the World," Saginaw, Mich., has been provided with another strong list of attractions which met with the warm approval of the public. The Griffith picture was shown at the Franklin theatre during the week of July 21, matinee and evening, with the prices ranging from 25 cents to $1.50 and the reserve seat sale opening July 18. During the preceding week the offerings included Mary Miles Minter in "The Ghost of Rosy Taylor," Mabel Normand in "The Floor Below," and J. Warren Kerrigan in "One Dollar Bid."

THE PICTURES displayed at the Mecca-Palace theatre during the week of July 14 consisted of Enid Bennett in "A Desert Wooing"; Pauline Frederick in "Her Final Reckoning," and Charles Ray in "The Claws of the Huns," besides various several smaller features.

AMONG the attractions at the Bijou theatre during the same week were Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "The Golden Wall"; Clara Williams in "Carmen of the Klondike"; Norma Talmadge in "The Secret of the Storm Country," and Douglas Fairbanks in "In Again, Out Again."

MANAGER CHARLES Q. CARLISLE of the Mecca-Palace theatre has been recuperating. He spent two weeks at Bayport on Saginaw Bay and returned to the harness the middle of the month overflowing with his characteristic pep and enthusiasm. He has a splendid line-up of pictures for the coming months. Among his latest bookings is that of the official Government war pictures, one reel to be run on Sunday and Monday of each week, starting the last of July with "Whispering Wires."

THE FRANKLIN TATTLER continues to tattle of all the good things booked at that theatre during the week, and is proving a popular folder with motion picture patrons. Publicity folders on "Hearts of the World" were distributed by the Franklin management to all homes of the city, so there was no excuse for anyone not knowing of the coming of the big pro-

With Milwaukee Film Men

F. J. FLAHERTY, district manager of the Hoffman Foursquare films, paid a flying trip to Milwaukee last week.

W. C. BRIMMER, general manager of the Wisconsin territory of the Pathe Paramount, came to Milwaukee recently.

"TARZAN OF THE APES" has done such big business that the First National Exhibitors' Circuit are trying to obtain another print in order to supply the demand. All of the prints that are out are working overtime, and many orders have to be laid aside because of the inability to fill them.

THE QUALITY FILM COMPANY announces that the Song Hits in Photoplay are going over big and that many of the engagements have been extended. In the future, Mike Kahn announces that he will handle the Ditmars Animal Studies, the Bruce Scenics, the Katzenjammer Kid films and the Happy Hooligan Animated Cartoons.

JOHN HERZINGER of Neenah and Menasha visited the exchanges in the Toy building last week. Both he and his broad smile were very much in evidence.

R. C. FLORINE, city sales manager of the Pathe Exchange in Chicago, was in the city over Sunday, and visited many of his friends here.

JACK WARNER, one of the Warner brothers who have charge of the distribution of Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," was in the city last week and was very much pleased with the results of the picture in the southern part of the state.

MESSRS. LAMEREAUX AND KOPPEL, managers of the Max Ascher theatres in Chicago, were in Milwaukee the other day looking over the theatre conditions in the city.

POPULAR DEMAND will bring "The Unbeliever" back to the Strand theatre for a return engagement. This war picture created much favorable comment here, and as the Strand has been the only theatre to show this picture, many who were unable to see it at its first showing asked that it be re-engaged, with the result that Manager Perry has secured it for a three-day engagement. On Sunday "The Geezer of Berlin," a travesty on "The Beast of Berlin," will come to the Strand for a week's engagement. In addition there will be shown the third official release of the Allies' Official War Review.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA, in "The City of Dim Faces," had a four-day run at the Butterfly theatre the fore part of this week.

THE COMMUNITY SINGING which was originally engaged by the Alhambra management for a two weeks' stay, has been extended and this week marks the fifth consecutive week. This will be the last week of it in this city as Mr. Carberry has accepted the offer of a Chicago house to introduce it to the people of the Windy City. It is expected that from Chicago he will go to Minneapolis.

A DOUBLE FEATURE BILL has been shown at the Princess theatre for four days. Dorothy Dalton in "Unfaithful" and William Desmond in "The Marriage Bubble" were the attractions. Frank Keenan and Enid Markey came to the Princess screen for a three-day engagement in "Jim Grisby's Boy."

"OLD WIVES FOR NEW" drew large crowds at the Alhambra theatre.

THE DOWNER THEATRE has largely advertised Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg." This is the first up-town showing this picture has had, and it has had but one down-town showing. The Downer is continuing its display advertising, and crowded houses are the result.

GEORGE FISHER, manager of the Alhambra theatre, is taking a week's vacation. It will include an automobile tour of the Middle West.

Fond du Lac Likes Daylight Saving

"HAS the daylight saving edict worked injury to the moving picture business?"

Racine managers opine that it has.

The managers of Fond du Lac's moving picture houses declare that it has not.

And there you are.

"Take it from me," said Manager William E. Ainsworth of the Orpheum, "the daylight saving edict is all right and I hope that it stands for all time. It suits me fine. Our business is better than ever and, besides, it saves electric light bills, and as you know, the charges for electric light current have aviated along with other necessities."

As he doesn't know where that is, he will make it a combination of both pleasure and business.

INDUSTRY, Illinois, with a population of 600, has two picture theatres, both running every night in the week, and drawing from a distance of twenty miles around. The reason of this is the good all year around auto roads. Illinois exhibitors who are wise will vote this Fall for the sixty-million dollar bond issue, which will be up at the primaries in September.

RUMOR HAS IT that "The Vigilantes" will open at the Playhouse, Chicago, for a run, Aug. 18. This is a new seven-reel production dealing with California of the early days and made by the Bear State Film Co., of which Mr. Lewis J. Hampton is the head.

Windom, who was Mr. Holmes' director while in Chicago, has gone with him and will act in the same capacity on the Coast. The intention now is to turn out a series of high-class comedy dramas, announcement of which will be made soon.

The first two pictures are doing particularly well, there being few open dates for the months of August and September. On "Toys of Fate," with Nazimova, he had two weeks' bookings at the Washington theatre, Detroit, and the Majestic Gardens in Grand Rapids, and in Detroit alone has taken more than 60 contracts. Elgin Items of Interest

MISS RUTH RORIG, who so ably demonstrated her prowess as business manager of the Orpheum theatre, Elgin, during absence of her father in western wheat lands, has turned her ability to naval service and become Elgin's first Yeowoman to enter the navy. Mr. Rorig has now the assistance of another daughter, Miss Mayme, and his son, Paul, in management of his playhouse in anticipation of leaving affairs in their charge when returning west to supervise the harvesting of his crops.

RUMORS repeatedly denied but indicative of the forthcoming sale of the Temple theatre buzz about the ears of moving picture fans in Elgin. The understanding given on dependable authority is that Manager Frank Vanston has "made a mint o' money" on his theatre investment and in middle life is able to retire from business activity. The entrance of his two sons into the war, who were valued assistants of the manager, is doubtless hastening the sale expected to be closed soon.

RETURN showing of Alice Brady in "Miss Petticoats" revived its popularity at the Orpheum the second week in July. Other pictures shown were May Allison in "The Winning of Beatrice," Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson in "Masks and Faces." The next week the bill included Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "Pay Day," Robert Warwick in "The Mad Lover," House Peters in "The Rail Rider" and Ethel Clayton in "The Journey's End."

RECENT showings at the Temple have included Frank Mills in "My Husband's Friend," Gale Henry and William Farney in "The Borrowed Baby," Margarita Fisher in "A Square Deal," Charlie Chaplin in "A Ford Elopement," Kenneth Harlan and Mary MacLaren in "The Model's Confession," Alma Rubens in "The Painted Lily," Charlie Chaplin in "The Hula Hula Dance," Roy Stewart in "The Fly God," Edith Roberts in "The Deciding Kiss," Gloria Swanson and Lee Hill in "The Railroad and the Stage," Charlie Chaplin in "The Champion," Louise Glaum in "An Alien Enemy," Franklyn Farnum in "The Empty Cab," William Desmond in "Closing In," Henry B. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor" and "You Can't Believe Everything."

CONSTANCE TALMADGE in "The Shuttle" went good at the Grand the second week in July. Sessue Hayakawa in "Hidden Pearls" and Lina Cavelieri in "The Eternal Temptress" completed the bill. The third week the theatre offered Nazimova in "Revelation," George Beban in "One More American" and Mabel Normand in "Joan of Plattsburg." Mabel Normand is always a good drawer for Elgin fans.

THE third week at the Star included in offerings June Caprice in "The Camouflage Kiss," Charlie Chaplin in "Oh, What a Night." Peggy Hyland and Antonio Morena in "Her Right to Live." Charlie Chaplin in return showing of "The Fireman," Fatty Arbuckle in "Moonshine," Louise Fazenda in "The Kitchen Lady," Harry Moore and Betty Howe in "A Game with Fate," Harold Lloyd in "Two Gun Gussie," Polly Moran in "Roping Her Romeo," Pearl White in "The House of Hate," Gladys Brockwell in "The Devil's Wheel," and Anita Stewart in "The Glory of Yolande." In the week previous were shown Harry Morey in "A Bachelor's Children," Charlie Chaplin in "The Rink," Mrs. Vernon Castle in "The Mysterious Client," George Walsh in "Brave and Bold," Chester Conklin in "A Pullman Bride," Gale Henry in "A Blind Pig" and "The House of Hate."

VAUDEVLLE acts in picture form, featuring prominent actors and actresses on the stage, elaborately filmed, are an innovation announced by the Temple management. The departure in program will be put into operation in the near future.

THE bill at the Grand included Mae Marsh in "The Face in the Dark," Constance Talmadge in "Up the Road with Sallie," Mary Pickford in "Amarilly of Clothesline Alley," and Pauline Frederick in "Madame Jealousy." Audiences crowded the house for the Talmadge picture. The picture made one of the biggest hits of the summer.

THE STAR offered Peggy Hyland in "The Debt of Honor," Charlie Chaplin in "His Dare Devil Queen." Nell Shipman in "The Girl from Beyond," Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," Doris Kenyon in "The Great White Trail," Earle Williams and Grace Darmond in "The Seal of Silence," Charlie Chaplin in "The Jazz Waiter," Pearl White in "The House of Hate," Gladys Brockwell in "Her One Mistake," and Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man." The Marsh picture was one in the plans of Manager Crocker to bring back for return showing, at 15 cents admission, pictures having their premiere in Elgin at the Grand at 25 cents. The plan is meeting with marked success.

THE TEMPLE offered Mary Miles Minter in "Social Briars," Charlie Chaplin in "A Knight of the Road," Henry Walthall and Mary Carlson in "Hoops of Steel," Herbert Rawlinson in "Smashing Through," Carmel Myers in "The City of Tears," and other special features.

ON the Orpheum program were Kitty Gordon in "The Purple Lily," Francis X. Bushman in "Cyclone Higgins, D.D.," the Drews in "Before and After Taking," Frank Keenan in "The Thoroughbred," and Carlyle Blackwell in "The Leap to Fame."

Late News from La Crosse

MANAGER FRANK L. KOPPELBERGER has booked "Pershing's Crusaders," and will show it the latter part of Summer or early part of Fall.

"THE UNBELIEVER" will play a return engagement at the Bijou theatre Aug. 4 and 5. This picture was played at the Bijou two weeks ago for four days to phenomenal business.

CHARLES RAY in "The Family Skeleton" played at the La Crosse theatre July 22, 23 and 24.

SANITARY DETACHMENT, 10th Regt., Wisconsin State Guards, staged a benefit at the Majestic theatre, July 17, 18, 19 and 20, for the establishment of a mess fund for their encampment. A very satisfactory sum was realized. Mary Pickford in "The Little American" and Sessue Hayakawa in "The Honor of His House" were the two attractions for the four days.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS will be seen at the Bijou in "The Habit of Happiness."

EMMY WEHLEN was seen to good advantage in "The Shell Game" at the Bijou July 19 and 20. It is a very satisfactory picture.

THE MAJESTIC AND LA CROSSE theatres have installed ornamental fountains in their lobbies. The delicious coolness suggested by these fountains has an important psychological effect on patrons, and no doubt draws in folks from the sweltering heat of the street.

"BELIEVE ME, XANTIPPE" made a big hit at the Majestic theatre July 22 and 23. Wallace Reid is a prime favorite in La Crosse, and his work in the picture endeared him all the more to picture fans.

EMILY STEVENS in "Outwitted," and Bert Lytell in "The Trail to Yesterday" are booked for early showings at the Bijou.

In Springfield Theatres

THE PRINCESS reports good business with "The Public Defender," a Doll-Van production, with Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon and Robert Edeson played on Sunday, Monday and Tuesday; "The Heart of a Girl," a World film with Irving Cummings and Barbara Castleton, was the attraction on Wednesday and Thursday; Friday and Saturday, "The Oldest Law," another World feature, delighted patrons, this one starring John Bowers and June Elvidge. The usual comedies and news weeklies were also used during the week.

CHARLES RAY came to the Vaudette for four days Sunday, July 14, in "The Claws of the Hun." This proved a very timely and patriotic picture. Douglas Fairbanks will follow Ray on July 18, 19 and 20 with a "repeat" booking of "Manhattan Madness." Then comes delightful Marguerite Clark for four days in the ever popular "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

J. REILLY, star salesman for Metro, has been in the city in the interests of his company. "To Hell with the Kaiser" seemed to be the subject most on J.'s mind, and according to the man it is about the greatest seven-reel subject that anyone ever produced.

THE LYRIC is doing well, as usual. Starting with the Lee children in "We Should Worry," and running through the week with "The Winning of Beatrice," with May Allison, finishing with Norma Talmadge in "De Luxe Annie."

AT THE last minute W. W. Watts was forced to abandon his plan to attend the convention at Boston. There were no delegates from this part of the State.

HARRY THORNTON, manager of the Gaiety, was in Chicago the first part of the week of July 7.

"DE LUXE ANNIE," Select play with Norma Talmadge, had three great days at the Lyric. Patrons said it was one of the best pictures ever brought to this city.

THE GAIETY had a great week with Mary Pickford in "How Could You, Jean?" and Gloria Swanson in "Station Content." The weather was cool and everyone had a desire to see the good films that were being offered.

THE VAUDETTE reports the week of July 7-13 one of the best this summer. "The Kaiser's Shadow," with Dorothy Dalton, and "Sandy," with Jack Pickford and Louise Huff, were the offerings.

"SHARK MONROE" opened Sunday, July 14, at the Gaiety for four days, but business was not up to Hart's Sunday standard. Too hot, was the reason given out by Manager Thornton. "Cinders of Love," one of the Mack Sennett Keystone reissues, was on the same program. "The Venus Model," a Goldwyn play with Mabel Normand, comes on July 18, 19 and 20.

VICTOR GEORG, local photographer, took moving pictures of the children competing in the garden work in this city. The parade moved down Capitol avenue towards the State House. The films will be given three days' showing at the Princess when they are finished.

HARRY LOPER, of the Lyric, is planning a motor trip to Chicago, thence to Chillicothe, Ohio, where his brother, Lieutenant Russell Loper, is stationed. Harry says he will be accompanied from Chicago by his father, Major Loper, and his mother.

WILLIAM FARNUM will come to the Lyric on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 18, 19 and 20, in "Rough and Ready." This will be the big fellow's first apearance in the city in many months. "The Conqueror" was the last film shown in which "Big Bill" starred.

KITTY GORDON in "Tinsel" will be the Princess attraction on July 17 and 18, and Bessie Barriscale in "Patriotism" will come on July 19 and 20.

THE DREWS, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney, are due at the Lyric on July 16 and 17 in "Pay Day," their first five-reel photoplay. "Sid" and his wife are strong favorites here, due to the nice clean pictures in which they have always been featured in.

THE GAIETY has booked William Russell in "Up Romance Road" for three days, starting July 21. This will be the first time that Russell has ever apeared in a picture at this playhouse. "The Fair Pretender," a Goldwyn play with Madge Kennedy and Tom Moore, will come to the Gaiety on July 26 and 27.

THE TRIANGLE "split" feature—William Desmond in "The Marriage Bubble" and Dorothy Dalton in "Unfaithful"—delighted great crowds at the Capital July 16. Other pictures lately shown at the Capital that have pleased are "Draft 258," Viola Dana in "Breakers Ahead," Alma Rubens in "The Love Brokers," W. S. Hart in a two-reel reissue, and Charlie Chaplin in "A Dog's Life."

CHARLES WILLIAMS, formerly manager at the Vaudette theatre prior to his enlistment, is at home on a furlough from Fort Morgan, Alabama. He is attached to the military band at that cantonment.

BEN ROVIN reports things "humming" at the Amuse-U.

ROYAL BOOKINGS for the week of July 14-20 reveal the following good things: Sunday, June Elvidge in "The Blind Adventure"; Monday, "Little Miss No-Account," with Gladys Leslie; Tuesday, "The Feast of Life," with Clara K. Young; Wednesday, "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," with June Elvidge and Carlyle Blackwell; Thursday, big special feature; Friday, "The Girl Philippa," with Anita Stewart; Saturday, "The Girl with the Champagne Eyes," featuring Jewel Carmen.

SAVOY OFFERINGS from July 14-20 run as follows: Helen Gibson and Lee Moran-Eddie Lyons comedy on Sunday; Monday, Mae Murray in "Face Value"; Tuesday, Jack Gardner in "Open Places"; Wednesday, "The Woman in the Web," No. 12, a Lee Moran and Eddie Lyons comedy, and News Weekly; Thursday, "Bettina Loved a Soldier," with Rupert Julian and Louise Lovely; Friday, "The Lion's Claws," with Marie Walcamp; Saturday, Mary McLaren in "The Model's Confession."

"THE CLAWS OF THE HUN," Charles Ray's newest Ince-Paramount play, had four big days at the Vaudette. This proved one of the most patriotic and entertaining propaganda pictures to be released this year.

HAROLD LOCKWOOD in "Lend Me Your Name" and Constance Talmadge in "The Lesson" are two pictures coming to the Lyric soon of which much are expected.

What Racine Is Doing

"BELIEVE ME, XANTIPPE," starring Wallace Reid and Ann Little, started the week's business with a rush at the Palace Sunday and Monday, July 14 and 15. Billie Rhodes and Billy Parsons in a two-act comedy completed the bill for the two days. "The Service Star," with Madge Kennedy, followed on Tuesday and Wednesday. Viola Dana preceded "Believe Me, Xantippe," on Saturday, in "Opportunity."

CHARLES RICHMAN and Mary Fuller drew well at the Rex theatre in "The Public Be Damned," shown Saturday, July 13, and Gladys Brockwell was well received on Sunday in "The Scarlet Road." Kitty Gordon in "Society Tinsel," shown in conjunction with the official war review, packed the house on Monday.

TOM NORMAN, manager of the Rex theatre, has again added to his orchestra and now has three pieces. Violin, piano and saxophone make a fine combination for theatre music. Tom Kenyon sings nightly as a special attraction. The new orchestra is directed by E. C. Sullivan.

WITH THE PLASTERING of the ceiling in the interior of the new Rialto theatre completed, the contractors have started work on the walls and balcony and are pushing it right along. The place, although full of scaffolding, has begun to take on the aspect of a theatre at last. The entire front of the building has been torn out and is being made over.

Good Report on "Hearts of the World" From Flint

"WE did a most satisfactory business with 'Hearts of the World,'" said Manager Frank H. Butterfield of the Palace theatre, Flint, which ordinarily shows vaudeville, but which brought in the big Griffith production to close its season, playing the entire week beginning June 30.

The biggest business of the week, except on July 4, was done on Sunday, the opening day. Two houses that were nearly capacity of the theatre which seats 1,500 saw the film and the crowd at night broke forth in one of the most remarkable demonstrations that have ever been witnessed in connection with the production of any film play in Flint. Toward the end of the show where the American troops are shown entering the fight for world freedom, the audience arose en masse and stood for several moments yelling, waving arms, throwing up hats and whistling. Milder demonstrations of the same nature were witnessed at several other performances.

Enterprise Installs New Motiograph

THE ENTERPRISE OPTICAL CO. has installed a new Motiograph De Luxe in the new Home theatre, Indiana Harbor, Indiana. Mr. Spahr figures that Mr. Ferdinand Ketick shows his "enterprise" as the machine was installed particularly to put the picture "Over the Top" on as it should be.

News from Fond du Lac

GERARD'S "My Four Years in Germany," generously and intelligently advertised with large copy in the local newspapers and with big billboard space and window display, made such a hit at the Bijou Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, July 15, 16 and 17, that Manager Smith added two days to the showing, making a five-day run. Manager Smith is now directing his energies toward the publicity work for "The Unbeliever," which is booked for the second week in August.

"INTOLERANCE," shown at the Henry Boyle theatre Thursday, Friday and Saturday, July 18, 19 and 20, at low prices, drew the large attendance that its merit warranted.

THE HENRY BOYLE presented the picture, "Over There," on July 22 and 23, under the auspices of the Loyal Order of Moose as a benefit performance, the proceeds going to the Moose yarn fund.

MANAGER AINSWORTH of the Orpheum has suffered along with other managers as a result of Sunday afternoon band concerts, but decided that he for one would decline to throw up his hands. He selected an unusually strong picture and then put on another just as good—two in one. That is how it happened that Orpheum patrons on Sunday, July 21, saw Geo. Walsh in "Chasing the Kaiser" and Charley Chaplin in a return engagement of "A Dog's Life."

Epidemic Causes Temporary Closing of Dubuque Theatre

THE spread of infantile paralysis, during the week of July 7th, caused the Dubuque Board of Health to issue an order closing all theatres, Sunday Schools, children's playgrounds and parks until the epidemic had been brought under control. In every case, especially that of the moving picture theatres, there was evidence of a sincere desire to co-operate to the utmost, although the theatre proprietors suffered a considerable financial loss in their effort to be of service. Manager Boyle of the Dreamland was the first to put up his "closed" notices and to withdraw his ads from the newspapers and he was closely followed by managers Lorenx, Wilbur, Yount and Rosenthal of the Grand, Liberty, Family and Majestic theatres respectively.

You Can't Believe Everything---

But it is a safe bet that when exhibitors themselves enthuse about the way screen reviewers handle a pen after sitting through a picture in weather like this YOU CAN BELIEVE THAT TRUTH IS BOUND TO OUT!

Just look at this! While the thermometer was getting ready to go over the top and slide down on the other side of 100, this letter came:

"I read most of the Exhibitor Reviews by Mr. Harrison in MOTION PICTURE NEWS and I claim his judgment is to the point. From what I hear, most exhibitors are reading the reviews, and I believe some are very well paid by reading them and using their guidance in selecting pictures. Several have told me the reviews are a great help to them in booking films."

Very truly,

FRANK TICHY,
Minneapolis, Minn.

But Wait! Don't go yet. Listen to this:

"Extend our best wishes to P. S. Harrison—the best motion picture critic on the map today."

Symphony in Los Angeles Spruces Up

THE SYMPHONY THEATRE, Los Angeles, recently had a number of improvements made including new carpets, draperies and screen. The reopening of the house was held on the morning of July 1, when the new low-priced policy which provides an admission fee of ten and fifteen cents, plus war tax, was inaugurated, with the showing of the Louise Glaum Paralta subject "The Alien Enemy." In connection with the feature the program included a Pathe-Rolin comedy featuring Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels, and a World-Dressler comedy. During the week Miss Glaum, Marie Dressler, Harold Lloyd and Bebe Daniels made personal appearances at the theatre on different evenings.

B. C. Steele, formerly identified with the Mall Theatre at Cleveland, is the new manager of the Symphony, and is responsible for the introduction of the low prices. The Symphony for the past year or more has had an admission fee of ten, twenty and thirty cents, plus war tax, but the prices have now been reduced to ten and fifteen cents. The cause of the reduction was that this theatre was not playing to capacity business.

The reduction in price has caused comment on Film Row, and throughout theatre circles, and by some it is prophecied the cut made at the Symphony will probably cause other down town first-run house managers to make a change in their price schedule. With the exception of the Symphony, all down town houses are now charging ten, twenty and thirty cents, plus war tax, or more.

Girl Becomes "Salesman" at Salt Lake

NOBODY at the Salt Lake office of the Universal has yet attempted to say that the war was the cause of Miss Donzella Cross, a Salt Lake girl, being taken into that establishment as a "salesman." Gus Hager, the big boss of the establishment, has said that such is not the case, and what he says goes—at the Universal at least.

Miss Cross has the distinction, it is believed, of being the first woman salesman in the film game in this country. Several efforts on her part to land with the Universal in Salt Lake were unsuccessful, when suddenly J. S. Stout, who had been salesman for the company, resigned. Miss Cross was sticking around, ready for work. To give the young woman a try-out, Mr. Hager sent her into the San Pete section of Utah, one of the toughest selling sections in the State. Her first week's receipts showed a big increase over that turned in by any of the boys. She is now in southern Idaho, bound on showing up some of her fellow "roadmen."

Although she is now making her initial appearance as a salesman, Miss Cross is no novice to the film game. She was connected with the executive organization of Universal City for some time. She is a native of Salt Lake, a graduate of the Northwestern University, Chicago; a graduate of the University of California; an accomplished musician and a skilled linguist.

"Kaiser" Returns to Garrick

AFTER three weeks' downtown run at the Superba theatre in Los Angeles to the biggest receipts in the history of the weeks, "The Kaiser, Beast of Berlin," played in several suburban houses, and this week was returned to the Garrick theatre for another week's showing. The original presentation at the Superba was for twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents, and the Garrick prices are now fifteen, twenty and thirty. The attendance has been up to the expectation of the Garrick management, but it is not spectacular in any sense, as business of the theatres is lower than normal because of the vacation season, and many Los Angeles people spending considerable time at the beaches.

"Pershing's Crusaders" Advance in the West

"PERSHING'S CRUSADERS," distributed in California, Arizona and Nevada by the All-Star Feature Distributors, has been put over in Los Angeles in a wonderful way which indicates a remarkable run which may prove phenomenal from the attendance and box-office receipts standpoint.

This film was booked by Messrs. Miller, Leonhardt and Bosley for showing at the Alhambra theatre, and the admission prices were increased to twenty-five, thirty-five and fifty cents over the regular admission charge of fifteen, twenty and thirty cents.

First the film was shown to the Los Angeles County Council of Defense, and after seeing it the members unanimously adopted a resolution urging all people to attend, and asking the newspapers to give all space possible for publicity on this film. Mayor Woodman of Los Angeles and his staff, together with the City Council, were shown the picture, and he issued a special proclamation urging all citizens of the city to witness this picture.

Arrangements were made with the band of the Submarine Base at Los Angeles harbor for a concert and parade through the principal streets, which was held Monday at 2.30 o'clock, and another Thursday of the first week of the run. Robert Pool, who has been identified with Los Angeles theatres as publicity man, and more recently manager of the "Cleopatra" company for the Fox organization, was placed in charge of exploitation on this film for Los Angeles.

"Pershing's Crusaders" opened Monday evening, July 15, and the business at the Alhambra was beyond all expectations, limited only by the capacity of the house, which is around the 900 mark.

The film has been booked at a number of other houses in this section, the largest in each of the respective cities. These bookings include those made by W. W. Whitson of the Plaza theatre, San Diego; Strand, San Bernardino; Hippodrome, Taft; Potter, Santa Barbara, and others.

Bru Visits Chaplin Studio at Los Angeles

H. H. BRU of the First National Exchange at New York, and affiliated with the Turner & Dahnken organization which has theatres in the San Francisco district, spent several days of this week in Los Angeles, much of the time at the Chaplin studio. While here Mr. Bru attended several of the Los Angeles theatres, and was particularly complimentary on the manner in which they were conducted.

Advertising Men Convene in San Francisco

TWO interesting meetings of the Screen Advertisers department were held at the fourteenth Annual Convention of Associated Advertising Clubs of the World in San Francisco last week. At these meetings, Tirey L. Ford, president of the Animated Film Corporation, makers of cartoon advertising films, presided. Perhaps the most interesting talk was that by James P. Simpson of Dallas, Texas, who explained his plan of operation and the success he had attained in creating a circuit of fifty-two houses in which he pays from twenty-five cents to three hundred dollars per week for screen rental. The Simpson contracts provide he will not show more than three hundred feet each week, and in the event a slide is to be carried, the footage must be reduced twenty-five feet for each slide. The charges to the advertisers are at the rate of twelve dollars and fifty cents per week per fifty feet, with the provision that all ads appear in all theatres of the circuit, which includes fourteen at Dallas, eight houses at Fort Worth, six in Waco, and twenty-four in smaller towns. Only the best theatres in each city are used, thus giving the advertisers quality as well as quantity in the matter of readers and viewers.

J. H. Beal, publicity director at Universal City, told what the people of the film colony had done in a patriotic way since the entrance of the government in the war. Following this a resolution was adopted which read as follows:

That we pledge anew our devotion to our country's cause and proffer the free and unlimited use of our service to our President at all times for the purpose of furthering the propaganda of war, promoting the sale of Thrift Stamps and Liberty Bonds, raising money for the Red Cross and for any and all purposes that in his wisdom the President may deem desirable.

We further pledge our service to the development of that sustaining sentiment at home that cheers and encourages our brave boys at the front.

Metro Branch Managers Meet in Los Angeles

A TWO-DAY SESSION of West Coast and Intermountain States Metro branch managers and salesmen was held in Los Angeles July 12 and 13, at which Joseph Engle, treasurer of Metro Film Corporation, and Special Representative Harry Lustig, who makes his headquarters in Seattle, presided. At this meeting plans for the distribution of Metro programs for the coming year were gone over, and the sales force of the West given a very thorough conception of the best manner in which to handle their work.

An impetus to the sales force in the handling of "To Hell with the Kaiser" was given by Treasurer Engle, who made a substantial offer to the exchange manager who would show the biggest returns on this picture, and also a second prize. Both prizes will consist of Liberty bonds.

Those present at the convention were Charles Klein, Denver; A. B. Lamb, Salt Lake; Carl Stein, Seattle; Louis Reichert, San Francisco; Harry G. Ballance, Los Angeles, all branch managers. B. F. Rosenberg, Bert Lubin and R. G. Turner, salesmen in the Western territory, were also present, as well as Mr. Lustig, who made a special trip to Los Angeles for this meeting.

Chaplin Picture Three Reels

THE second subject for the First National Exhibitors Association from the Chaplin Studio is promised for delivery in three or four weeks, and will consist of three reels, the largest Chaplin subject released to date. The title recently selected "Shoulder Arms" is to be retained.

What Seattle Exhibitors Say

MIKE ROSENBERG, president of the De Luxe Film Company, of Seattle and Portland, announces that his company has purchased the Northwestern rights for "The Grain of Dust." Another subject purchased by Rosenberg is "They Shall Not Pass."

WORD has reached Seattle's Film Row that another girl has taken over a picture house. This girl happens to be Miss Margaret Joudry, of Rosthern, Saskatchewan, Canada. She has taken over the Rosthern in succession to her father who died recently.

SEATTLE film men were pleasantly surprised July 12, when Tom North, district manager of Pathe, came up to visit his old friends. Tom is the "Dad" of Seattle's Film Row, having interested Seattle business men in starting one four years ago. He put up the V. L. S. E Building there at that time.

THE NORTHWEST FILM BOARD OF TRADE, whose headquarters are in Seattle, has been having some unseemingly necessary trouble with the express companies. Films have reached their destination much later than they should, and consequently all concerned have suffered. President J. A. Koerpel, of the exchange, has for this reason appointed a committee of three to see the express companies and endeavor to see what could be done to expedite the shipping and receiving of films. This committee will also take up matters with the Seattle postmaster to see what could be done with pick-up delivery wagons if the parcel post were used entirely.

MADAME OLGA PETROVA was at the Liberty, Seattle, Saturday, July 13, where she made three personal appearances. The big theatre was far too small to accommodate the thousands who attempted to hear her sing.

MANAGER F. V. FISHER, of the Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Seattle, franchise holders for the Northwest First National Exhibitors' Circuit, announces that the circuit has closed a contract for eight films in which Anita Stewart will appear as star. Mr. Fisher has also announced that "My Four Years in Germany" is still breaking records, having broken all at the Rialto in Bremerton and at the Liberty, Bellingham. It is also being rebooked for return engagement. The Liberty, at Tacoma, has rebooked it for a seven-day run early in August. "Pershing Crusaders" has been taking well, the Victory in Tacoma, booking it for a solid week.

MANAGER CLEMMER, of Clemmer's theatre, Seattle, has placed three little singing canaries in the theatre's rest room. The little songsters are attracting quite a little attention.

JOE MULLER, of the Palace Hip, Seattle, is showing the different episodes of "The Eagle's Eye" on his screen.

W. E. MOON has sold the Rex, at Ritzville, Wash., to Frank P. Egan.

MELVILLE ADAMS, of Northport, Wash., has enlisted in the army, and the Liberty theatre, which he was managing, will be handled by his father, Charles Adams, and sister Irene.

GLEN MILLER has closed his theatre, the Amuse-U, at Goldfield, Colo., for a short time, and is taking a vacation in Iowa.

R. H. McCLUSKEY, an active exchange man, well known in the West and especially in the Denver district, will open a theatre of his own, the Princess, in Hosington, Kan.

MANAGER CHRISTY, of the Melbourne, Tacoma, is enlarging his house from a 400 to 800 seating capacity.

EMIL NELSON has completed the Liberty theatre, at Carlsborg, Wash., seating 250.

THE Palace and Orpheum theatres, Malta, Mont., have been consolidated, the Orpheum being closed. Ed Boyle will manage the Palace, and Manager Bishnell, formerly manager of the Palace, will go to Havre to manage the Orpheum there.

MANAGER MAYME BOYLE, of the Bluebird, Greenham, Ore., has closed her theatre for the summer.

San Diego Brief Notes

"MY OWN UNITED STATES," featuring Arnold Daly, has proven a big attraction at the Pickwick.

FOLLOWING the recent production by the Virginia Brissac stock company at the Strand theatre of "Hit-the-Trail Holliday," the film showing George M. Cohan as the star in that play had a good advantage for its showing at the Cabrillo.

THE natural color pictures in Leon Douglass' "Cupid Angling," showing at the Plaza, created a great interest in this latest film accomplishment and increased the box-office receipts accordingly.

MONROE SALISBURY, in connection with the showing of "The Red, Red Heart" at the Superba this week, appeared in person and the Bluebird star was given a hearty reception. Mr. Salisbury seemed to enjoy the renewal of acquaintances here, having worked with the Pollard Picture Players when they maintained a studio at the exposition.

WILLIAM S. HART, Wanda Hawley, James Mason, Robert Broadway, Victor Wilmer and John Keefe form a party of motion picture people registered at the U. S. Grant Hotel for a few days' visit in and around San Diego.

THE CALIFORNIA AMUSEMENT COMPANY and the California Theatre Company have been incorporated here for the purpose of erecting a motion picture theatre on Broadway, between Seventh and Eighth streets, to be larger than any now operating here. Frederick and F. H. Wilms and Edward H. Post are the incorporators.

Portland News and Gossip

"HEPPNER young men have enlisted in the army and gone into the shipbuilding work in Portland in such large numbers that I find it is affecting business in motion pictures very noticeably," says J. B. Sparks, of the Star theatre, Heppner, Ore., who was in Portland recently.

ROSS NELSON, manager of the Independence, Oregon, film house (The Isis) in partnership with C. W. Henkle, has gone to Willows, Cal., to raise rice to help win the war, according to his partner. Ross will return to Oregon in the Fall.

THE ISIS has cut down its exhibitions to three days a week, owing to summer and the inroads of army and navy recruiting, as well as the demands of the shipbuilding industry in Portland.

ROBERT MARSDEN, JR., of the Noble theatre, Marshfield, Ore., has bought the Orpheum from A. Thurber, who will retire from film exhibition. Marsden has been in the film game at Marshfield for nine years and has been very successful.

DICK J. CHARLES of Vader, Wash., has hung the name "Liberty" upon every theatre he owns in Washington. This includes Vader, Napavine, Toledo, Silver Lake, Onalaska and Winlock.

MANAGER MAYME BOYLE of the Bluebird theatre, Gresham, Ore., has closed the house for the summer.

EMIL NELSON has completed the Liberty theatre, Carlsborg, Wash., seating 250.

MELVILLE ADAMS, of Northport, Wash., has enlisted in the army, and the Liberty theatre will be managed by his father, Charles Adams, and his sister, Irene.

W. E. MOON has sold the Rex, at Ritzville, Wash., to Frank P. Egan.

C. H. SLACK has bought the Marcola theatre, Marcola, Ore., from R. L. Garrison.

R. R. HUTCHINSON of Endicott, Wash., has rented a place in Winona, Wash., and is preparing to open a motion picture theatre there.

PERSONAL appearances of Clara Kimball Young and Olga Petrova in connection with patriotic activity created a decided stir in Portland, Ore., film circles.

MISS YOUNG visited Portland while on a Pacific Coast tour of Navy recruiting, and Portland had its first Navy Recruiting Day. A committee of prominent people, including society folk, greeted the star at the depot, banners were spread across the principal streets, she addressed a meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Oregon, held a big reception in the lobby of the Benson Hotel, participated in a military-civic parade, made a successful appeal for recruits at Liberty Temple, and made personal appearances at the Majestic and Liberty theatres during the afternoon and evening of one day.

W. W. KOFELDT, manager of the Majestic theatre, and Lieutenant Harold C. Jones of the U. S. Naval Reserves, were responsible for the success of the day. They planned a parade and various receptions, and more than 5,000 people gave Miss Young an enthusiastic reception at Liberty temple, with many thousands more jamming their way into the theatres.

W. H. RUDOLPH and Harry Garson were in the Young party, San Francisco, Seattle, Tacoma and Spokane being included in the Navy recruiting tour.

MME. PETROVA made two appearances at the Liberty theatre on her tour under the auspices of the National War Savings Stamp Committee, and although Portland and Oregon had gone "over the top," Petrova and Bobby North, her manager, sold more than $12,000 worth of stamps, and made a hit with thousands of fans.

A. E. LAFLAR, who has been identified with George Guthrie in Salem, Ore., for several years, has been made manager of the Columbia theatre, the popular Jensen and Von Herberg house in Portland. Mr. Laflar has had much experience in film exhibition in Iowa, Montana and Oregon, going from Lewistown to Salem. More recently he has been manager of the Oregon theatre at Salem. Mr. Laflar's friends are waiting for him to pull some typical stunts at the Columbia to attract attention to that photoplayhouse.

FOR the Harry Carey picture, "Hell Bent," Walter Armstrong had Charles Clayton make the biggest cut out that ever appeared in Portland for his Strand theatre lobby. It was from a 24-sheet, showing Carey astride a horse.

TRANSPORTATION interfered with Star theatre exhibition recently and the non-arrival of "Her Body in Bond," after it was heavily advertised, forced the screening of "The Two-Souled Woman" for most of the opening day.

F. M. HAMBURGER, booker for the Portland Mutual Film Exchange, has been named manager to succeed George E. Jackson, who left on July 23 for the army cantonment at American Lake. Mr. Hamburger was a department manager at the big Meier and Frank store before he was lured into the film game.

In and Around Denver

J. K. RANKIN, who runs the Mission theatre, at Clayton, is a firm believer in advertising, and also in presenting good pictures in the right way. Most of his advertising is unique to say the least.

AN interesting letter from Fred Carmichael, of Detroit, where he has been stationed since he left Los Angeles last November, was received this week by Walter Rand. He expects to leave about August 5 for France.

CHARLES KLEINE, local manager for Metro, was in Los Angeles attending the conference of Western managers.

FRED QUIMBY, general sales manager for Pathe, was in Denver arranging for the transfer of the Denver Exchange to Ward Scott. He left for Omaha, and will go from there direct to New York.

JAMES KERRIGAN, owner of the Isis, at Deming, New Mexico, was here a few days ago to rearrange his service. He has booked the entire output of Denver Foursquare.

THOMAS BUCY, manager of the Lyric, at Sterling, Colo., is enjoying a month's hunting and fishing in Northern Wyoming.

MISS ZETTA MARSHALL, of Pathe, has gone to Pittsburgh, where she will be connected with the same company's exchange.

WARD E. SCOTT has been named as the successor of Mr. Epperson. Mr. Scott has resigned his position as manager of Mutual, with whom he has been connected continuously for nearly five years. He has filled every position in the Mutual Exchange, and was appointed manager four years ago. He enjoys the personal acquaintance of every exhibitor in the Denver territory. His successor has not yet been announced.

WALTER S. RAND, who has been in charge of the Rocky Mountain district for Goldwyn Distributing Corporation since June, 1917, has also resigned, and has been succeeded by H. Bradley Fish. Mr. Rand has been appointed Division Manager for General, with headquarters in Los Angeles. His district will include everything west of and including Denver.

THE trade here received another surprise by the announcement that the Orpheum theatre, which recently closed the vaudeville season, would open July 21 with "Hearts of the World," the big Griffith production, for an indefinite summer run. War pictures have been very successful in Denver, and it is understood that if the Griffith picture proves as popular as other war productions shown here lately, similar pictures and possibly others will be shown at the Orpheum until vaudeville reopens in the fall.

EDWARD ARMSTRONG, district manager of Universal exchanges at Denver, Salt Lake and Butte, attended the recent convention of Universal managers held at the Sherman House, Chicago.

Accelerate —and Your Business Profits Will Also

¶ Sitting back and waiting for someone to find out that you have the best stuff on the market brings no business.

¶ Go out after the trade and it's ten to one you "bring home the bacon" if you can deliver the goods.

¶ West Coast advertisers have found out that one of the best ways to go over the top, especially in summer, is through the columns of MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

¶ Those who are not advertisers are among the missing that dropped out of sight in "No Man's Land." But you are not in that company.

¶ If you have anything to say—

In Salt Lake Film Circles

UNUSUAL success is being obtained by Gus Hager, manager of the Salt Lake Universal exchange in the disposal of "The Kaiser," the biggest hit of the Universal in the Intermountain Section for months. Two prints are being worked from the Salt Lake office. Both are booked solid into September, and it is the belief of Mr. Hager that more bookings will continue to pour into the office.

GEORGE DONE, manager of the "Gaiety" at Payson, Utah, was a visitor at Salt Lake exchanges last week. Mr. Done was spending a little money with the exchangemen in contracts for bookings.

ALVA D. McGUIRE, manager of the "American" theatres at Tremonton, Utah, and at Twin Falls, Idaho, was also a Salt Lake visitor last week.

AMONG other exhibitors who were visitors in Salt Lake last week were Fred Jenkins, manager of the Orpheum theatre, Oakley, Idaho; G. E. Pope, manager of the "Opera House," Lewiston, Utah; George Bacon, Liberty theatre, Paul, Idaho.

LOUIS MARCUS, district manager for the Famous Players-Lasky pictures, left Salt Lake last week for a visit of inspection at the Butte office of the concern. Remarkable increase in the Montana business in Paramount-Artcraft pictures, according to Gordon Place, publicity manager for the local exchange is responsible for calling Mr. Marcus to Butte to look over the reorganized forces. He made the trip by automobile.

INCREASES in the staff at the local Famous Players-Lasky exchange have taken place in the past week. The changes, according to Gordon Place, have been made necessary on account of increases in business. Miss Louise Lewis has been added to the staff in a clerical position. Dave Schayer, formerly booker for the exchange, has been promoted to the position of manager of the sales department and Samuel I. Levin has returned to the company as booker.

GORDON PLACE, through his excellent work as publicity manager of the Famous Players-Lasky exchange, has gained considerable reputation and his services are eagerly sought in Salt Lake. He has donated his services to the Civic Recreational center in Salt Lake and succeeded his first day on the job in planting three stories with pictures in Salt Lake papers.

J. B. RODEN, manager of the local exchange for the Fox, is now on a trip in Southern Utah in the interests of his office. In addition to his pile of office work, Mr. Roden finds time to renew his acquaintances around the theatres in Utah by a little selling trip.

F. C. QUINN, general sales manager for Pathe in America is expected to arrive in Salt Lake during the coming week. Mr. Quinn was formerly branch manager of the Salt Lake Office and has a host of friends among the exhibitors in the Intermountain section as well as a host of friends among the exchangemen of Salt Lake. He will spend a day in Salt Lake looking up old acquaintances and talking over the new policies and offerings of Pathe with W. A. Calkins, manager of the Salt Lake exchange.

L. D. PURDY, roadman for the local office of Pathe, has just returned from Eastern Utah after a successful campaign in that section.

Ad Men Talk "Pictures" at Convention

THE motion picture had a prominent place in the deliberations of the Ad Men, gathered together at San Francisco for the fourteenth annual National Convention of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World. This convention opened on Sunday, July 7, with the ablest publicity men from all parts of the United States in attendance.

What Exchanges and Theatres Are Doing

THE UNIVERSAL EXCHANGE is inaugurating a new policy became known this week when it was announced that a number of contracts had been made with managers of leading theatres for the showing of the entire output in the several houses. Heretofore salesmen have been engaged on each program contracting for that only, but the new policy provides they shall work on the entire output of the Universal Company, which includes Blue Bird, Jewel, Universal Specials, Comedies and News Weeklies. Included in the list of theatres that have contracted to use only Universal, or the entire output of the Universal, are the Superba theatre, Los Angeles; Superba in San Diego; Liberty, Needles; Liberty at Jerome, Arizona; Florence at Pasadena; Victoria, San Pedro; Orpheum at Flagstaff; Rainbow at Rainbow, Arizona, and a number of others. C. L. Theuerkauf has just completed a tour of Arizona for the Universal, and is responsible for the contracts made there and Manager Dave Bershon made contracts with the California theatremen.

THE BROADWAY AMUSEMENT COMPANY of San Diego, conducting the Superba, Broadway and Silver Strand in that city and Coronado, and the Kearny at Camp Kearny, has begun the publication of a sixteen-page 7 x 11 program which will be issued weekly at their several theatres. In addition to carrying the programs for the week for each house, the magazine carries several pages of news pertaining to coming productions and interesting facts concerning the different theatres. Edward L. Cowles is in charge of publicity for this company which is managed by G. A. Bush.

THE SELITE PRODUCTS COMPANY, which has a big plant at Lompoc, California, has built a theatre to be used for the entertainment of their employes numbering about six hundred and their families, and are now arranging with Los Angeles exchanges for three programs of films to be shown each week. The theatre is equipped with two Powers 6 B machines, and all modern projecting equipment.

MANAGER T. E. HANCOCK of the Los Angeles World Branch is giving shows daily of the old stage pantomime farce, "Byrne Bros. 'Eight Bells,'" the five-reel subject which is set for release on August 29th. No booking has been announced for this film, but judging from the interest aroused, it will prove very popular throughout the territory.

GRAUMAN'S THEATRE, Los Angeles, is to continue the showing of the Paramount and Artcraft subjects at least for one year, according to contracts signed by Managing Director Sid Grauman, and M. H. Lewis, who has been serving as manager of the Los Angeles Famous Players-Lasky Exchange. Consummated for a year's service to be shown at Kehrlein's Kinema theatre in Los Angeles, another large house. The Kinema contracts become effective about September 1st. The reminder of the 208 or more pictures released during the year will go to Clune's Broadway and Clune's Auditorium, and to the new California theatre which will be completed about September 15th.

THE ALL-STAR FEATURE DISTRIBUTORS, who are to handle the Literary Digest Topics of the Day, have made bookings to the first parties to which this two hundred foot film, which will have a weekly release, was shown. It is to be featured at Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles and the Imperial at San Francisco. Another new subject being handled by the All-Star Exchanges is that of the division of films of the government "Allied Nations War Review." The first-run booking for this is at the Orpheum theatre, and Clune's Broadway, Los Angeles, where it is to be shown each week.

THE coming week will see three Universal films in downtown Los Angeles theatres. "Scandal," a re-issue of the Lois Weber Production, will be on at the Garrick; "Hell Bent," featuring Harry Carey at the Riveria, and "Winner Takes All" with Monroe Salisbury at the Superba.

WALTER S. RAND of Denver, who has been identified with exchanges and for several years recently affiliated with the Goldwyn, has been selected to act as special mountain and coast states representative for the General Film Company, and will take up his new work on July 22nd, succeeding W. H. Cree, who has enlisted in the navy.

LOUIS W. THOMPSON, who has been with the Paramount-Artcraft program as salesman in the several coast offices, and more recently was manager of the Colorado theatre, Phoenix, Arizona, has been appointed salesman of the General Film and will cover the New Mexico, Arizona and Southern California territory, for both General releases and Hodkinson Productions. He is now on his first trip.

SIMULTANEOUSLY with the personal appearance of Mme. Sarah Bernhardt at the Los Angeles Orpheum theatre, the World release, "Mothers of France," starring this eminent actress, will be shown at the Symphony theatre beginning Sunday, July 28th. The Symphony is in the same block on the same side of the street, and but a few doors from the big vaudeville theatre.

THE SHERRY SERVICE has been booked for first-run showing in Los Angeles at the Alhambra theatre, and the date set for the opening of the Mary Roberts Rinehart "Street of Seven Stars," featuring Doris Kenyon, is dated for August 11. Two weeks later will come Catherine Calvert in Paul Armstrong's comedy drama, "A Romance of the Underworld."

F. M. STEELE, who has been identified with the Los Angeles Fox Exchange, has been appointed manager by William Alexander, district manager, and has already taken up work at this exchange. Messrs. Anderson and Steele have sent to theatre owners in the district, announcement of the opening of this exchange, and already have a number of booking dates made for the first few subjects of this new service, responses to the opening announcement having been made by wire in many instances.

Mary Jane Irving Celebrates Birthday

MARY JANE IRVING, the little actress who has a big role in "The Temple of Dusk," in which Sessue Hayakawa is starred, celebrated her birthday anniversary—number five—at the Hayakawa studio early in the week. Two large dolls—Hayakawa called them the "American Beauty" and the "Japanese Blossom"—were presented to Mary by the star and Tsuru Aoki, and all sorts of toys were the gifts of the other members of the company.

Record Crowds See "Smashing Through"

THE greatest number of people to attend the Superba theatre in Los Angeles for any given week paid admission during last week to see Herbert Rawlinson in "Smashing Through." The record receipts were not changed, as there have been several pictures shown at this house at advanced prices, and while the attendance for "Smashing Through" is phenomenal, the receipts were not sufficient to alter the past record. The attendance was so good that the management is now showing the picture for the second week.

Well Bought Is Half Sold

"LET OUR DISTRIBITOR INTRODUCE THE Simplex TWINS TO YOU"

That's reasonable; for if you buy what the public doesn't want to buy of you, you're stuck, that's all.

Now, there's a man who can sell you the kind of projection the public wants.

If you don't know him, ask us, and we'll tell you who and where he is.

He will introduce the Simplex Twins to you.

He will prove to your satisfaction that they do perfect work and keep on doing so, at ridiculously low wages.

Speaking again of September 1st 1919—

You Book for Years Not for Days

ONE year is the unit upon which motion picture theatres are successfully conducted—not one day or one week or one month.

You don't lay out a policy just for next week—you plan for next year, and for the year after that.

A DAY'S PROFIT means nothing in your scheme of existence. A year's profit means everything.

Your year-after-year plan calls for the best pictures. Your policy is to build your business, which means to satisfy your patrons.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's plan has the year as its unit. Its service is a year-after-year service; its policy a year-after-year policy.

Paramount and Artcraft Pictures stand as a unit, too. You don't think of one Paramount or one Artcraft Picture. You think of the Paramount and Artcraft standard and reputation and popularity which have been established not by one or two pictures, but by hundreds of pictures.

You far-seeing, year-ahead-of-the-game men: your theatres, too, have high standards, excellent reputations that have been built by hundreds of good pictures.

We're both following the same plan—the year-after-year plan.

That's why the exhibitors and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation are working together better than ever before

EVERY Paramount or Artcraft star will be there on the thousands of 24-sheet stands that will cover the country.

Extra displays will shout from every corner the message that will send more crowds into the theatres that show Paramount and Artcraft Pictures—and say so.

They'll create a new, irresistible demand for Paramount and Artcraft Pictures. The crowds will be looking in front of your theatre for the trade-marks they see on the billboards.

If you're "There" the trade-marks will be there, displayed in your lobby and the crowds—happy, contented, glad-they-came crowds will fill every seat in your theatre.

GLADYS LESLIE

A FIVE PART BLUE RIBBON FEATURE

Written by Joseph Franklin Poland

Directed by Frederic Thomson

Use this as copy for your program

"Wild Primrose" they called her, for they thought she was still a wild, untutored mountain girl like her mother before her, whom her father had deserted years before—because he had been too "aristocratic" to be happy with a mere mountain lass.

But Primrose had been to college, and while she was finished and cultured, she thought perhaps that she had best return in the guise of the mountain girl they expected.

She found her father's great house icy and cold—like each of its selfish inmates. And it was "Prim's" mission to bring the warmth of love into that household, to save Jack, her father's ward, from a mercenary woman who had him in the toils, and—well, a few other things that will make you like Primrose.

TO EXHIBITORS OF AMERICA:

In fixing the policy of Fox Film Corporation for next season I have carefully considered the requirements of the trade and the demands of the public.

Every owner of a motion picture theatre has a problem. Our policy has been arranged to give the best service and to enable the exhibitor to make a handsome profit. Our 1918-1919 productions are the best the Corporation has produced in its five years in business.

FOUR BIG TIMELY PICTURES

We have produced four pictures on a big scale which we are confident will create prestige and big box office receipts for every exhibitor who books them.

1. WHY AMERICA WILL WIN! Based on the life of General Pershing. This intimate romantic story of General Pershing's rise from a barefoot Missouri lad to the command of the American Army in France, is a carefully prepared, authentic life history of the famous soldier. You will see Pershing on the Missouri farm, later as a school teacher, his life at West Point, as an Indian fighter, in the Spanish War, U. S. Military Attaché in Japan, taming the Moros in the Philippine Islands, on the Mexican frontier and later in England and France. Staged by Richard Stanton. Seven reels.

2. QUEEN OF THE SEA, with Annette Kellerman. A sub-sea fantasy in six reels. A wonderful scenic conception in which Miss Kellerman displays daring in aquatic stunts. The story and supporting cast are in keeping with the tone of an Extraordinary Production. QUEEN OF THE SEA is bound to repeat box office records created by "A Daughter of the Gods." This picture will be released on a rental basis.

3. THE PRUSSIAN CUR. Staged by R. A. Walsh. Enacted by a big cast, including Miriam Cooper and based on revelations made by Captain Horst von der Goltz, confidential agent of Ambassador Count von Bernstorff, and conspirator against the United States who was condemned to die as a spy in the Tower of London in 1915. Captain von der Goltz was released to testify against the Welland Canal dynamite plotters in the United States Courts, and his amazing exposures are recited in a thrilling manner under the skillful handling of Mr. Walsh. THE PRUSSIAN CUR reveals the Kaiser's plots against America. For the first time it lays bare the schemes of the Kaiser and his agents in destroying factories, creating opposition to the Government, purchasing of newspapers, crippling of ships and the attempt to interfere with the Draft.

4. WHY I WOULD NOT MARRY. A striking, timely, morality picture produced along unique, unusual lines, with a box office appeal for men, women and children. The story is that of the most beautiful woman on earth who had seen all phases and conditions of high life; who knew men of all classes; whose whims and caprices had been satisfied in the most luxurious manner. The reason she would not marry is graphically picturized and lends itself to colossal box office possibilities. Six reels.

In a few weeks we will announce the release date of the Theodore Roosevelt film, "Put the Flag on the Firing Line."

STANDARD PICTURES

There will be 26 Standard Pictures released during the season beginning September 1st, 1918. No cost is too great for Standard Pictures. Among the stars who will appear in this group are Theda Bara, William Farnum and others.

VICTORY PICTURES

EXCEL PICTURES

There will be 26 Excel Pictures in which Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland, Jewel Carmen, Jane and Katherine Lee and others will appear.

WILLIAM FARNUM DE LUXE PRODUCTIONS

The popular appeal of William Farnum is as wide as the joys, sorrows and aspirations of human hearts. As the peerless portrayer of all that is fine and strong in American manhood, he commands a motion picture patronage that is absolutely certain to fill every theatre in which he appears.

Now, to "Les Miserables," "True Blue," "When a Man Sees Red," "Rough and Ready," "The Bondman," "A Soldier's Oath," and many other sterling productions, Mr. Farnum has added four great romances by Zane Grey, America's foremost writer of Western novels. These stories have been read by millions. They have been advertised in every town and city. Millions want to see the plays.

The William Farnum De Luxe Production scheduled for release in September is:
RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE, by Zane Grey.

This stirring tale is universally recognized as one of the greatest Western stories ever written. As "Lassiter, the Avenger of the Utah Border," Mr. Farnum has scored the supreme character achievement of his career. "Riders of the Purple Sage" is as big as the West itself. Its showing will be one of the outstanding film events of the coming year.

"Riders of the Purple Sage" will be followed by its gripping sequel, "THE RAINBOW TRAIL," and later by "THE LONE-STAR RANGER" and "THE LAST OF THE DUANES." To this wonderful Zane Grey series will be added other Farnum attractions of surpassing interest and drawing power.

THEDA BARA SUPER-PRODUCTIONS

For the filming of these splendid photodramas, William Fox has taken as his slogan, "The Best That Brains and Money Can Make."

Theda Bara stands today at the top of her profession—universally acclaimed as the foremost screen interpreter of feminine emotions. Her name has become a synonym for big, stirring, money-making productions, and her list of powerful dramatic roles includes the greatest classics of the world.

During the season of 1918-1919, Miss Bara will appear in eight new Standard Pictures. These plays will be the strongest attractions that William Fox can find for her in history, literature and present-day life.

The Theda Bara Super-Production scheduled for release in September is:

WHEN A WOMAN SINS, by Betta Breuil.

This vivid drama pictures a passionate soul's wild struggle for love against the restrictions of her stifling environment. When her untamed impulses batter down the walls of convention and bring upon her the scorn and contumely of the world, she defies smug opinion and goes the wanton way. But at last comes love and the balm of regeneration.

"When a Woman Sins" will be followed in October by THE SHE-DEVIL, by E. G. Hopkins, a vivid story of a charming vixen's escapades in Paris and Madrid.

SEASON 1918 – 1919

VICTORY PICTURES

THIS superb group of attractions has been established because the achievements and the vast popularity of Gladys Brockwell, Tom Mix and George Walsh make a step forward and upward absolutely necessary. In answer to the demand of exhibitors and public that these stars be shown in more pretentious productions, William Fox now offers his first three Victory Pictures.

GLADYS BROCKWELL in KULTUR, by J. Grubb Alexander and Fred. Myton.

Who started the World War? A new angle of this vital question appears in the strange romance of Emperor Franz Josef's beautiful favorite, who played into the hands of the Huns. In this amazing, intimate revelation of love, scandal and secret politics, Miss Brockwell scores the greatest popular triumph of her career.

TOM MIX in FAME AND FORTUNE, a dramatization of Charles Alden Seltzer's famous novel, "Slow Burgess."

Better even than "Ace High," "Western Blood" or "Cupid's Roundup," this is Tom Mix's greatest photoplay achievement. It has been produced on a scale of magnificence that guarantees a sure-fire run. "Fame and Fortune" places "the greatest cowboy actor" among the five biggest drawing cards on the screen.

GEORGE WALSH in I'LL SAY SO, by Ralph Spence.

"Smiling" George Walsh, the dashing, good-humored, devil-may-care author of hair-raising dramatic escapades! In this breezy story of love, adventure and war, he is sure to go "over the top" with a smashing, full-house triumph.

SEASON 1918 – 1919

EXCEL PICTURES

EXHIBITORS are demanding something more than "program" pictures. They are demanding special attractions, played by stars who have pronounced ability and popularity in some definite type of screen production.

William Fox, recognizing that this demand means a general toning up of the motion picture art — higher, stricter standards — has raised Virginia Pearson, Peggy Hyland and Jewel Carmen into a special series of Excel Pictures. Other well known players will be added to this group.

First releases of these popular stars in their new series will be:

VIRGINIA PEARSON in QUEEN OF HEARTS, by Harry Hoyt.

A gripping drama of mystery, love and crime. The heroine's father has been murdered. Three men who desire the hand of his daughter are suspected. Who is guilty — and who wins? The unravelling of this gripping tale is sure to be a big puller with the crowds.

PEGGY HYLAND in MARRIAGES ARE MADE, by E. Lloyd Sheldon.

Sweet, winsome Peggy Hyland in another of those appealing romances that have won her millions of admirers! A story of love that had its way through the trapping of German spies. Brimful of punch, action, thrills and surprises.

JEWEL CARMEN in LAWLESS LOVE, by Max Brand.

Miss Carmen is everywhere hailed as one of the most beautiful and talented young actresses on the screen. "Lawless Love" shows her in an absorbing, rapid-fire drama of a brave girl, a cad and a big, fighting man of the West.

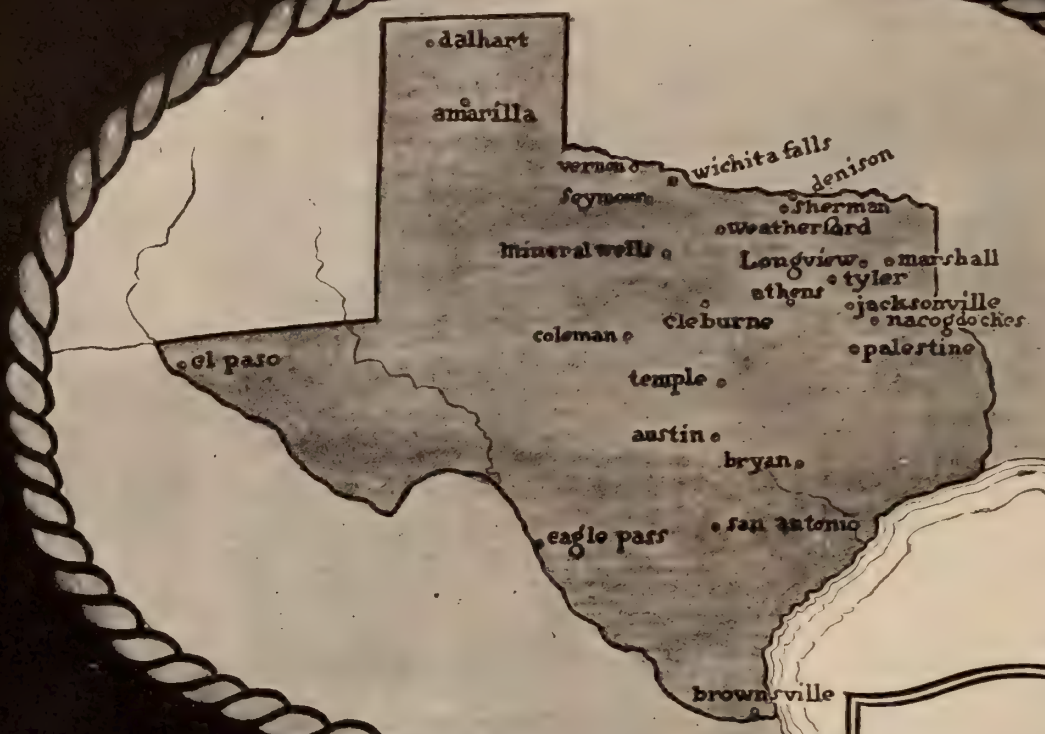
Tying in Texas to "Hodkinson Copartnership"



Texans are sturdy, keen, hard-headed business men. They "want to know" before giving their support to anything. Confidence, sincerity and principle appeal to them strongly.

These are some of the reasons why the "tying in" of Texas to the Hodkinson Co-Partnership Plan has gone ahead with such rapidity.

Texas is only one sample of what is happening throughout the Union. Every day sees the Hodkinson Co-Partnership Plan doing something—developing and growing.

New product, new representatives and new co-partners mark the mile stones of our progress.

The Whole Story

IN two months, United Class A theatres will be showing their first United Pictures.

United exhibitors the country over will be taking pride in the fact that none of these splendid pictures can be shown in any but United theatres.

Selected by experienced showmen with a view towards filling exhibitor wants and needs, these pictures will have been co-operatively purchased at wholesale prices under the United plan, and their exclusive use will have come to United exhibitors at lower rentals than they are now paying for pictures of a similar grade.

If you haven't enrolled by then, your neighbor, who has, will have the laugh on you.

Need Men?

Let's look in these 400 Branches FIRST!

Before you make a move to hire men see what men the Government can find for you.

On the map are spotted the 400 offices that the Government has established for this one purpose of helping manufacturers find men.

They blanket the country. And in addition there are 20,000 U. S. Public Service Reserve agents who reach down into every little hamlet where there is labor to be had.

U. S. Employment Service makes no charge for its service. It is supplying the labor for the shipyards. It is supplying a daily growing number of manufacturers working on war orders. It is the one way to reduce the labor turnover and increase production. Use it when YOU need men.

CHICAGO HERALD

WITH ALL DUE RESPECT to the eloquence of the four-minute men, the "Kingdom of Grief" at the Auditorium this week will sell more Liberty Bonds in Chicago than 400 four-minute men talking for four hours at a stretch from now until the end of the world!

If you haven't seen "Belgium, the Kingdom of Grief," you don't know anything about the Germans, even if you are one! If you have seen it you know far too much about them for your own peace of mind, and you will open your heart and your pocketbook and get behind the man behind the gun for all you are worth.

The woman's committee of the Council of National Defense, Illinois division, brought this picture to Chicago to make you believe a whole lot that you didn't believe.

"The Kingdom of Grief" shows you in a quiet, impressive manner just what the Germans did to Belgium, and as you see the actual pictures of the invasion of Brussels and Antwerp, the scenes change before the eyes of your imagination and you behold the Germans as they might have come marching into America.

The first showing of the film was made last night at the Auditorium before a gathering of the most fashionable folk in Chicago, who were all keen to see this film that the Germans have tried to suppress, but which will always be preserved in the Royal Museum of Brussels as testimony of what the little country has suffered.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

The members of the committee who saw it when it was given for the censor say that it is the most remarkable war film that has ever been seen in this country and that it will bring a tear to the eye of every one who is interested in stricken little Belgium.

Selling Yourself = A War Time Duty

IT is right that the motion picture industry should be classed as an essential industry.

But it is not right, simply because it has been so classed, that it should continue to permit inefficiency, extravagance and waste to run amuck within its doors.

The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation was created primarily to save the exhibitor money. It makes possible, however, even a greater saving to the Government.

When you sell yourself, as you do under the co-operative booking plan of the Affiliated, you not only save for yourself the high cost of film selling, but you save the Government man power, and the use of capital for other purposes.

If all motion pictures were booked on this plan, hundreds of film salesmen, shippers and other film employees would be released to other useful industries, and millions of dollars would be saved the exhibitor, the public and the exchanges to help the Government win the war.

The Affiliated will be ready within the next thirty days to begin saving money and man power.

Have you arranged to get your share of this saving? If not, get in touch with the National Director of the Affiliated in your territory at once, or send for the booklet, "The Exhibitor Dominant."

MARTIN JOHNSON'S PICTORIAL TRIUMPH

"Cannibal Isles of the So. Pacific"

They provide a wonderfully novel attraction for all classes of theatres, for they are films that are most extraordinary, interesting and instructive.
R. W. B.,
Exhibitors' Trade Review.

These are remarkable pictures and probably the most unusual that have ever been taken, for they were secured at imminent risk of life.
Motion Picture News.

This extraordinary showing —the like of which has never been flashed on screen—is entitled "Isles of the South Pacific." The most original and bewildering frank picturization and the very acme of perfection.
Miss Russell,
Billboard.

Quite as thrilling as a Robert Louis Stevenson story.
New York Tribune.

There is no doubt about it, frequent omission of a feature picture of the accepted type is a relief, and the more so when such a novelty as the Cannibal Isles picture can be secured.
Dramatic Mirror.

Besides being a distinct novelty, these pictures are of unquestioned educational value. They form a rare combination of entertainment and instruction and are strongly recommended as a unique attraction at any type of film theatre.
D. G. Watts,
New York Telegraph.

No pictures of travel could be more interesting.
Evening Telegram.

These pictures are Mr. Rothapfel's pride of the week. Thrills? Yea, Boy, and Yea, Lady!
Here is the best of reasons for the movies' existence.
S. J. Kaufman,
Evening Globe.

In many ways it is a remarkable travel picture.
New York Herald.

Exceedingly interesting and instructive are these remarkable motion pictures.
Brooklyn Eagle.

Pictures of less merit have been shown under other auspices at four or five times Rothapfel's prices for many years.
New York Call.

It is a safe prediction that many of those who don't think they would like Mr. Johnson's pictures will find themselves absorbingly interested if they will just go and look at them.
New York Times.

The Rivoli program makes no overstatement in announcing these pictures as genuinely remarkable.
T. E. Oliphant,
Evening Mail.

"Cannibal Isles of the South Pacific" a remarkable cinema.
New York Sun.

A succession of scenes of sustained and enthralling interest.
New York Review.

A most startling series of film presentations.
Motion Picture World.

I thoroughly enjoyed this offering, which was presented this week at the Rivoli for the first time anywhere, and the audible expressions of the gang of cash customers that sat around me was conclusive evidence that they were interested and entertained.
Given intelligent specialized exploitation this should go big.

Realizing that the value of Chaplin films were steadily increasing, Essanay held this film in its vaults until the most opportune time for release, which we believe to be NOW.

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 18. No. 6 August 10, 1918

The Time Is Now!

ONLY a few months more and the trade papers will assume a certain aspect with which readers are all too familiar.

We feel that we can almost prepare the schedule for you.

First will come the definite news from Washington telling of the introduction in Congress of the new tax bill—with provisions for drastic boosts in all figures affecting motion pictures.

Then we will read of hurry-call meetings of the National Association, equally hurried trips of hastily formed committees to Washington.

Meetings of exhibitor organizations, national and local, will claim their share of trade paper space for protests, rambling resolutions, the usual lengthy speeches.

Magnate So-and-So will be interviewed, declaring that the proposed taxes are satisfactory—that the industry should not protest anyway, since the nation is at war—and, hang it all, the more trouble the exhibitor has the higher admission price he will charge and the better it will be all around.

Other interviews will embody ringing calls to arms. "We are facing confiscation," we will read. "We must get together and fight, we must do something."

Trade paper mail will bulge with letters from exhibitors, wailing that the manufacturers framed the whole tax schedule to suit themselves—at the theatre owners' expense. At Washington there will be a half dozen different committees asking for a half dozen different things.

Weeks of this—and through it all we'll trust to luck and pray to Providence. When it is over, we'll find quite a number of sore spots, the usual additions to the "I Told You So" Club, the oft-written trade paper editorials declaring that next time we must fight the tax proposition with an organized advance campaign.

There's the schedule. Use your imagination—or look up your NEWS files—and you can fill in the details.

THAT is, the above is the outlook, unless we decide within a very few weeks that this time is the next time.

So far, no signs of a change in method are disclosed.

A committee of the National Association has stated the industry's attitude regarding the tax on negative and positive stock.

The War Service Association, speaking mainly for the professional branches of the industry, has made suggestions for the modifying of the income tax and now has an expert on such matters as permanent representative in Washington.

With these preliminary steps no fault can be found.

But are we to continue now with these two organizations and two exhibitor bodies carrying on four separate campaigns?

Are we to mark time while the Exhibitors League and the American Exhibitors Association await the propitious moment to embrace? Are we to stand with bated breath while the League glares and growls at the National Association, and the latter turns jealous eyes to the War Service Association?

IF we do, then we are going to hear the same familiar howls when the new tax schedule reaches the statute books.

The time to prevent the post-mortems is now.

This is entirely aside from the question of preventing higher taxes. Increased revenue Uncle Sam must have; and increased revenue the industry will gladly provide.

In fact, we believe it may be safely said that no other of the nation's industries has gone to Washington with cleaner hands and a more willing spirit than the motion picture.

Which is as it should be. Now let us see that, when we return from Washington, we have a united industry; not an industry rent asunder with the bickerings and billingsgate of a year ago.

The way is clear:

William A. Brady's re-election as President of the National Association is a vote of confidence from the industry of far greater importance than has been realized.

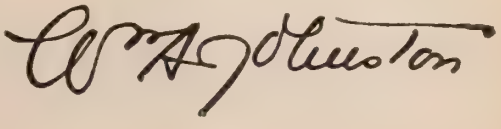
Now let Mr. Brady call upon representatives of the exhibitor organizations and the War Service Association to sit around the table with him, in an effort to formulate a campaign for the industry that will be representative of all classes.

Let him make the call to them as individuals if organization politics seem likely to provide a hurdle.

Let this all-inclusive committee start digging now for the facts that Washington will demand in the next few months. Let it learn now the attitude of all classes.

Now—not tomorrow—is the time.

Now—so that tomorrow we may be able to present a solid front in Washington; so that we may be able to say, when it is over, that justice was given to each branch of the industry.



Serving It with Speed and Ginger

Heard in Front of 729 Seventh Avenue

"Tell it me, Abe, mit all this here high-toned efficiency what we're getting in the fillum business—Sales Developer Departments, Advertisement Service, und everything—why is it nobody has made it a job called Cancellation Clerk?"

"Mawruss, you talk like a schnorrer. Ain't that the same job what they call it now, Exchange Manager?"

WE have to keep Abe and Mawruss in this act because they always enable us to start this ten-point out by saying, "Which reminds us ——."

And in the present case the reminder is that, while no trade paper scare-head stories have laid emphasis on the fact, the exchange and sales divisions of the industry are surely getting more than their proportionate share of shaking up through Uncle Sam's calls to service.

The "Honor Roll" which we publish from week to week never fails to show more than a column of names added to the military roster from film ranks. And it is a conservative guess to say that sixty per cent of the men are from the distributing end.

Managers, salesmen, bookers and operators—all are dropping the film can to take up the rifle.

We imagine that some of the distributing organizations must be suffering to the point of seriousness. At any rate it will be interesting to note the gradual evolution in the distributing end, the probable encroachment of women on the sales branch— and to consider the after-the-war problem of placing the returning "Honor Roll."

Gentlemen! There's a regular fellow in town. Meet Mr. Tom Hamlin, a square-jawed fighter from Minneapolis. Tom put up a game battle—and incidentally put up his own coin —trying to organize a cooperative booking proposition up in the Northwest but finally called it "quits" and is now hanging his hat in the First National offices.

Welcome to our city, Tom. The keys are yours.

IT'S been a long time since we have had a real Rumor Week but the past seven days have surely made up for the lapse.

Of real news there hasn't been enough to induce a trade paper editor to warm up to the point of buying a cigar—but of rumors— !

First of all there's that latest merger story linking two distributing organizations. This little rumor has been booted around by the news hounds for two weeks now—until yesterday we were whisperingly informed "The papers are all ready to sign. The lawyers have O. K.'d them, the pen has been dipped in the ink—'sh—'sh—."

Oh, well, we'll get on the phone again. Maybe someone will admit something in time for us to get it into this week's issue.

Maybe we will. But—

If all the "papers ready to sign" which Dame Rumor has told us about in the last five years and which never received the baptism of ink were placed end to end we might conservatively say that they would stretch from here to breakfast and some distance back.

* * *

Was William A. Brady getting sarcastic when he said, "We are only scratching the SERVICE," and then quickly corrected himself to "Scratching the surface"?

It happened at the Fifth Division's "Mitt Me" luncheon. Also—

Why did Fred Beecroft and Merritt Crawford eye each other guiltily every time Brady said, "You young men of the industry."

GETTING back to Rumor Week. No. 2 came in the form of a hurry-up telegram from Los Angeles declaring that a scare had been thrown into the coast colony by a persistent rumor that prominent persons in the industry were seeking to have the Government shut down on production on the ground that films on hand together with re-issues could carry through until the war is over.

This rumor hit us square between the eyes, but rush scurrying about Times Square failed to produce any prominent film person who would even countenance the rumor to the point of a denial.

It did produce any number of prominent film persons with heavy dough bags tied up in production plans stretching way into next Winter.

Which would appear to us to be sufficient denial.

From Los Angeles also came the weekly batch of rumors of prominent stars changing their orbits. It won't be many more days before these rumors catch up with each other and a real news story breaks.

John Flinn and Paul Gulick arranged for a probable attendance of fifty at the Fifth Division luncheon. When the bell rang an even hundred was ready to do justice to Mrs. Astor's best.

Which shows that STARTING SOMETHING will get a speedy response in this industry.

And watch the same boys who STARTED this give us a whirlwind finish.

SPEAKING of heavy production plans—what chance has a calamity howler in the face of the big Fox announcements this week ?

Confidence in the industry's immediate future and in his own organization is spelled in no unmistakable terms by William Fox's elaborate production plans for the coming season.

The tale is interestingly told in the advertising pages up front while the details will be found in the proper niches in the news pages.

There's an interview with Monsieur Mercanton, of France, in this week's issue which you want to read. It's on page 926.

And if you're wise you'll do as we said a few weeks ago and follow that department "The World Market." Keep your eye on that export field.

And naturally you are turning to the Exhibitors Service Bureau each week to read what the members of the Advisory Board are saying about the sort of exploitation aid the big first-run man wants.

If one of these top-rung exhibitors were to write you a letter on this subject you'd take a day off to read and study it and a week to talk it over in your organization. Well, a score of them are writing you even more frankly and fully through MOTION PICTURE NEWS every week—and you say, "Oh, I don't get much time to read the trade papers."

This is a word to the wise—and that's you.

Five Cent Houses to Be Taxed

Washington (Special)—Provisions for the new tax schedule adopted by the Ways and Means Committee of the House call for a radical change in that five cent houses will be taxed instead of being entirely exempt as under the present law.

The committee declares itself in favor of a flat one cent tax on all admissions where the charge does not exceed seven cents.

At that, the five cent houses will be getting off lighter than other theatres if the committee's present proposals are finally enacted. The proposal is for a twenty per cent tax on all admissions instead of the present tax, which is levied at ten per cent.

Word is expected from the committee in the near future as to its attitude on the tax on raw and developed film stock. General opinion inclines to the belief that the committee will adopt the recent suggestion of the Treasury Department, which called for the replacing of the one-half and one-quarter cent a foot taxes by a flat percentage tax on film rentals.

Under this scheme the exhibitor would still pay the tax directly as he does the present footage tax indirectly through the fifteen cents a reel tax.

Drews Begin on New Comedy Series

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, who have been touring the past several weeks in a legitimate production which comes into New York this week, started producing operations August 5 on the first of their new series of comedies.

These laugh-makers, which will be two reels in length, will be made under the new arrangements the Drews have made with the company of which A. J. Van Buren is the head.

At this time no release plans have been decided upon.

Vitagraph to Make 2-Reel Comedies

Vitagraph comedy companies headed by Montgomery and Rock and Larry Semons, which have heretofore been producing one-reelers, this week began making only two-reelers at the Los Angeles studios. The comedies will be more elaborate than those that the companies have been making in the past.

Bessie Love started work this week at the Los Angeles studios on her first subject for Vitagraph.

Rotary Clubs Praise U. S. Film Work

In annual convention at Kansas City, Mo., the International Association of Rotary Clubs last week passed a resolution endorsing the work of the Committee on Public Information which has been done through the Decision of Films. Wallace Munro, special representative of the latter body, addressed the convention explaining in detail the work of the film department and illustrated his remarks by showing the latest Official War Review.

Miss Scott Re-engaged

Mabel Julienne Scott, who has completed "Ashes of Love," a Graphic feature made under the direction of Ivan Abramson, has been re-engaged to star in another production beginning about August 12.

Miss Scott came to pictures from vaudeville.

Funkhouser Loses His Censor Job

Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, who was suspended recently as Second Deputy Superintendent of Police of Chicago, has been relieved permanently of the responsibilities attached to that office, as well as the duties pertaining to the film censoring of the Windy City.

A wire to Motion Picture News from Chicago, August 1, advises that Major Funkhouser was found guilty on the charge made recently by Acting Chief of Police Alcock that for some time the Department had been unable to get co-operation from the major and his aides. Following this charge Funkhouser was suspended pending trial, which resulted in his conviction and permanent discharge from the position. Major Funkhouser's aides, also tried on the same charge, were convicted and ousted.

It is said that the discharged officials plan mandamus proceedings to regain their places on the payroll.

Chicago House Books Haworth Films

The Ziegfeld theatre on Michigan avenue, Chicago, has signed a contract with the Haworth Pictures Corporation for the entire series of eight Hayagawa productions, the first of which, "His Birthright," will be released, according to present plans, September 1.

Negotiations for the presentation of the Hayakawa pictures in Chicago were conducted between Sam E. Rork, general representative of the Haworth Company, and C. E. Elliott, managing director of the Ziegfeld and were closed only after Mr. Elliott had personally previewed "His Birthright." He pronounced it one of the strongest pictures he had ever viewed.

"The Ziegfeld booking confirms," said Mr. Rork, "our claim of highest excellence for the Haworth productions. Mr. Elliott is a critical and a highly successful exhibitor. The location of his house necessarily requires the finest kind of judgment in the selection of his pictures. He can cater to no special class. His audiences are cosmopolitan if any picture audiences are."

Bluebird Reopens Coytesville Studio

After a period of several months' inactivity, the Bluebird organization has opened its studio at Coytesville again. The occupant is Violet Mersereau, who has contributed some of the most popular photoplays turned out in the past two years by that company.

Miss Mersereau started work at the studio one week after her return from the ball at Boston, having purchased a variagated wardrobe which she will require in this Bluebird Photoplay, which is being made under the provisional title of "Together."

O. A. C. Lund has been engaged to direct Miss Mersereau, and will have entire charge not only of the production, but of the studio as well. He has chosen a story written by R. Wolheim, which was published as a magazine story under the title of "The Lone Dit." Anticipating that very few people would know what a "dit" was, he decided to call the story "Together." Incidentally it may be explained that a dit is a crook, and that Miss Mersereau in the new production will play a dual role, that of a young society woman and her twin brother who has not followed the straight and narrow path. Mr. Lund has already engaged Chester Barnett and Barney Randall to support Miss Mersereau.

Montgomery Manages Chicago General

G. N. Montgomery has just assumed the management of the Chicago exchange of the General Film Company, succeeding W. R. Scates. Mr. Montgomery started in the business with the Mutual at Indianapolis and then went to World Film as exchange manager and then became special representative, opening exchanges at various points. Later he went to Detroit as manager for Metro, occupying that post when he received the new appointment from General.

A. S. Bailey, formerly Goldwyn manager at Denver, has been appointed manager of the Omaha branch of General to fill the vacancy occasioned by F. H. Martin, acting manager, going into the army.

Industry Behind Fourth Loan

National Association Committee Lines Up Producing Organizations—Pictures Will Help Good Work Along

THE Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department in the publicity campaign in furtherance of the Fourth Liberty Loan, is making rapid progress in its preliminary work of lining up the various producing organizations to assist Uncle Sam in the big task of putting the next loan over the top.

Further specific information as to the desires of the Treasury Department in the matter of the subject and character of the pictures to be made is contained in the following letter to Chairman Adolph Zukor from Frank Wilson, Director of Publicity of the War Loan Organization:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington.
July 25, 1918.

Mr. Adolph Zukor,
Famous Players-Lasky Corp.,
485 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City.

Dear Mr. Zukor: Since our conference about the films for Fourth Liberty Loan I have been considering what I believe to be the second important feature of the work of the Film Division. The most important, of course, is to enlist the patriotic effort of the different stars who have already responded in a most gratifying manner. The second most important is the type of story in which they will appear.

On account of the great diversity of opportunity offered in motion pictures, it is difficult to lay down set and fast rules, but I think that if you would, as chairman of the committee, advise the players and their producing organizations of the national spirit which we are inculcating in connection with the Fourth Liberty Loan it would go far to lead the scenario writers to a type of story which would coincide and co-ordinate with the national campaign, which will be conducted in the newspapers and on the billboards throughout the country.

We think that behind everything in connection with the Fourth Liberty Loan there should be an atmosphere of solemnity—the realization that America is in a terrible fight, which will entail tremendous sacrifices on our part, and that we must sacrifice still more. Secondly, we must emphasize the cool, emphatic determination of America to fight this war to a finish. Third, naturally we must hate Germany, but the idea here is not to picture or to encourage rage, because rage consumes rather than strengthens. Fourth, we must make financial sacrifices and save money and put this money into bonds. Fifth, it is necessary to show some atrocity stuff, but it is better not to emphasize the horrible too much.

There is no ban on humor as long as it is humor that reflects a realization of the terrible conditions on the other side.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) FRANK R. WILSON,
Director of Publicity.

With the approval of the committee, the following letter was sent direct to the stars whose assistance is desired by Publicity Director Wilson:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C.

Dear ———: Recently we wrote to you soliciting your patriotic co-operation in connection with the Fourth Liberty Loan.

The Treasury Department, in co-operation with the Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with it, the members of which are Messrs. Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Walter W. Irwin, George K. Spoor and J. F. Brulatour, has worked out a plan of distributing broadcast a number of prints of subjects produced by yourself and a few other popular artists.

The Committee of the National Association has patriotically undertaken to attend to the detail of this campaign, and if there is anything in connection with the production of the film that is not clear in your mind will you kindly communicate with the committee, addressing Mr. Adolph Zukor, chairman, 485 Fifth avenue, New York City.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) FRANK R. WILSON,
Director of Publicity.

Following is a copy of the first letter sent by Chairman Zukor to the producing organizations soliciting their co-operation:

Re-Fourth Liberty Loan.

Gentlemen: The Treasury Department of the United States has asked the Committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, appointed to co-operate with the Treasury Department, of which I have the honor to be chairman, for short star features not more than three hundred feet in length, which several of the stars of your company are requested to make for the Fourth Liberty Loan.

The stars to whom letters have been sent by the Treasury Department are *****

It will be necessary for the companies to assume the responsibility of the production of these short features and the delivery of the completed negative and one sample print to the Treasury Department on or before August 25.

Will you kindly acquaint me with your desires in this matter, which has been placed entirely in the hands of the committee?

Suggestions for the type of picture the Treasury Department desires will be forwarded immediately upon acknowledgment of this communication.

Sincerely yours,
(Signed) ADOLPH ZUKOR,
Chairman of Committee.

Committee: Adolph Zukor
Marcus Loew
Walter W. Irwin
George K. Spoor
J. E. Brulatour

Chairman Zukor reports that the acknowledgment of the above letter and the promise of the fullest co-operation from practically every producing company was instantaneous, and that in many cases the machinery of their organizations has already been set in motion to carry out the wishes of the committee in every detail.

NO SLACKERS

Alcazar at Tampa, Fla., Is Strong for Uncle Sam

WITH its entire male force enlisted in the government service, the Alcazar Theatre of Tampa, Florida, is still "a-running."

The chief operator and his assistant decided they wanted to go "over the top" for their country, and so both enlisted in the army. That cleaned out the operating department.

Not to be outdone by those upstairs, the entire force on the main floor, two doormen and two ushers, offered their services to the navy, and were accepted.

With operators as scarce as hens' teeth in Tampa, Manager Kane immediately assumed command of the projecting department, and will have to hold it down until he can break in a new force.

Girls have replaced the men on the main floor, and everything is running as smooth as a top.

Mr. Kane is a veteran of the Spanish-American War and is with "the boys" in every way. He tendered them a big banquet and is as proud as a peacock of his Service Flag.

Fight Is On for Sunday Pictures

Committee for National Association Believes Necessity for Recreation in War Time Will Encourage Liberal Action—Aid in Ohio Campaign

BELIEVING that the war has created a necessity for amusement for the workers on Sunday and that it has changed conditions, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry is going to start a fight for the showing of pictures on the Sabbath throughout the country.

The matter was brought to a climax by a request for assistance from members of the Ohio exhibitors who are about to launch a fight in that State. The question was fully discussed by the Sunday Opening Committee at a meeting held in the offices of Chairman Adolph Zukor. Other members of the committee are President William A. Brady, ex-officio, Walter W. Irwin, Leo A. Ochs and P. A. Powers.

Peter J. Schaeffer, just elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and first vice-president of the National Association, was requested to attend the meeting of Ohio exhibitors in Columbus and to report the action with recommendation to the Sunday Opening Committee here.

It was stated at the meeting that George B. LaBarre, Director of Public Safety, Trenton, N. J., has recommended to the city commissioners that the motion picture theatres should be allowed to be open on Sunday. He emphasized the need of recreation for the workingman penned up in work of industries every day for many hours and women who are bound by domestic duties in their homes from morning until night. He declared that innocent amusement like the motion picture would do much toward improving the condition of the people in the locality.

Sunday motion picture exhibitions are now legal in the State of Pennsylvania if properly licensed under the laws of the governing municipalities, according to a decision which has just been handed down by Judge J. A. McLaughry at Mercer, Pa. It was held that the municipalities are self-governing and that the operation of the motion picture theatres, when properly licensed, comes properly within the scope of the local governing body's powers. The court stated that the matter is outside the power of the court to interfere. The decision in the Pennsylvania case supports the contention of the motion picture interests in New York State, which endeavored to secure the passage of a bill during the last session of the Legislature at Albany providing for local option as regards the opening of the theatres on Sunday. This bill was passed by the Assembly, but was held up in the Senate.

The Sunday Opening Committee is preparing to make a survey of the situation existing in the various states and plan to render co-operation wherever possible in the hope of securing legislation where necessary.

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton is the justly proud wearer of a single service pin, while the same emblem in a flag conveys its message from the window of his limousine. The star is for his elder son, J. Stuart Blackton, Jr., who at the age of twenty is now doing his bit "over there" as a corporal in Battery E, Fifty-ninth Artillery Corps, American Expeditionary Forces.

World Pictures has already found it necessary to make additions to the huge service flag which was recently unfurled at the home office in New York City. When this flag was hung out a few weeks ago it had seventy-seven stars. Since then two wore World employes have joined Uncle Sam's service and their stars have been placed on the flag. These men are Jacob Strather, porter at the home office, and Louis Amacher, an employe of the Seattle office.

Darryll Forbes, Metro film cutter, West Coast studios, has gone to Camp Kearny for training.

George Mehan and Marshall Deitz, auditor, Sunshine Comedies Company, will enter the service July 31.

Harry M. Rubey, aged fifty-two, president of the National Film Corporation, has enlisted and been given a commission by the War Department at Washington, and September 1 will leave for duty as instructor of cavalry.

Irving Lesser, for two years manager of the Los Angeles branch of the All-Star Features Distributors' Exchange, has enlisted in the navy as yeoman, and will do newspaper and screen publicity work for the Traveling Enrolling Party under command of Ensign Harvey Miller. He will be stationed in Los Angeles.

Jack Blackwell, scenic artist for the G. M. Anderson Golden West Photoplay Company, last week went into training at the Balloon School at Arcadia, Cal.

D. L. Cornelius, formerly publicity director of the Saenger Amusement Company, New Orleans, La., and who also managed the Strand theatre there, is now serving the colors.

Special Western Representative W. H. Cree, who has been in charge of West Coast and Intermountain States exchanges of the General Film Company, has tendered his resignation, to become effective July 22, and has enlisted in the navy.
